Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That we indorse woman's suffrage, following the platforms of the political parties of this State, and favor that the Senate of the United States adopt the legislation now pending before it providing for submitting to the several States an amendment to the Federal Constitution establishing national woman's suffrage; be it further

Resolved, That this resolution, properly signed and attested by the officers of this legislature be forwarded to the United States Senate, and a copy thereof to each United States Senator.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

Received January 30, 1919, 4.15 p. m.

MERLIN HULL, Secretary of State.

Mr. STERLING. I have here a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Dakota, which relates to the interference of the Railroad Administration with express rates on shipments wholly within the State. It is of such interest and importance that I ask it may be read and then referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

Certificate.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

I, C. A. Burkhart, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the annexed concurrent resolution was duly passed by the sixteenth session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota, at the city of Pierre, January 31, 1919.

[SEAL.]

C. A. BURKHART,
Secretary of State.

Hon. C. A. BURKHART,
Secretary of State:

The following concurrent resolution has been adopted by the senate and concurred in by the house of representatives:

Concurrent resolution.

"Whereas the Government of the United States, as a war emergency measure, took over the control of several great public-service corporations, including the railroads and express companies of our country, and placed them in charge of a Director General of Railroads; and

"Whereas our Government did at the same time urge upon our people the great necessity of saving and conserving in private and business affairs, and asked our people, even the widows and orphans, to save their mite to buy liberty bonds and war-savings stamps for the support of the Government and its different departments in its conduct of the war, including the railroads and express companies; and

"Whereas our people have generously responded to every request made; and

"Whereas it has now come to the attention of our people that three paid representatives of one of the said great public-service corporations have come to the city of Pierre in a luxuriously equipped private car, at a great and unnecessary expense, for the express purpose of opposing in our courts the action of our board of railroad commissioners, wherein they are representing the interests of our people in seeking to prevent what appears to be an unwarranted, unlawful, and unjust raise in express rates, which are sought to be put into effect under the guise of Government control and with the apparent approval of the Director General of Railroads: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That we do condemn such unwarranted extravagance as unpatriotic, disloyal, and undemocratic, and that we do hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact such laws as will effectually and permanently protect the American people from unfair and extortionate rates, whether imposed upon them by private corporations owning and operating such public utilities or under Government management and control of the same, thereby rendering to the people that reasonable and efficient service to which they are rightfully entitled, free alike from unreasonable governmental control or from corporate or individual oppression."

For the senate:

C. S. AMSDEN,
President of the Senate.
A. B. BLAKE,
Secretary.

For the house:

LEWIS BENSON,
Speaker.
WRIGHT TARBELL,
Chief Clerk.

Dated at Pierre, S. Dak., this 28th day of January, A. D. 1919.

Mr. MOSES. I present a resolution adopted by the New Hampshire Association of Insurance Agents, protesting against further Government activity on behalf of farm fire insurance. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by the New Hampshire Association of Insurance Agents at their nineteenth annual meeting at Concord, N. H., January 20, 1919.

Whereas new evidences of paternalistic government are appearing in this country, with a steady encroachment upon the fields of private enterprises, and tangible obstructions to individual freedom and personal initiative are threatened; and

Whereas examples are contained in the second annual report of the Federal land banks urging the extension of their activities to farm fire insurance; and

Whereas the circulation of a textbook, entitled "Lessons in Community and Private Life," for introduction into the public schools, through the Secretary of the Interior, propagating social insurance and Government control of private activities, has aroused the protest of business interests; and

Whereas there has been a recent attempt to place workmen's compensation and liability coverage on shipbuilding plants along the Atlantic coast in the hands of a profit-sharing concern, utterly ignoring the agents in those States whose countersignatures would have been required; and

Whereas the prediction that bills will be introduced in every State legislature providing for monopolistic State workmen's compensation funds has been made; and

Whereas it has been proposed to extend Government life insurance to the entire civil list: Be it

Resolved, That we, the New Hampshire Association of Insurance Agents, assembled in annual meeting at Concord, N. H., January 20, 1919, earnestly protest against these paternalistic tendencies and vigorously urge local fire, casualty, surety, and life insurance agents everywhere to inform themselves of these propositions and activities calculated to undermine the foundations of our Government and throw into chaos long-established institutions, to the end that we may be able successfully to combat all Bolsheviki tenets and socialistic propaganda and make the United States safe for insurance democracy.

LOUIS G. MERRILL,
President.

Mr. MOSES. I also present a resolution of the New Hampshire Manufacturers' Association, protesting against further activity by the United States Employment Service, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas Congress, under stress of war, created the United States Employment Service, the purpose of which was to give a specific directive power to Federal Government which would facilitate Congress to remedy those industrial and labor conditions in the United States while at war, and whereas the Department of Labor has or is about to ask Congress for an appropriation of nearly $15,000,000 to continue this employment service for the next 12 months: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the New Hampshire Manufacturers' Association, in convention assembled, are opposed to the continuation of this employment service as being unnecessary, as the cause for which it was created has ceased to exist, and the continuation of this power is inimical to the public good.

Mr. LENROOT. I send to the desk a certified copy of a resolution of the Common Council of the city of Milwaukee, Wis., relating to the pay of soldiers and sailors for a certain period after their discharge, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution indorsing movement to pay soldiers and sailors their salaries for certain period after their discharge.

Whereas the United States Government is now demobilizing the Army and Navy as rapidly as possible; and

Whereas many soldiers and sailors will hereafter from time to time be released from further duty to the Government and, until conditions again become normal, will be out of funds and work for sometime to come; and

Whereas a movement is on foot to pay soldiers and sailors their salaries for a certain period after their discharge: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Common Council of the city of Milwaukee, That it heartily indorses the movement to pay soldiers and sailors their salaries for a certain period after their discharge from further duties to their country, and hereby petitions the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation to the end that all soldiers and sailors released from further duty will receive three months' additional pay from the date of their discharge.

OFFICE OF THE CITY CLERK,
Milwaukee, February 1, 1919.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a copy of a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the city of Milwaukee on January 27, 1919.

[SEAL.] P. F. LEUCH, City Clerk.

Mr. LENROOT. I also present a certified copy of a resolution of the common council of the city of Milwaukee, Wis., to eliminate unemployment. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution petitioning Congress to eliminate unemployment.

Whereas due to the closing down of the war industries, together with demobilization of the Army, there now exists a serious condition of unemployment which is growing worse from day to day; and

Whereas the working class of the United States was led to believe that after the close of this war the conditions of the workers would be materially improved: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the mayor and the common council of the city of Milwaukee do hereby petition and urge Congress to enact such legislation as will eliminate unemployment—

First. By compulsory reduction of the hours of labor for all classes of workers and the fixing of minimum wage scales; and

Second. By inaugurating a system of public work, such as construction of a modern system of transportation, utilization of the water power of our country, irrigation of arid lands, reforestation, clearing and breaking of land for agricultural purposes, etc.; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to His Excellency the President of the United States, to the House of Representatives, and to the Senate of the United States.

OFFICE OF THE CITY CLERK,
Milwaukee, February 1, 1919.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a copy of a resolution adopted by the common council of the city of Milwaukee on January 27, 1919.

[SEAL.] P. F. LEUCH, City Clerk.

Mr. NUGENT. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which I ask to have read.

The memorial was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

STATE OF IDAHO,

I, Robert O. Jones, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of senate joint memorial No. 4, which was filed in this office on the 30th day of January, A. D. 1919, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 30th day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and nineteen and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-third.

[SEAL.] ROBERT O. JONES,

[Legislature of the State of Idaho, fifteenth session. In the senate. Senate joint memorial No. 4; substitute for joint memorial No. 2.]

To the honorable Senate of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the State of Idaho has for approximately a quarter of a century permitted the exercise of the voting franchise by the women of this State and accorded to them equal political rights; and

Whereas woman's suffrage in this State has been conducive to good government, has purified our politics, made better homes, and the influence of Idaho's women exerted at the polls has been for the best interests of the State: Be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the State of Idaho, the House of Representatives concurring therein, do hereby memorialize the Senate of the United States and respectfully urge that it adopt and pass House joint resolution No. 200, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women; and be it

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Idaho be, and is hereby, requested to forward a copy of this memorial to the Senate of the United States and copies thereof to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

This joint memorial passed the senate on the 22d day of January, 1919.

C. C. MOORE,
President of the Senate.

This joint memorial passed the house of representatives on the 23d day of January, 1919.

M. A. KIGER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that the within senate joint memorial No. 4 originated in the senate during the fifteenth session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

PAUL DAVIS,
Secretary of the Senate.

Indorsed: Received and filed January 30, 1919.

ROBERT O. JONES,
Secretary of State.

Mr. LODGE presented a resolution adopted by the Joint Committee of the Churches and Synagogues of the State of Massachusetts favoring a league of nations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented petitions of the Rotary Club of Fairmont; of the Berea & Slab Telephone Co., of Harrisville; of the Board of Trade of Pennsboro; and of the Business Men's Association of Grafton, all in the State of West Virginia, praying that the return to private ownership of telephone and telegraph lines be deferred until Congress shall have studied the question and determined upon a proper and safe procedure to be thereafter followed, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of the Montana Grain Growers, of Great Falls, Mont., praying that a graduated minimum price to be paid for wheat be substituted in lieu of the flat minimum price now established, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PRESIDENT MURLIN'S LETTER ON H. F. WARD.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, among the names reported by the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee which is investigating the general subject of German propaganda was included that of Prof. H. F. Ward as from Boston University. There is some reproach connected with such a publication upon institutions which have been loyal in a high degree. Prof. Ward is not connected with the Boston University, but is connected with the Union Theological Seminary, New York. I have a letter from President Murlin, of Boston University, stating that fact. It is very short, and I should like to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNIVERSITAS BOSTONIENSIS,
Boston, February 3, 1919.

Senator JOHN W. WEEKS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WEEKS: In the list of names reported by the Senate committee investigating the German propaganda is included that of Prof. Harry F. Ward as from Boston University. Prof. Ward resigned his position in Boston University last May and is now connected with Union Theological Seminary, New York. I trust you will see to it that your records are made according to these facts. I told a representative from the local bureau of investigation here in Boston all about this some 90 days ago, but for some reason they still have his name down as from Boston University, which, of course, is not correct.

Faithfully, yours,

L. H. MURLIN, President.

LETTER FROM MRS. IDA MAE WATERS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have a short letter from Mrs. Ida Mae Waters who, in the Washington Post, figured somewhat conspicuously at the recent meeting at the Poli Theater which has been the subject of some discussion here. She protests against the construction placed upon that meeting and asks that the letter which she writes me upon the subject may be incorporated in the RECORD. I make that request. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD. It need not be read.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., February 4, 1919.

"Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS.

"MY DEAR SIR: The paper reports you as denouncing a meeting held at Poli's Theater on Sunday afternoon. It may or may not be true. If the report is untrue I crave pardon for bothering you. If true, I feel it my duty to give you a little information, as my name was mentioned in the article.

"First, about two weeks ago I personally interviewed a number of Senators and Representatives of both parties and told them about the meeting which I helped to arrange. There was no secret about it. Leading men in both Houses knew of it. And on Friday last I personally brought to the Capitol cards and circulars announcing the meeting and gave them to Senators and Representatives and requested them to tell others. Also left some to be given to others.

"I did that because I wanted to have the American people know that our representatives were not opposed to the truth being known. Also that Congress might have an opportunity to get some things straight from persons who have been close to the people of Russia.

"Mr. Williams did not advocate Soviet government for America. He has been grossly misrepresented.

"I beg of you to call Mr. Williams before the Senate and know what he did say. It seems strange that persons so misrepresented as you Senators have been at times would be so willing to believe everything you read. Why did you not come and know the truth? Kings, queens, kaisers, and czars have ruled by divine right (so claimed) and naturally have drawn away from the people, but Congressmen who serve by the will of the people would do well to know the people and not depend upon newspapers for all of their information, since it is but a short time before they sink back into the mass. I ask that you make this letter as public as you did your condemnation.

"And know that I am an American of several generations of English and Scotch ancestry.

"'America first' is my slogan.

"Respectfully, IDA MAE WATERS."

RUSSIAN APPEAL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present certain resolutions adopted by the Russians of New York City, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the supreme council of the peace conference in Paris has practically decided to enter into negotiations with the Bolshevist officials in Russia;

Whereas the supreme council has decided to meet the Bolshevist delegates as well as the delegates of the Russian loyal factions opposed to the Bolsheviki on the Princes Islands on the 15th of February, 1919:

Whereas in the opinion of the loyal Russian organizations the Bolsheviki, in signing a separate peace with the central powers at Brest-Litovsk, have committed an act of high treason toward Russia, as well as toward the allied cause in general;

Whereas, further, it has been proved that the Russian Soviet officials were on the pay roll of the Imperial German Government;

Whereas during the Bolshevist rule in Russia unspeakable terror has been going on, and thousands and thousands of innocent men, women, and children have been murdered by the Bolsheviki without any trial, and taking into consideration that the Soviet terror was condemned by President Wilson on the 21st of September, 1918, in his address to all the neutral governments;

Whereas the Bolsheviki have abolished all the fundamental principles of liberty and civilization in Russia;

Whereas the Bolshevist rule has proved to be the greatest and most irreparable misfortune in Russia's history;

Whereas it is contrary to the national dignity of the peoples of Russia to meet the allied representatives somewhere in the back yard of Europe;

Whereas the very idea of a joint meeting at which representatives of Trotzky on the one hand and the loyal Russians on the other would meet constitutes an offense to loyal and honest Russia:

Resolved, To appeal to public opinion of the United States and the allied nations and to emphasize:

(a) That the loyal Russian organizations in the United States believe that the above decision of the supreme council at the peace conference in Paris is a fatal and historical error which might affect in a most harmful manner the civilization of the whole world;

(b) That the above decision of the allied Governments is apt to strengthen the Bolshevist cause at the very moment when Trotzky's régime is on the verge of a complete collapse;

(c) That, notwithstanding the decision of the supreme council, the loyal Russian organizations feel their duty and will continue their fight against the Russian Bolshevist traitors; and

(d) Finally, that we are deeply convinced that the loyal Russian delegates should meet the allied representatives either in Paris or nowhere.

Executive Board of the General Committee of Russian National Defense (comprising 39 Russian organizations, societies, political groups, and professional unions, 5 Karpatho-Russian organizations, and the Consistory of the Greek Orthodox Church, with 250 branches in the United States and Canada), chairman, A. D. Semenoffsky; vice chairman, Lieut. Boris Brasol; members, Lieut. Commander P. E. Stogoff, Col. N. N. Koch, Rev. L. Tourkevich, Rev. P. Popoff; representatives of the Karpatho-Russians, Gataliak and Cherniak; secretaries, Capt. N. Vishnevsky, V. Shumsky. Voluntary Association of the Russian Army and Navy Officers in the United States, president, Col. I. Sidorkin. Union of Russian Engineers, president, Count S. Shullenberg; secretary, Engineer Osolin.

NEW YORK CITY, January 23, 1919.

PEACE POLICIES.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, in connection with some observations which I made in the Senate on Monday last, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from the New York Times, dated February 2, by Charles Selden.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HUGHES DEMANDS MANDATE NOW—PREMIER SAYS AUSTRALIA WILL NOT AWAIT FUTURE LEAGUE'S ALLOCATION OF COLONIES—CAUSTIC IN INTERVIEW—COMPARES LOSSES OF COLONY IN WAR WITH AMERICA'S—ECHOES WORLD'S VOICE, SAYS LAUSANNE.

[By Charles Selden.]

PARIS, February 2.

Although France, in common with the other big powers, accepts provisionally the Wilson mandatory principle as to the German colonies, she does not like it. The conditions under which she indorses it are so vague that the door is left wide open for her to repudiate it if she does not approve its concrete application. But in the French press, which speaks the wishes of Clemenceau and Pichon rather than the avowed utterances of those statesmen themselves, this real attitude is indicated.

For example, several Paris papers make a hero and a martyr out of Premier Hughes, of Australia, because of his stubborn fight against the Wilson mandatory principle as applied to New Guinea. Le Matin this morning had a long article by Stephan Lausanne on the Hughes fight, the printing of which is significant as a protest against the American attitude on this phase of the peacemaking.

"He has begun an ardent, tenacious fight on the question of the German colonies in the Pacific," writes Lausanne of Hughes. "He is of those who demand the immediate liquidation and attribution of these colonies. He is not at all sure he has lost his fight. He certainly does not admit himself beaten."

Lausanne then quotes Hughes as follows:

"We have no objection in Australia to the mandate principle, but let the mandate define immediately what it gives and requires. You offer to rent a house and ask the price and responsibilities, whereupon you are told that will be determined by a council to convene one, two, or three years hence. So, until then, you can know nothing of what you pay to the rules regulating you.

"That is no solution of this German colony problem. I will not subscribe to it. We have already at the Quai d'Orsay a league of nations capable of deciding these questions.

"We have had more losses than America with her 100,000,000 people. When we have been asked to sacrifice ourselves in battle we did not demand the organization of an international tribune to decide the battle. But now, after our people have paid with their lives to save the world, without hesitation, argument, or chicanery, we find a new form of procedure for reimbursing damages.

"It is something slow and vague. We are told it is not now the fate of the world that is to be decided. That is to come later.

"We will not await a league of nations that is to be born nobody knows when, where, or how.

"It is often said that those far away on the other side of the world did not appreciate immediately the grandeur of the course for which we began fighting in 1914. Australia is far away, but she understood immediately and sacrificed herself from the start. It was not at the eleventh hour that we came to the defense of civilization. We armed a tenth part of our male population of 5,000,000.

"The arbiters, I know not who, are convening I know not where, coming I know not whence."

In his own comment on this statement from Hughes, Lausanne calls it an echo of the voice of the world.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13056) to grant to citizens of Modoc County, Cal., the right to cut timber in the State of Nevada for agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, and to remove such timber to Modoc County, Cal., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 684) thereon.

Mr. HARDWICK, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13277) making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 683) thereon.

DISTRICT JUDGE FOR TEXAS.

Mr. CULBERSON. From the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 5342) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the northern judicial district of the State of Texas, and I submit a report (No. 682) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint an additional judge of the district court of the United States for the northern judicial district of the State of Texas, who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation and allowance as the present judge of said district.

SEC. 2. That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of the district judge for the northern district of Texas, senior in commission, such vacancy shall not be filled, and thereafter there shall be but one district judge in said district.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for the third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MCNARY submitted an amendment proposing to investigate the claim of Charles S. Hood, a Modoc Indian, for services in securing the restoration and enrollment of the Modoc Indians of Oklahoma as members of the Klamath Tribe of Indians of the State of Oregon, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLY OF POTASH.

Mr. FLETCHER. I submit the following resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 440), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate as promptly as possible the following information:

1. The amount of potash consumption in the United States prior to 1914, the answer to specify the amounts used of the three grades, to wit, sulphate, muriate, and kainit.

2. The amount of the production of potash in the United States in 1918, the answer to indicate the amount of sulphate and muriate, respectively.

3. The amount of potash now on hand, and the ruling price per unit, and a comparison with the antebellum price.

4. The amount and kind of potash consumed in the tobacco industry prior to 1914, and since.

5. The amount and kind of potash consumed in the citrus industry prior to 1914, and since.

6. The amount and kind of potash consumed in the orchard business prior to 1914, and since.

7. The possible production of potash in the United States, cost, and kind.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, this is a serious situation. For four years or more our agricultural interests, and especially the fruit growing and the tobacco interests, have suffered for the lack of potash. It is one of the necessary elements of plant food, and I think we ought to inquire into the situation and have the inquiry cover the ground mentioned.

My understanding is that the annual consumption of potash in the United States prior to the war was, in tons, 250,000. This was a German article marketed in the form of muriate or sulphate of potash, running 48 per cent or higher and commanding about $50 per ton, containing 48 per cent of potash. There was also a very low grade of potash goods known as kainit, which sold at a much lower price.

The entire production of potash in the United States during 1918 was, I am informed, about 60,000 tons, and containing a much lower percentage of potash than the German muriate and sulphate of potash goods; that the domestic article contains 22 per cent as against 48 per cent or more for the German muriate and sulphate. This domestic article was obtained from the salt lakes of Nebraska, from kelp weed and alunite rock, from skimmings of beet sugar, and from the deposits in the stacks of cement factories and blast furnaces.

Probably the greatest proportion of the domestic article is what is known as muriate of potash. Domestic sulphate of potash is obtained from the alunite rock of Utah and the furnace stacks of the Riverside Portland Cement Works in California. These two products are reported to be free from chloride and carbonite.

At the present time there are 30,000 tons of potash of all kinds stored at eastern points and containing 22 per cent of potash. This supply is held at about $93.50 per ton, or at considerably more than 300 per cent than the German article brought before the war, having regard to the proportion of potash in each article. It is reported that there is no sale for this supply, due to the expectation that foreign sources will soon be available.

Chairman Hurley is credited with the intention of obtaining an immediate supply of potash from the Alsatian deposits now under French control. Mr. Hurley's announced intention was to ballast the transports with this article and thus make use of a cheap and quick means of transport. The French commission, however, has just announced that the needs of the French people must be first taken care of, and no potash would be available from that source until June, 1919.

The American press recently reported an offer from Germany to trade potash for food, and also that the offer had been refused on the ground that there was a sufficient supply in the United States. The blockade and the trading-with-the-enemy act would prevent the consummation of such a transaction, unless a convention could be arranged between the allies.

Would such a convention be justified by the need of potash to produce the food that the world stands in need of? For four years a scanty supply of potash has been doled out to the American consumers and the lands are generally lacking in this necessary element. The Florida growers ordinarily used a fertilizer containing 8 per cent of potash. Since the war many citrus growers have used no potash on account of high prices, and it has been practically impossible to obtain an article containing more than about 3 per cent, as the domestic supply of less than 25 per cent of the ante bellum consumption had to be parceled out.

Citrus growers customarily and probably invariably used sulphate of potash before 1914, and avoided the use of muriate as injurious. The same was true of tobacco growers. While there might be some doubt as to whether muriate of potash is injurious to citrus trees, although the almost invariable practice of the growers confirms the idea, there appears to be no doubt that sulphate of potash is the only form adapted to tobacco culture. It is said the chloride contained in muriate of potash burns the tobacco. It would seem that if muriate of potash is hurtful to citrus trees, it would be equally injurious to all kinds of fruit trees.

I have no exact information as to what part of the domestic production is sulphate of potash, though much the greater part of the annual production of 60,000 tons is probably muriate, since the only sulphate of potash is produced from the alunite rock of Arizona and the cement works of Riverside, Cal., both of which points are remote from the eastern coast.

It is claimed that the potash obtained from the salt lakes of Nebraska is free of chloride and can be used for any purpose that straight sulphate goods can be employed, and this may be true. This product does contain carbonite, which is absent from the sulphate goods.

Inquiry would probably show that the production of sulphate of potash in the United States is entirely insufficient to supply the tobacco growers alone.

I ask that the resolution be adopted in order that this inquiry may be made by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

MEDALS AWARDED COLORADO SOLDIERS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the headlines of an article in the New York Times, relating to our boys who were on the firing line in France. It says:

Forty-one of our heroes get highest honors—Congressional medals awarded by Pershing to 8 officers and 33 enlisted men—Many in the list are dead—Numerous instances of machine-gun nests being attacked in Argonne fighting.

Mr. President, I want to direct attention to the fact that out of the 41 who have been honored with this highest medal that can be awarded in the war four of the boys were from Colorado. I will give the names and the rank of these boys.

Capt. Marcellus H. Chiles (deceased), Denver, Three hundred and sixty-fifth Infantry, who led the battalion he commanded forward against a machine-gun cross fire, wading waist deep across a stream to reach the enemy and crawling on his hands to follow. He died of his wounds, and he was 23 years old.

Second Lieut. J. Hunter Wickersham, 3416 Colfax Avenue, Denver, Three hundred and fifty-third Infantry, ordered and led an advance of his platoon after his right arm had been crippled by shell fragments, and continued firing his revolver with his left hand until he fell from loss of blood. He died before aid could reach him.

Sergt. Harold I. Johnston, Denver, and Pvt. David R. Berkeley, San Antonio, Tex., Company A, Three hundred and fifty-sixth Infantry, for swimming the River Meuse to obtain information as to the enemy's position on the opposite side.

Pvts. Jesse N. Funk, Calhan, Colo., and Charles D. Garger, Stotts City, Mo., Company L, Three hundred and sixty-fifth Infantry, for rescuing wounded 500 yards in front of the American line, making two trips as stretcher bearers under machine-gun fire.

Mr. President, in bringing this record to the attention of the Senate my object is only to render deserved tribute to the gallantry and heroism of the boys from my own State. It is not that they excelled others in the qualities of virtue and courage, which have so gloriously won for our cause, but the heroic deeds of these lads, the sons of my neighbors and friends, naturally carry an especial appeal to me, and I am impelled to make public acknowledgment of the pride I feel over their accomplishments. It is perhaps only a circumstance—an unusual one, though—that of the 41 to receive the distinguished honor, 4 came from Colorado, a State of 1,000,000 population, or 1 per cent of the total of the Nation. Our pride is enhanced by the fact that our boys represented 10 per cent in the congressional-medal list.

I would add only that the fiery ardor of these boys, the spirit which sustained them as they cheerfully went to the supreme sacrifice for their country, was part of their education and their training. It was breathed to them in their homes, and it was taught to them in their schools. They carried with them the spirit of their State in the ultimate offering they gave to their country.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I think no one would care to detract in any way from the gallantry of the sons of Colorado, but the Senator should remember that this is only one of several lists to whom medals have been given for gallantry in action, and some of the lists may contain a preponderance of names of sons of other States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This is the only one that has been issued up to this time, as I understand it.

SHIP WORKERS' STRIKE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask that two articles which I have in my hand may be printed in the RECORD. We have had in our State a strike of shipyard workers for some time, and it is possible that that strike extended all over the State this morning.

I have here an interview given out by Mr. Piez, the director general of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, with reference to this controversy, and also a statement that he issued and had published as the Government's side of the controversy. I ask that both these may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. THOMAS. Where is the strike?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The strike is in the shipyards on the Pacific coast, especially the Northwest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SHIP WORKERS' STRIKE—FACTS THAT THE MEN MUST RECOGNIZE.

Is an agreement solemnly entered into between representatives of the Government and representatives of the shipyard workers a covenant that is binding on both sides—binding on every individual represented therein—or is it to be broken at will?

Do the men in the shipyards realize that the question of wages in the yards is not one between the shipyard workers and the yard owners but is between the shipyard workers and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, representing the Government of the United States?

Do the men in the yards realize that both the Government on one hand and the men on the other have, during the life of the shipbuilding labor adjustment agreement, the so-called Macy agreement, surrendered final decision on all matters of wages, hours, and conditions to the determination of three men—one representing the people of the United States and appointed by the President of the United States, one appointed by Samuel Gompers, representing the shipyard workers, and one appointed jointly by the Navy and the Emergency Fleet Corporation?

Do the men appreciate that this agreement was drawn up after the most careful consideration in August, 1917, which was amended after a week's conference in December, 1917, attended by Mr. Gompers, the international presidents and delegates from Seattle and San Francisco Metal Trades Council; that it was signed by representatives of the Navy, the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and on behalf of the men by the international presidents?

The present agreement is as perfect an instrument for adjudicating industrial differences as has yet been devised. It provides all of the machinery necessary. It is complete. There is no room for outside mediation. It is final and binding on both sides. In order to give either side redress the awards are made for relatively short periods only, so that an unfair decision can not be long continued.

The decisions and awards of the Macy board have resulted in wage increases that will cost the Government more than $300,000,000 on the shipbuilding program, yet the Government has unflinchingly accepted the burden which the board's decision has imposed on it.

In the present case the rates have been fixed by the Macy board, not only for the Pacific coast but for the Great Lakes, the Atlantic and Gulf yards as well. The appeal from the decision of the board to the board of appeal failed. The decision is final, because no other opportunity for reopening the case exists until after March 31, when the present award expires.

Are the men going to stick to their side of the bargain? That is the question at issue. And if they do not, is there any assurance that any agreement hereafter can be considered binding?

The Emergency Fleet Corporation considers itself bound by its agreement with labor to observe the existing award until its expiration. It can consent to no changes, no modifications, in one district without breaking faith with the men in all other districts. It must, therefore, insist that the award be carried out to its terminaion.

While the armistice ended hostilities, it did not end the shipbuilding labor adjustment agreement.

The shipyard workers of the Seattle district gave such an excellent account of themselves during the war and impressed me so strongly as sane, loyal, conscientious Americans that I appeal to their sense of fairness to go back to work and stick by the agreement until it expires on March 31. In the meantime a joint conference can determine what is to be done after that period.

A statement of the future plans of the Emergency Fleet Corporation will appear in this space to-morrow.

CHARLES PIEZ,
Director General United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.

PHILADELPHIA, February 2, 1919.

Statement No. 1. (Statement by Charles Piez, director general Emergency Fleet Corporation, published as an advertisement in the Pacific coast newspapers.) February 3, 1918.

[Interview sent out for Pacific coast papers for Sunday morning, Feb. 2, 1919.]

Charles Piez, director general of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, to-day authorized the following statement in regard to the strike of shipyard workers on the Pacific coast:

"The strike is a direct violation of a solemn contract entered into by the American Federation of Labor, representing the shipyard workers, the United States Navy, and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.

"The men involved in the strike should realize that the emergency of war is past and that the need of ships is not as great as while the war was in progress.

"The increasing cost of shipbuilding in America, influenced largely by the constantly increasing labor cost, threatens the very future of the industry in this country, unless the output is brought proportionately up to the elevated wage scale.

"It is inconceivable that American working men would deliberately jeopardize their own interests, the interests of their communities, and the interests of the Nation by breaking an agreement. I can not believe they understand the situation.

"The Emergency Fleet Corporation, as trustee of the money of the people of the United States, can not compromise a vital moral principle. It is bound by an agreement with the shipyard workers throughout the country which is irrevocable, except through modification by mutual consent.

"The Shipbuilding Labor Adjustment Board, popularly known as the Macy Board, is the tribunal before which the shipyard workers, the Navy Department, and the Emergency Fleet Corporation agreed to submit all questions involving wages, hours, and working conditions. In striking before the expiration of the Macy award, which fixed the rate of wages to be paid up to March 31, 1919, the men were guilty of a breach of agreement solemnly entered into by their international presidents, and by this action they have repudiated the verdict of the supreme tribunal they helped to create.

"The decisions of this tribunal have been and must continue to be binding upon the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the workers alike. So long as the workers remain away from their posts the Emergency Fleet Corporation can not treat with them.

"The original agreement, which was entered into in August, 1917, and which created the Macy Board, was a joint compact by the unions, the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and the Navy. It was amended in December, 1917, and in this final form was signed by Franklin D. Roosevelt, Acting Secretary of the Navy; Charles Piez, of the Emergency Fleet Corporation; William Blackman, of the Emergency Fleet Corporation; James O'Connell, president of the Metal Trades Department; John I. Noland, of the International Molders' Union of North America; J. R. Franklin, international president Boiler Makers, Iron Shipbuilders of America; James Wilson, president Pattern Makers' League of North America; Milton Snellings, general president International Union of Steam and Operating Engineers; W. C. Van Dornes, general vice president International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers; F. D. McNulty, by J. J. P., I. B. E. of W.; John J. Hynes, president Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers of America; and William H. Johnson, International Association of Machinists, per P. Flaherty.

"This agreement provided for the appointment of a board to adjust all differences; such board to consist of three persons, one to represent the public, to be appointed by the President of the United States; one to be appointed by Samuel Gompers, representing the American Federation of Labor; and one to be appointed jointly by the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the Navy.

"The President of the United States placed his influence behind the enterprise by appointing the chairman of the board.

"This agreement further provided that 'the decisions of the board will, in so far as this agreement may be capable of achieving such results, be final and binding upon all parties: Provided, however, That either the employers or employees may have the right to appeal from the decisions of the adjustment board to a board of review and appeal made up as follows: Three members to be named jointly by the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation and the United States Navy Department, and three to be named by the president of the American Federation of Labor.'

"The Shipbuilding Labor Adjustment Board as created consisted of Mr. Berres, appointed by Samuel Gompers, and Mr. V. Everett Macy, appointed by the President of the United States, and Mr. Louis A. Coolidge, appointed by the Navy and the Emergency Fleet Corporation. A decision and award was rendered effective February 1, 1918. Another decision and award was rendered effective August 1, 1918, which is the latest award under the agreement. The decision provided that the award of August 1 should remain effective until March 31, 1919.

"The first award was handed down by the Macy Board in November, 1917, for the Pacific coast, but aroused so much discontent that an appeal was taken directly to the executive officers of the Navy and the Emergency Fleet Corporation. This award, which was retroactive to August 1, 1917, fixed a wage of $5.25 for skilled crafts. A temporary increase was granted by the executive officers of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, amounting to 10 per cent, and making the rate for skilled crafts $5.77½ per day. This increase was ratified by the Macy Board on February 1, 1918. The rate for laborers and helpers was raised in greater proportion than that for skilled crafts.

"The Macy Board was appealed to on August 1, 1918, for a review of the wage rates, and at that time a rate of $8 per day was demanded for skilled crafts. The Macy Board found that the increases asked for were not justified by the advances in the cost of living and a new set of rates was awarded, granting the skilled crafts $6.40 a day. Intermediate positions were granted a proportionate increase. An appeal was taken from the Macy Board's decision to the board of review and appeal. This board, after a hearing extending over 11 days, disagreed and dissolved without decision.

"It was the intent of those framing the Macy agreement that the appeal board should be evenly divided, because a decision overruling the Macy Board's decision should be granted only when there was most convincing evidence of the errors of its decision. Inasmuch as the men failed to have their appeal sustained, the Macy decision, as effective August 1, 1918, and expiring March 31, 1919, stands.

"The question that now arises is whether by reason of strength and perfection of organization the men in one district can dictate wages that are materially higher than those that the increased cost of living would justify. Justification for such action does not exist in the agreement and could not be taken account of by the Macy Board.

"The ship workers nobly acquitted themselves of their obligations during the war by adhering to the decisions of the board. It is only right that they should continue to adhere to their obligations until the agreement expires on April 1, two months hence.

"The Emergency Fleet Corporation can not deal with the men until they have gone back to work and until they have applied for a modification or amendment of the shipbuilders' labor adjustment (Macy) agreement through the regular channels established by the agreement."

CHARLES PIEZ.

WYOMING NATIONAL FOREST.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1847) to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Wyoming National Forest, which was, on page 1, line 6, after "may," to insert ", with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Wyoming please explain to the Senate what the House amendment proposes or what change is contemplated in the bill by the amendment?

Mr. KENDRICK. The only change made in the bill as it passed the Senate is the insertion of the words "with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House.

The amendment was concurred in.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 15462. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BRITISH PROHIBITION OF AMERICAN PRODUCTS.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I ask to take from the table and that immediate consideration be given to the resolution which I submitted yesterday, relative to the prohibition of the importation of certain articles into Great Britain. I ask that the resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 438) was read, as follows:

Whereas during the war with the Imperial German Government Great Britain placed prohibitions on the importation of certain American products; and

Whereas the British Government has recently placed a prohibition on the importation of additional American products to take effect on and after March 1, 1919, which is detrimental to the employment at their full capacity of our manufacturing industries; and

Whereas this action of the British Government is in direct conflict with point No. 3 of the 14 points of peace proposed in the message of the President of the United States to the Congress of January 8, 1918: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, what steps, if any, have been taken by the Department of State to request the British Government to modify or suspend such prohibition.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, during the continuance of the war with Germany the British Government, as a war measure, placed a prohibition on the importation of certain articles into Great Britain which were largely manufactured in this country. As an example of this and as indicative of the list, a prohibition was placed on the importation of shoes. This country had had a large business in all European countries before the war in American-made shoes. We have for a great many years manufactured a better-fitting shoe and a better shoe than have other countries, and therefore, notwithstanding the disparity in the cost of manufacture in this country, we have been able to build up a very considerable trade. The exportation of shoes from the United States to Great Britain a year or two before the outbreak of the war—I do not recall the figures for the year immediately preceding the war—amounted to nearly $1,000,000. More than two years ago this prohibition on the importation of shoes was suspended; but now other articles are being included in that list, with the purpose, as stated by the British Government, of reconstructing and building up the industries of Great Britain until they have been restored to normal condition.

It is hardly necessary, Mr. President, for me to call the attention of Senators to the fact that this process of building up and reconstructing British industries has directly the reverse effect on our industries, because during the time all importations are prohibited into Great Britain we are going to manufacture less to the extent that the British industries are increased.

I had supposed that after the termination of the war, or at this time, such prohibitions would be suspended; and I was surprised to find three or four days ago that the list was greatly extended, so that it becomes a matter of vital importance to the manufacturing industries of this country.

I wish now to send to the desk and ask to have read from the Official Bulletin a list of the additional articles the prohibition of the importation of which into Great Britain will go into effect on the 1st of March.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I do not introduce this resolution in any spirit of antagonism to Great Britain, but I do it for the purpose of calling to the attention of the Senate how very greatly our foreign trade may be affected by this additional prohibition, which includes the great variety of articles mentioned in the list just read. I think the time has come when we must give some attention to our own domestic affairs, when we must determine whether we are going to protect our foreign commerce. Possibly something is being done in connection with this subject by the State Department, but I think it is proper that the Senate should be informed what action, if any, has been taken or is being taken relative to this action of the British Government. I do not charge that this action is aimed at the United States. It is general, if I am correctly informed; but it is a process of attempting to build up British industries, and, of course, at the expense of those who have sent similar goods into that territory.

I hope the resolution will not be opposed.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, knowing that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] as chairman of the Elections Committee has an important matter to be brought up at once, I will not occupy the floor to his disadvantage. I beg the indulgence of the Senate for a moment, however, to say that my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN] and myself are in receipt of many protests from the manufacturing interests of the West against this embargo, particularly from those of the State of Illinois, which we represent. While the eminent Senator from Massachusetts says that he will not charge that this embargo is addressed against the United States, in which, of course, there is great merit, I deplore to say that in the West they have been able to point out that those particular articles which are the objects of the embargo in the majority are those that are manufactured in the Middle West, and which in great quantities heretofore have been shipped from the United States to England.

Mr. President, I concur with the Senator from Massachusetts in the trust that the State Department may make such appropriate investigation of the subject as it can, and make such reply to the resolution as will inform us what steps the State Department feels it proper and just, under the circumstances, to take. And now, Mr. President, I feel that it is not out of place for a Member of this body to invite at this time to the attention of England the delicate situation she is creating here in the United States. While the President is there in France, battling for principles which our country feels are to its welfare, to have one of the countries of the allies take a course so inimical to the welfare of the United States is calculated to arouse a sentiment of hostility from certain people in our country which will embarrass harmony in the United States upon whatever the President may conclude.

The Senator from Massachusetts is accurate when he calls attention to the fact that this embargo inveighs directly against the statement of the President of the United States opposing any policy which erects barriers to just trade between nations. Now, Mr. President, the English Government say that our policy is one of a protective tariff; that by a tariff we keep their goods out of our market, to build up our home market; that they have a right to keep our goods out of their market.

The parallel is not just. We levy a form of tariff, but we do not put an unconditional and unlimited embargo upon their goods. They need only pay that tariff to enter into our markets completely; but the policy of England is an absolute embargo, without qualification, and that embargo, as the western manufacturers have informed my distinguished colleague and myself from Illinois, particularly operates against the great Middle West.

Mr. President, I beg to submit the suggestion that Britain does this country a great violence at this time by pressing that embargo. First, she will awaken in the United States a sentiment that will make it very difficult for the President of the United States to succeed in those things with which all of our people wish him well, sir. Second, she will awaken hostility from a certain set of very estimable citizens in the United States, and, third, a war of protest from these against the policy undertaken by Britain. That war of protest will find its way to both Chambers of Congress, and will lead to retaliatory legislation on the part of the United States. Then before we know it we will have that economic condition of trade hostility between the United States and Britain; and then, sir, instead of having a calm peace of the world between ourselves and our allies we will have awakened an atmosphere of enmity, making impossible the very peace of the future for which we strive.

For myself I have one parting word which I dare offer to the British officials, knowing that the British plain people have a common sentiment for friendship and future harmony along with our plain people. It is this, that unless there is a very great necessity of self-preservation on the part of Britain I pray her official set to recall the struggle we had to enter upon in 1812 and 1814 to oppose English embargo to our impoverishment. We beg England not to unnecessarily reawaken the old resentful spirit of 1812 in the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to give my most cordial support to this resolution. While we are expressing our good feelings toward the people of all lands, and extending to them earnest sympathy and assurance of our desire for their happiness and prosperity, we must realize that the first duty of a government is to its own people, and I believe it to be our duty to take care of the United States and the people of the United States. Great commercial problems confront our people. We must guard their interests by wise and fearless action.

I support with pleasure the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. REED addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator yield to me to make a suggestion to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to suggest that if the Senator from Missouri is to proceed, this resolution will go to the calendar, unless the Senator from Massachusetts gets unanimous consent that it shall go over without prejudice until to-morrow.

Mr. REED. I hope that unanimous consent will be given.

Mr. WEEKS. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may go over until to-morrow without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BOLSHEVIST PROPAGANDA IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Missouri will yield for a moment, I should like to ask unanimous consent to take up another resolution which came over from yesterday.

Mr. REED. I will be through in three minutes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think this will occupy only a moment.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If there is any objection to it, of course I shall not insist on it. I ask that resolution 437 may be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will state the resolution.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 437, calling upon the Attorney General for information as to what investigation is being made by the Department of Justice relative to certain meetings recently held in Washington City at which public speakers advocated the cause of the present Bolsheviki government of Russia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

There was no objection.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

BRITISH PROHIBITION OF AMERICAN PRODUCTS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate resolution No. 438, submitted yesterday by Mr. WEEKS.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not know that anything I may say on this resolution will serve any other purpose except to keep it that many more minutes before the Senate. I want the resolution passed, but I do not want to see its passage regarded as a mere formality.

We have recently had a great deal of talk about the brotherhood of man, a great deal of talk that is in the teeth of all history. It is time we began to take a sane view of life, and this resolution will serve a useful purpose in giving us that jolt which is sometimes necessary to awaken an individual from a sound slumber even though it disturb the gentle course of pleasant dreams.

We as a Nation are suffering from voluntary autointoxication. We impose upon ourselves the idea that we are in love with all the world and that all the world is in love with us. We hypnotize ourselves with the charming thought that we have suddenly become perfectly good and perfectly unselfish, and that all the rest of the world had a change of heart at the same time we did. We are trying to convince ourselves that the day has come when the lion and the lamb may be observed serenely sleeping upon every hillside and when little children may be found leading the beasts of prey. But this dream will be rudely dispelled. Those who seek to impose it upon our people will in the end find they have done their country a disservice.

Every time a false doctrine is taught it brings bad results. No healing herb springs from the poison soil of falsehood. No general good springs from the denial of truth.

There were a lot of people who a few years ago went about preaching the doctrine in France that there was no danger to France from Germany. They declared that the frosts of selfishness in all human hearts had by the gentle spirit of Christ been transformed into sweet dews of kindness. They taught France that she need not arm, alleging that no nation dare in the face of enlightened Christianity make war upon its neighbors. For a time France was lulled into a partial slumber. While she thus slept Germany was inventing deadly gases, forging and perfecting plans for the advance upon Paris she had so long contemplated. It was not until Europe shook beneath the tread of the embattled legions of the Kaiser in preparation for war that a French statesman and a few French publicists succeeded in arousing France to her danger.

Universal military training was adopted. It had not reached full development when the German invasion began. But for the fact that a few men did succeed in awakening the French from their dream of peace and security Paris would have been conquered and the Republic of France would now be under the foot of the German.

Just before war came an Englishman succeeded in awakening the English Government enough to cause her to equip her little army and to cause a partial mobilization of the English fleet. It required that preparation and sound foresight, added to the French awakening, to save England as well as France.

What is new about these cries we are hearing? Six or eight years ago the Carnegie Foundation, a concern that I unhesitatingly say ought to be dissolved, employed a generous part of its enormous fund to create a world-wide organization for the purpose of promoting eternal peace.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is referring to the Peace Foundation?

Mr. REED. Yes; did I miscall the name?

Mr. LODGE. No; you simply left out the word "peace."

Mr. REED. This organization had had its branches in every country. The branches in countries outside the United States were comprised of the subjects of foreign countries. These aliens were severally and jointly conspiring to control the policy of their respective countries. They were likewise conspiring with the Carnegie Peace Foundation to control the policy of the United States. I do not hesitate to sharply raise the question of loyalty against any American organization that conspires with Germans or other foreigners to change the foreign or domestic policy of our Government. I gravely doubt the loyalty of that course of conduct.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. One moment. It might lead to any extreme, to any abuse, and it might end in a world-wide conspiracy to undermine the very foundations of the American Republic. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that it was disclosed before some committee of Congress several years ago that after the people of the United States, in the most significant and emphatic way, had expressed their opinion that we had the right to send our coastwise ships through the Panama Canal without paying toll, and after the three great political parties had written into their platform that proposition, and the three candidates for the Presidency of the United States had declared in favor of it on the stump, after the Congress of the United States had enacted it into law, and after the State Department had taken the matter up diplomatically with Great Britain, this Carnegie peace organization spent $25,000 or $30,000 in circulating literature to procure the repeal of that act.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator for his historical sketch. I am wondering if the Senator can not also tell us whether it is a fact that the agitation for the repeal of the free-of-tolls law began with Canadian shipping or business interests?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania is just a little incomplete. I think he should have added that the literature circulated was the speech of the great New York Senator, Mr. Elihu Root, upon the floor of the Senate, in favor of that repeal.

Mr. REED. I know that is true; that is, I know that that was a part of the expense, but I addressed an inquiry to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the failure of the Democratic Party to keep its platform to the people of the United States, which pledge plainly was to give freedom from tolls, did more to undermine the confidence of the people in the Democratic Party than any other act ever performed. It is the one thing which is a blot upon the splendid record of the Democratic Party. It was a shameful and foul betrayal of the people when we broke our platform on that point.

Mr. REED. "Shake not thy gory locks at me; thou canst not say I did it." The RECORD will show I voted against the repeal.

Mr. ASHURST. So did I.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield further to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. My vote was cast against that right along, but I think it is well to remind the people that the vote which carried the measure was Democratic and Republican.

Mr. REED. I think that is only a fair statement; but I return to my interrogatory addressed to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. REED. I asked the Senator whether he was not able to inform us that the agitation for the repeal of the free-of-tolls law did not really originate with the shipping interests of Canada and was by them carried to the British Government and by it referred to Ambassador Bryce. I am going to be frank with the Senator. I am asking the question because I have been told the Senator has such information.

Mr. KNOX. My recollection is, and my recollection is quite clear upon the subject, that it began with a protest by the British Government filed by the counselor of the British Embassy in the absence of Mr. Bryce, who at that time was the ambassador. The matter was in process of adjustment, and I thought at that time, and think now, there could have been an amicable adjustment of the question with Great Britain, because we had represented to Great Britain diplomatically, in an elaborate note upon the subject, that the question of the passage of our own ships was a domestic question; that their ships were not entitled to enter into that trade at all. I think, and I thought then, that Great Britain would have withdrawn her protest until she was reinspired by the Canadian shipping interests. Then we offered to arbitrate the matter under the treaty that had just been signed between Great Britain and the United States but the ratifications of which had not been exchanged because of several amendments put upon the treaty by the Senate. We offered to ratify the treaty, notwithstanding those amendments, although they were not very acceptable to the Taft administration, but we concluded if we could settle the tolls question we had better waive our scruples upon the amendments, and we tendered to Great Britain the offer to exchange ratifications and arbitrate under the provisions of that treaty. Great Britain refused, and I think the reason why she refused was that the arbitration would have had to have been provided for by a treaty requiring a two-thirds vote of the Senate, whereas a repeal of the bill would only require a majority vote.

Mr. REED. That, I think, justifies me in asking the question.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. I must take sharp issue with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] on the statement that the repeal of the Panama Canal toll exemption for our coastwise shipping affected the Democratic Party disastrously. That action was taken in June, 1914, and at the two general elections thereafter, the election of 1914 and the election of 1916, the Democratic Party was successful. It carried a majority of Congress in 1914, and in 1916 it reelected President Wilson with a Democratic majority in both branches of Congress. Not until 1918 did the Democratic Party suffer any reversal of its fortunes at the polls, but two successful elections intervened between that time and the time of the action on the Panama Canal tolls question.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me to respond?

Mr. REED. If for no other reason than that it illustrates the fact that there is still such a thing as contention in the world, I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not want to take the Senator's time, but will say in reply to my friend from Montana that while we carried the elections in 1914 and in 1916, nevertheless the Democratic speakers were in an apologetic attitude when the question of tolls was presented. I do not think I made any votes, but I went up and down this country like a peripatetic volcano in 1914 and 1916 urging the people to vote the Democratic ticket, and I was frequently asked uncomfortable questions about our betrayal of the people on the Panama Canal tolls question. The people would have had firmer faith in the Democratic Party if it had kept its pledges on the tolls question. The fact that the Democratic Party was successful in two elections afterwards does not bring back the confidence of the people. A promise to the people is a promise, a pledge in a Democratic platform is a pledge, and a violation of a pledge by the Democratic Party is a worse offense than by the Republican Party, because the Democratic Party knows better. [Manifestations of applause in the gallery.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the occupants of the galleries that any disorder in the galleries as well as on the floor is against the rules of the Senate, and the Chair will not hesitate to order the galleries cleared if it becomes necessary.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. If the Senator will just permit me to make one observation in confirmation of the statement made by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Arizona to the fact that the reason why it hurt him so bad was that President Wilson in his campaign speeches used his party's pledge to support that legislation in connection with his observation that the Democratic platform pledges were not molasses with which to catch flies.

Mr. MYERS. I will say that the President caught a reelection in 1916, though.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we are getting away from the question I was trying to discuss, and having wandered this far into a June grass pasture, may I be permitted to pause long enough to remark: If you were seeking to ascertain to which party the honors on this question lay I think you would have some difficulty in deciding the case. This question had been settled by the action of Congress. Both political parties had ratified and approved the action. The question seemed to be at rest. It was resurrected by the great Senator from New York in a speech that will long be remembered for two reasons, first, for its power, and second, because it apparently required more than an ordinary amount of nerve to make it, for he was asking Congress to reverse its action, and the country to reverse its action, upon a matter which had been settled at a previous Congress.

The speech which he made was, as stated, circulated, I think, by some hundreds of thousands of copies all over the United States. A well-financed propaganda got under way; the ground was thus prepared. The President in his message stated to us, as I recall his language, that he did not know how to deal with certain difficult problems if this request was not granted. So both parties had to do with this business. I did not, however, intend to discuss that at all. It is a side issue.

But I do call attention to the existence of organizations that have for their business the intriguing with similar organizations in other countries to control the policy of this country. That is going on, and it was going on in this great prewar peace movement. If anybody wants to know what was the matter with our country, if there was anything at all the matter with it during the early days of the European war, he would have no difficulty in finding that a great lot of very good people had been going around this country preaching the doctrine that there never would again be any great war. They convinced many of our people, yet their teachings turned out to be absolutely false.

I remember that when Mr. Bryan wrote his celebrated peace treaties he had a lot of old Army sabers gathered together. He caused the blades to be cut off from the hilts. He then had the blades beaten into little plowshares and presented a plowshare to the representatives of each of the countries that had signed the treaties. He then presented the hilts of the sabers to the members of the Foreign Relations Committee. Thus we were literally carrying out the Scripture maxim, "They shall beat their swords into plowshares." I believe he did not furnish any pruning hooks, doubtless because there was no raw material in the shape of spears to be found.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand there was a large amount of gun metal that was melted up into paper weights as souvenirs of those warlike weapons and presented to distinguished people throughout the country.

Mr. REED. Perhaps so; but I do not say this now to bring an embittered thought into this body against Mr. Bryan or against any of the good people who went up and down the world saying, "Behold now; turn your eyes to the East, where the glorious rays of the sun of the millenium are gilding the horizon and the full effulgence of the wondrous orb will soon break upon the earth." They were sincere and as enthusiastic as a new convert at a revival meeting. But, sir, while we were burning incense to the gods of peace Germany and other countries were molding cannon in the furnaces of Vulcan. While we were swinging censers and singing, "Peace on earth, good will to men," their mighty arms were forging the implements of destruction.

That dream slightly transformed is the one they are now trying to realize over in Europe—a supernation, a brotherhood, a unity of heart and soul, a common control of all the destinies of all the races of men.

We are perhaps to be asked to cross 5,000 miles of sea and land and take charge of Turkey. That is the suggestion. It may or may not come to pass; but if it does come to pass—and it has been seriously discussed in the international debating society now in session—if that does come to pass, then the American soldier can be sent over to Turkey for the purpose, I suppose, of shooting virtue and goodness into the hearts and brains of the Turks, of interfering with their method of living, with their kind of government, with their freedom. While I abominate the unspeakable Turk, I admit he has the right, so long as he does not interfere with other people, to set up the kind of government he wants in Turkey, just the same as we have the right to set up the kind of government we want in the United States. The imposition of our views and our methods of life upon him is no less repugnant to the principles of liberty than would be the imposition by him of his views and his civilization upon us.

Again, beyond any question, if we enter this witches' caldron, we shall be involved in the great eastern question; involved to an extent no human brain dare undertake to measure and no prophet dare venture to foretell.

What of the questions between China and Japan? Are we now to draw a line and say, "Upon the nether side of this Japan shall stop, and upon the hither side China shall be permitted to hold sway"? Are we thus to become embroiled in the ambitions, the hopes, the race prejudices, and the religious conflicts of those peoples? If so, in what way and to what degree?

Every man with common sense now admits that no regulation, no rule, no act of ours will be effective unless it is backed either by actual force or by a potential force that can be called upon. Are we, then, to send our sons to slaughter in the contests of these two oriental peoples? Who gave us the right to judge their rights? Like us, they are the children of God. He created and placed them upon the earth. They were old before our Nation was born. They have remained reasonably satisfied for thousands upon thousands of years. Can we not let them alone?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to ask the Senator a question right at that point in relation to the remark which he has just made as to the enforcement of the dictates of the international tribunal by military force. The latest outgiving that I have been privileged to read concerning the proposal now being concocted abroad is that the use of military force to enforce these righteous international judgments is to be purely voluntary on the part of the constituent members of the league, which, of course, would conduce to harmonious action; and also the methods to be employed as coercive are to be economic in their nature; not any rude force. What does the Senator think about the efficiency of that?

Mr. REED. I will discuss that in a moment; but let me just finish the thought I was on.

The Japanese have been there in their island homes, living in a manner satisfactory to them, agreeable to their hearts' desire, for many thousand years. Their civilization probably antedates that of the oldest existing European nation. The Chinese, the original pacifists of the earth, gave to the world a literature, a wonderful poetry, and a marvelous philosophy thousands of years before the Christian era. Before Christ came upon the earth a Chinese philosopher had given mankind the Golden Rule reversed—"Do not unto others that which you would not have others do unto you." The Chinese people probably are living more happily to-day under their own form of government than they could possibly live if they had an American republican government imposed upon them. Why? Because their form of government springs from certain habits of living and ethical principles which are a part of the very nature of the Chinese. Our Government, which springs from our habits of thought and living, does not fit those principles, because their forms of thought, their very systems of logic and of mathematics, their reasoning, all their methods of life, are different from ours. Ours do not fit and will not fit the oriental.

The reason the Chinaman has the religion he has is because he is a Chinaman; the reason he has the family relations he has is because he is a Chinaman; the reason he believes in the philosophy that has been taught to him by Confucius and his other great philosophers is because he is a Chinaman. If you.

were to remove him from the Orient to the Occident and force upon him our methods of life and government, he would immediately, upon being given his freedom, revert to his old habits, just as we would return to our old habits if we were given our freedom after being temporarily forced to adopt the habits and life of the Chinese.

It appears that we are to impose our Christian civilization, our peculiar type of civilization, to some extent upon these races and peoples. How far we do not know. If there is a revolution in China, are we to enter and become parties to it? Is this superstate, the government of which must be reposed in a few individual men of very limited intellect—for every man is a man of limited intellect, no matter how great he is; some of them do not know it, but God put limitations on all their brains—are these few men to set themselves up as the supermen of the world; are they to map out a course of conduct for all races, kindreds, and tongues?

That has been the old story of the ages. The Roman invaded other countries, and the Roman, better than any other nation on earth, unless it be England, knew how to invade countries and to leave their people reasonably content and prosperous. But Rome deemed it its business to force the Roman law, in a qualified sense, upon other countries, but only in a qualified sense. Then there came other nations not so wise, which undertook the work of conquest and endeavored to inculcate religion and morals with fagot, torch, and sword. They undertook to shoot their doctrines and laws into the quivering bodies of men and women who resisted to the death. They came over here from Spain and slaughtered the Aztecs of Mexico. They swept through the forests and mountains of South America, murdering in the name of the meek and lowly Jesus. But always while killing in the name of religion and civilization they were with greedy hands grabbing the gold of their victims.

If you ever set up a supernation it will be governed by somebody; it will either be some one great, dominant man who acts through the rest, or it will be the representatives of some one or two or three powerful nations who have combined to control. Human selfishness and greed will make themselves inevitably manifest. You will find them lurking in the twilight of the morning, conspiring in the midst of the day, and plotting in the stillness of the night.

Always with them there will come forth selfishness. The nations controlling the league will look out for themselves, and they will look out for themselves not as the common people or the common world or the ordinary nation, but they will look out for themselves as those who now possess the power, who have the international armies and the international courts.

Here is an illustration. It is, indeed, the fact that caused me to make these remarks: It appears that Great Britain, to whose rescue we came at the very moment when her marshal cried, "Our backs are to the wall. Britons, stand and die!"

It appears, I say, that Great Britain has no sooner extricated herself from the jaws of the German war monster than she proceeds selfishly to put up the bars of her trade against us.

Do I say this to arouse feeling against Great Britain? No. There is not a cleaner lot of sportsmen on this earth than the British; there is not a braver race of men than the British; there is not a more up-an-up, square-toed, hew-to-the-line class of men than the British; but these British are men with common sense, and when this war is over they are going to see to it that Great Britain is taken care of. If you set up a supernation you may be sure that Great Britain by herself, or in conjunction with other nations, will employ the powers of the league to her advantage and to the disadvantage of the rest of the world, and then will follow reprisal, and out of this thing organized for peace will come bloody war. This bed of peace will become a nest in which will be whelped litters of war dogs.

The way to keep men at peace is not to interfere with their rights; to let the ranchman have his ranch and keep his sheep, to let the owner keep his home, to let the merchant have his business, and not to interfere. When you seek to interfere you have fights. The way to have races live in peace is to let races alone and nations alone; let them run their own business; let them set up their own governments; let them manage their own affairs; let them keep within their own rights, and keep within your own, and then you will have some hope of peace. The moment interference begins, trouble starts.

If an independent nation wants to set up an embargo against the shipment of goods across its borders, well and good; other independent nations can, if they desire, get angry about it. It is like the high tariff and the low tariff, or free trade and protective tariff—it makes little difference. But I hope this embargo England has just laid against us will be a warning to those of you who have been walking with your heads in the stars, those of you who have been singing psalms to universal goodness and uttering praises to the sweetness and godlike qualities of your own and everybody else's soul. Those of you who have been saying "the world has become too good to be selfish" remember that before the echoes along the Rhine front have died away, before we can get our troops back to our shore, Great Britain, that you went yonder to save, is proceeding to gain every advantage she can. Where she admits your soldiers to save her she will not admit your goods that you would like to sell her for honest money, giving honest value.

Let us wake up. If we do not wake up now, if the dreamers dream on, and if extensive propaganda is carried on, dreaming on and preaching on and talking on about eternal peace and happiness, our people may be led to the point where this Nation will be obliged to extricate itself from a circle of intrigue, surrounded by a circle of steel and of fire formed by our enemies while we sleep.

Ah, Mr. President, let America take care of herself. She had to fight for that privilege in the first place—the right to take care of herself. It was thinking of that that Washington crossed the Delaware; the fathers wrote the Declaration of Independence; it was thinking of that the patriots froze and starved and died; it was thinking of that Jackson fought at New Orleans. It was to gain and keep national sovereignty and individual liberty. It was to gain and keep the right of self-determination; to make that right so inviolable that no power on earth could affect it; to have a sovereignty so complete that there was nothing above it save God and nothing to direct it but the votes of the American people.

The wicked purpose of this hour—wicked, though it be not so intended—is in part to destroy that sovereignty and yield it back to European monarchs or to European powers from which our fathers originally fled and to gain their complete liberty from which they afterwards fought and died. Who thinks that England will not levy an embargo every time it is to her interest is mistaken. Who does not know that England is busy in every shipyard, creating a vast fleet of vessels to capture the trade of the world, knows nothing. Who does not know that English financiers have already laid their plans to control not only the commerce but the business of the world, as far as they can, knows nothing. Who does not know that in the marts of trade France will meet us as far as she is able, and that competition for existence, for life, will be keenly waged, knows nothing. In that competition I want to see America independent, untrammeled by any ties save those of respect and good will toward all. I want to see this country made so great that she can maintain her place as big brother to the Western Hemisphere, so that she can exercise a beneficent influence upon all of the South American countries; so that she can keep Mexico decent, and, if she does not remain decent, make her to be decent; so that our lines of trade may extend into these undeveloped lands; so that our fleets, the shuttles of the sea, shall constantly stretch the threads of trade and commerce between the United States and South American countries, weaving them into a web of amity and good will that shall last through the centuries. Thus we shall build here a vast empire over which the influence of America will be dominant. Let it always be an influence of love and of respect. If we are to accomplish this sublime mission, we can not yield the Monroe doctrine.

It is idle to claim that we can interfere with the policy of China and Japan away yonder, and at the same time undertake to deny to them the right to say what shall happen on this side of the sea. Where we take, we must give. Where they yield, we must also yield, unless, indeed, we are to do that monstrous thing, viz, set up a tyranny of four or five nations over all the world, and thus crush and destroy the liberties that men have established and maintained.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. It is not to ask a question; but, if the Senator will permit me, I am reminded by what he has been saying of some lines that were written by a great English poet in 1806, when Napoleon had Europe at his feet; and they came into my mind because they so well illustrated what the Senator has been saying. I will read only the last part of the sonnet.

Mr. REED. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. LODGE. It was when England was left alone, confronting Napoleon:

'Tis well! from this day forward we shall know
That in ourselves our safety must be sought;
That by our own right hands it must be wrought;
That we must stand unpropped, or be laid low.
O dastard whom such foretaste does not cheer!
We shall exult, if they who rule the land
Be men who hold its many blessings dear,
Wise, upright, valiant; not a servile band,
Who are to judge of danger which they fear,
And honor which they do not understand.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I think it illustrates one of the reasons of England's success in the world.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator, Mr. President.

I have but a word to say in conclusion, for I did not intend to take the floor this morning. Physically I am not fit to occupy the floor.

There are under arms to-day in the world, according to the best figures I am able to get, still approximately 15,000,000 men. One million eight hundred thousand of these are our own troops in Europe, and approximately 800,000 in camps in America. I have the accurate figures in my desk, but not with me. England has over 3,000,000 men still in the field and, according to the figures given me by a reliable source, Germany has in substance and effect over 2,500,000 men still in the field. This enormous aggregate of men, which, for round numbers, I will call 15,000,000, are being held in the field awaiting the making of peace.

I do not know what a soldier in Europe is worth economically, but I believe that an American soldier draws on the average approximately $40 a month in wages, and I am very sure he can not be supported and supplied in France for $40 a month more.

Mr. KING. It costs $2,000 per annum per soldier.

Mr. REED. I am just told by the Senator from Utah that it costs $2,000 per soldier per annum. While those soldiers are away that enormous expense is going on.

But there is another side of the question even more unfortunate. While they are in the camp and the field they are not in the workshop; they are not on the farm; they are not in the countinghouse. They are not producing. Every one of them, speaking broadly, if he were home, would be producing an amount fully equal to his present consumption; and that economic loss falls upon the country and falls upon the world in addition to the outgo of which I have just spoken. What is true of America is true of the armies of the rest of the world to a greater or less extent.

What, now, is the situation? We all know that Europe is starving. We have been asked to contribute and have contributed $100,000,000 to be distributed in alms. While we are contributing to keep Europe from starving, Europe is expending countless millions of dollars, probably not less than $100,000,000 a day, in loss of money and in loss of labor on the armies of Europe. My calculations are being made now in my mind as I go along, but I think they are sufficiently accurate. Furthermore, as suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], while they are clamoring for our money they are also clamoring for our food, and we are told that the American citizen can not have cheap food because it is necessary to send such large quantities of food abroad. Yet being withheld from the farm, from the workshop, from the place of production, are approximately thirteen and a half million European soldiers. What are they awaiting? Awaiting peace. An economic loss of not less than $100,000,000 every day—perhaps that figure is ridiculously low—and all awaiting peace. And what is peace awaiting? Peace is awaiting, not the settlement of the dispute between Germany and France and England and Italy and the United States; peace is awaiting the realization and development of glorious dreams that have to do with South Africa, with the farthest islands of the sea, with the remotest quarters of the globe, and that do not have to do with the conditions of this war, but have to do with a reorganization and a regeneration of mankind that can not be accomplished in 10,000 years from this date.

Before you can make a Hottentot understand the Constitution of the United States, and believe in the Christian religion, and in the other things that white men believe in, you have got to give God Almighty a chance to change the shape of his skull and the convolutions of his brain. While we are waiting, this expense goes on, this starvation goes on, these vast armies are held in camp and field. American boys are kept away from their mothers' embraces; and if you do not think they are heart hungry I hope you will get some such letters as I have received.

I recently read a letter from an American colonel, a man intellectually great enough to sit in this Chamber—yes, great enough, even, to occupy a position in the Cabinet. [Laughter.] He got himself ready to go into this war before the war began, because he saw it coming. He went in the first day. He is in there yet. He is as game as they make them anywhere, as uncomplaining and as gallant as American boys can grow; and that is simply saying, as good as God has ever made. He wrote me and said: "If anybody thinks that the American soldier wants to be kept over here in France while the destiny of the South Sea Islands is being settled, or a new scheme of civilization worked out, he has another guess coming to him. We want this war over. We want these Germans to pay the debts that they ought to pay. We want to come home and go to work. We want to see our mothers and our sisters, and some who have wives want to see their wives; and you had better get us home."

It was not the word of a petulant boy. He said: "Moreover, our Army is enduring more hardships to-day, in many respects, than it did during the war, for in many places the equipment has been so thoroughly taken away from us that we find it difficult at times to get up our supplies; and we are sitting here through these winter months waiting on what?" And he inclosed a clipping from an American newspaper in which it appeared that some duke or grand duke or some other thing of that kind—I never can keep track of them—who had been dethroned or toppled out of his place some years ago, was hovering about the peace conference and asking to have restitution made of his money lost some years before in some European brawl, and he said: "It is actually said in the newspapers, as a reason for halting the whole peace proceedings while his case is being considered, that this poor aristocrat actually has to work for his living!"

Mr. President, the thing to do is to settle our difficulties with Germany and Austria, impose the conditions of peace, and get American soldiers home; and then, in the name of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson and Abraham Lincoln and common sense, having gotten them home, let us keep them home.

Of course, there is much that can be done that would be of value in preventing international disputes and wars—we all know that—but not in the way they are going at it. If we were to settle our difficulties with Germany and Austria, and at the same time we were to assist in setting up certain new countries that really are strong enough to maintain their liberties, provided they are given a little initial help, that is all right. I do not complain, although this business of setting up governments is a good deal like matchmaking. It generally turns out badly. Speaking by and large the only people who are worthy of a government or who can maintain a government are the people that are brave enough to set it up in the first instance. Such is the history of the world.

Mr. President, I am admonished that the time for a vote is nearly up, that the morning hour is about to expire; and if it is necessary to have a vote, I shall discontinue my remarks, though I wanted to speak about two minutes more.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to state to the Senator that the resolution will not be passed between now and the hour of 2 o'clock. I have several amendments to offer and perhaps an observation to make.

Mr. REED. Very well; then I will be permitted, just briefly, to finish.

Mr. President, no nation ever yet has been picked up from the ground, where its people lay prostrate, and put on its feet that was ever able to stand.

I was saying, Mr. President, when I paused in order to give an opportunity for these proceedings to take place, that no nation or race has ever been picked from the ground and put on its feet by another nation or race and made great and self-sustaining. Where has it happened in all history? It has been attempted time and again, and a sort of a temporary government put up, but always under a protectorate, a government in fact that is a mere puppet government. What great, virile, strong, splendid government ever developed from a thing like that? It is stillborn; it is handmade. It does not possess the vital principles that must be found in a nation that is to continue. What are those principles? The love of liberty must burn in the hearts of men who are oppressed until its flames can no longer be endured, and until they are willing to die a thousand deaths to gain and keep their liberty.

When that spirit thrills their souls and burns their breasts they rise and strike and gain freedom. Such races and such men are the only ones of any account or that ever will be of any account on this earth. I, of course, except a conquered people who have been overthrown by overwhelming power and who find the conqueror has put its foot on their neck and deprived them of any chance to rise. But even in such case in the course of the ages it almost invariably transpires that a brave race will throw off the conqueror's yoke.

Mr. President, instead of staying in Europe to make Europe over, instead of staying in Europe to make Asia over, instead of staying in Europe to make Africa over, instead of staying in Europe to resurvey and provide a new government for all the archipelagos of all the oceans the thing to do is to settle our disputes with Germany—of course, honorably and in connection with our allies—bring our armies home, and let our soldier boys feel once more the kisses of mothers on their cheeks, the embraces of wives and sisters, the thrill of American air, the glory of free American institutions. Let them go back to the great processes of creation and of recreation.

Mr. President, I remark in conclusion, strike the cobwebs of fancy from your brain, oh ye leaders of men. Turn your eyes from the golden clouds to the practical fields of life. Remember that men are men and women are women, and that men and women have always been largely guided by what they conceive to be in their own interest. Remember that as people are so are nations. Be not therefore surprised, be not therefore chagrined, if Great Britain, holding a smoking rifle in one hand, with which she has been defending herself and ourselves in common battle, shall turn with the other hand and snatch from us trade advantages and the command of the seas. Be not surprised at that. It is old Adam working still in the garden of the world, where he will work as long as man shall be man.

SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN obtained the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not care to interfere with the Senator from New Jersey, but I had announced that I expected to call up Senate resolution No. 415 at the close of the morning business to-day. What has transpired since, it is not necessary for me to go into; but I shall call up that resolution at the earliest possible moment when I shall find it practicable to do so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Before that suggestion is made, allow me to ask what the Senator from Ohio said. We could not hear him on this side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. The Senator from Ohio is asked to repeat his statement.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I could not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. POMERENE. I said that I had expected to call up Senate resolution No. 415 this morning at the close of the morning business; that I was not able to do so because of what had occurred in the Senate; and that I would call it up at the earliest moment practicable.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What is the subject of the resolution? I do not know it by number.

Mr. POMERENE. The Michigan contest.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, the Michigan senatorial contest?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I rise to a point of order. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, some days ago the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], by request, introduced a bill (S. 5278) which confers upon the President blanket authority to appoint to the Regular Army certain generals and lieutenant generals who have held such rank during the present emergency.

I do not know what action the Military Affairs Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, will take on this bill.

The inspiration and suggestion for this legislation evidently come from the War Department—presumably from the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff. I am reliably informed, Mr. President, that the proposed beneficiaries of this bill are Gens. Pershing, March, Bliss, Liggett, and Bullard.

In view of the importance of the subject and its relation to certain other dominating questions, chiefly the promotion of soldiers of lesser rank than those mentioned, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments while I make some observations in connection with this proposed legislation, upon promotions in general, and upon the treatment accorded minor officers and privates as well, who have rendered splendid service in their country's behalf, but whose interests seem to be entirely lost sight of in the chaos which at present prevails.

First, Mr. President, I wish to point out to the Senate the fact that in the entire history of our country the high rank of general has been only four times conferred, and in each instance for distinguished services and conspicuous gallantry in actual warfare.

To Washington, to Grant, to Sherman, and finally to Sheridan, and to no others, was this supreme distinction granted. In the case of Washington, the rank was fixed by direct vote of the Continental Congress, in 1775, at the beginning of the Revolution. After his retirement from the Presidency, when war with France threatened, in 1798 and 1799, he was placed at the head of the Army, but was given the rank of lieutenant general.

By special act of Congress in 1866 the grades of general and lieutenant general were recreated for the sole benefit of Grant and Sherman, and they were duly nominated and were confirmed by the Senate. By reason of Grant's elevation to the Presidency, the office of general was vacated, and he nominated Sherman as his successor. This was in 1869.

The rank of general being meanwhile dormant, Congress in 1888 created it anew in order that Sheridan, then lieutenant general, might be given the higher honor while he still lived, for he was then upon his deathbed. Congress has never held the honor cheaply, and has always preserved the right to confer it by special act, whereby the granting of it has been attended by all the solemnity incident to direct congressional authority.

It will be observed that, except in the case of Washington, this high honor was not conferred during hostilities nor immediately following the close thereof. As a rule, Congress has acted only after a sufficient lapse of time to permit the exercise of a calm and deliberate judgment, preceded by adequate inquiry and uninfluenced by public clamor.

I do not maintain that these officers should not thus be honored eventually, but I do assert that there are other promotions which should first be made in justice to the men who, for conspicuous and distinguished gallantry and service, have been recommended by their superiors for such promotion, which, however, has been denied by the very officials who now propose this legislation. In common justice they should receive that promotion before we confer higher and more permanent honors upon the officers I have mentioned.

Furthermore, the promotions embodied in this bill should not be made until we get a better perspective of the administration of our Army and the treatment by those in high command of its officers and men.

So far as Gen. Pershing is concerned, I am ready at any time to acquiesce in and agree to the bestowal of such distinction as a grateful country may deem him worthy of; but even in his case it may be best to await the complete fruition of his campaign abroad, that we may the more fully measure the scope of his achievements.

In a war of this character, our total unpreparedness compelling us to feverishly assemble an army of 4,000,000 men, it is not to be wondered at that grave injustices, blunders, and even scandals were developed. Some errors of judgment were inevitable, and must be treated with proper leniency, though it would be a fatal mistake to ignore them entirely.

No more splendid army, mentally, morally, and physically, ever marched to martial music than these 4,000,000 American freemen.

The placing of 2,000,000 of these magnificent soldiers on the fighting line in France, with only an inconceivably small loss, was an undertaking which makes the heart of every American patriot beat with justifiable pride.

The heroic achievements of that Army have added new luster to the pages of American history, already luminous with the magnificent deeds at Trenton, Princeton, Monmouth, Saratoga, Yorktown, New Orleans, Antietam, Gettysburg, and Appomatox. The traditional valor of the American soldier was splendidly exhibited at Belleau Wood, Chateau-Thierry, St. Mihiel, the Argonne Forest, Verdun, the Meuse, Sedan, and the Hindenburg line.

In these great battles, waged on the fair soil of France for the same principles of civil liberty for which their forefathers had fought, the men in kahki have kept alive the glorious traditions of American determination and bravery. We want no cloud of scandal or injustice to dim the glory of America's part in the supreme conflict for democracy. We should be generous in rewarding the services of officers and men alike, but our action should be based upon complete justice to all, and our conclusions should be arrived at only after the full records of service are placed before us.

There are many things which are not clear, and Congress should demand an adequate explanation before bestowing military honors. Many things have been done that seem unjust, yet they may be promptly explained. Criticism, however, is widespread, and grave injustices, owing to faulty administration, are being daily brought to the attention of Members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Serious charges come to us in every mail from parents and returning soldiers—stories that the cables have never told us, that the papers have never published, and our officials have never revealed. These allegations will not down, and it is our duty, in justice to our constituents and to our consciences alike, to sift them to the bottom and withhold honors from those higher up until these matters are explained to our satisfaction.

We have heard much during this war about "dollar-a-year men," "swivel-chair officers," "bomb-proof jobs," and so forth, in Washington and elsewhere. I do not altogether sympathize with or indorse these views. Undoubtedly there were such individuals in Washington, "slackers" in every sense of the word, yet I believe many of these men—most of them, perhaps—were patriotically doing imperatively important work back of the line and are deserving of the thanks of their countrymen for their services.

But there is a grave suspicion that there was studied favoritism shown by those in authority; that military politics was rife; that many officers of the National Guard and the National Army were discriminated against; and that Regular Army men were favored.

There is every reason, too, for the belief that promotions in America were more rapid, more the result of influence, than at the battle front. I do not suggest that these promotions at home were improper, but that promotions in France were tardy by comparison.

At an early stage of the war there was undue haste in according honors to leading officers, and for this the Senate was in part responsible.

The preliminary investigations made by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs in December, 1917, seemed to demonstrate unmistakably that three chiefs of bureaus had each failed as an effective administrator of his bureau, yet all of these were advanced to the grade of major general for the emergency, two of them being subsequently given permanent rank as major general of the line, reaping a high reward, and for what?

These officers had seen long service with honorable careers. Future investigation may absolve them from blame, but while the weight of criticism rested on them they were promoted.

On the other hand, let us look at Enoch H. Crowder, whom this Nation and the civilized nations of the earth generally should ever hold in grateful remembrance for the extraordinary celerity with which he mobilized America's great citizen army, that saved the world from autocracy's fatal grip.

He has with equal ability filled the dual rôle of Judge Advocate General and Provost Marshal General, and has received the reward only which was accorded all other chiefs of bureaus. If, however, he shall not be reappointed by the President when his term is completed, February 15, 1919, he will be relegated to civil life, with his rank taken away from him, or will take his place by reappointment as colonel in his own department.

Is that a just and proper distribution of military honors?

And let us not forget that last year when it was proposed by Congress to grant the rank of lieutenant general to Gen. Crowder, he immediately declined the suggested honor, for the reason that he did not desire to be singled out for special honors when the selective-service boards under him were working without hope of reward.

And what of Henry P. McCain, who for the first year and a half of the war as Adjutant General rendered extraordinarily efficient service in shaping the Army handed over to him by Gen. Crowder? For reasons which have never been divulged, he seems to have been summarily removed from his post some months ago, and, though he continues to hold by new appointment the rank of major general during the emergency, he reverts to the rank of colonel when the war shall end.

Again I ask, is that a just and proper distribution of military honors?

On the one hand, two officers who did not succeed have been made major generals for life, while two other distinguished officers who did not fail find themselves adrift or holding minor rank when the war is over. Why does not this bill, inspired by the War Department, provide proper recognition for Gens. Crowder and McCain?

There have been certain grave mistakes and blunders during the present war, mistakes and blunders which will never be forgotten, because the reason for their existence has never been explained, and the responsibility for them must be placed upon those who determined the policy of the War Department. Surely until they are explained those who may be responsible for these mistakes and blunders should not be further honored.

Of course the Secretary of War must assume responsibility for all the shortcomings and derelictions of those who are his subordinates. On the other hand, during the progress of this war the Chief of Staff has been vested with or has assumed extraordinary, almost autocratic powers, such as no other American military officer has ever been endowed with in the history of the Republic. From day to day he took to himself greater authority, until he was almost supreme, almost a law unto himself.

Under the circumstances the Chief of Staff must expect to be held responsible in a large measure for every phase of development of the Military Establishment and to have charged against him the delinquencies of his subordinates.

Throughout the entire war, until the signing of the armistice, November 11, the Senate Committee on Military Affairs exhibited the fatal weaknesses of the War Department program—inexcusable delay, unspeakable inefficiency, incredible extravagance. Such was the record unfolded from day to day.

As a result of the disclosures developed by that committee, many improvements in organization were inaugurated by the Secretary of War, and a greater degree of efficiency was manifest as the months passed by. But, as a rule, these changes were made too late to greatly affect the equipment of our forces on the fighting line, and, because of this delay, grave were the disasters which ensued.

I shall not dwell upon these pitiful details. Yet I would remind this Senate that, even up to the day hostilities ceased, in spite of the billion dollars we expended for aircraft, not an American-built battle plane or bombing plane was used by our Army in France. Except for the foreign-built planes, we had none at our disposal, except De Haviland fours, which were little more than armed reconnoissance planes.

Let us not forget what Gen. Pershing has informed us on this point. After dwelling upon the absolute lack of guns of heavy caliber, he reported:

> In aviation we were in the same situation. We obtained from the French the necessary planes for training our personnel, and they have provided us with a total of 2,676 pursuit, observation, and bombing planes. * * * As to tanks, we were also compelled to rely upon the French. Here, however, we were less fortunate, for the reason that the French production could barely meet the requirements of their own armies.

For weeks the German planes flew over our forces almost at will, without adequate opposition from our own aviators, hundreds of our men being the victims of Hun mastery of the air at those points.

Who was responsible for that lamentable state of affairs? Has this Senate forgotten the report of the President's own investigator, the Hon. Charles E. Hughes? Two Army officers were recommended for punishment, while the disciplining of another, Col. Deeds, was suggested.

What was the result? The President felt constrained to pardon the two officers in advance of trial, while Col. Deeds was "vindicated," so it was called, by the Secretary of War.

Whoever was responsible, directly or indirectly, for the tragedy of the aircraft fiasco, which resulted so disastrously to our brave troops in the field, should have been tried and, if found guilty, have been compelled to suffer the maximum penalty under the law, military or civil. That is the kind of "vindication" he or they should have received, not a certificate of character from the President or the War Department.

Furthermore, in spite of billions of dollars appropriated for ordnance, there was not a single American-built heavy gun at the front, except about a dozen 8-inch, and a few turned over to the Army by the Navy. What wonder is it that our boys were slaughtered like sheep in the Argonne Forest!

Upon this point I refer you to the recent speech of Gov. Allen, of Kansas, who has lately returned from the front, where he spent nearly a year. This scathing arraignment of those responsible for the carnage in the Argonne Forest, due to lack of artillery, has never been answered because it is unanswerable. It is a sanguinary page in our military history.

Concerning this matter, moreover, Gen. Pershing has reported as follows:

Our entry in the war found us with few of the auxiliaries necessary for its conduct in the modern sense. Among our most important deficiencies in material were artillery, aviation, and tanks. We accepted the offer of the French Government to provide us with the necessary artillery equipment of 75s, 155-millimeter howitzers, and 155 G. P. F. guns from their own factories for 30 divisions. There were no guns of the calibers mentioned manufactured in America on our front the date the armistice was signed. The only guns of these types produced at home thus far received in France are 109 75-millimeter guns.

Who is responsible for that wretched state of affairs—for that slaughter of the innocents in the Argonne Forest and elsewhere? The dead can not speak. Let us demand that the living shall make answer.

But I will not dwell upon these phases of the war. There is so much to be said regarding the lamentable failures of the War Department concerning almost every phase of the great struggle, and these will be touched upon at length upon some future occasion.

I now propose to comment briefly upon the order of the War Department issued November 12, 1918, the day after the armistice was signed, that no further promotions should take place, and that no more commissions should be issued.

That famous order has never been published, I believe. Here is a copy of it, supplemented by The Adjutant General's cablegram to Gen. Pershing:

Memorandum for The Adjutant General.
Subject: Suspension of recommendations for emergency promotion and appointment.

The Secretary of War directs that telegraphic orders issue to commanding officers of all tactical divisions in the United States, to commanding generals of all territorial departments, replacements, central officers' training schools, camp headquarters, depot brigades, ports of embarkation, and the commanding officers of all other units of independent command within the limits of the United States, the commanding general Philippines Department, and the commanding general Panama Canal Department in substance as follows:

Recommendations for emergency appointment and promotion under the provisions of G. O. No. 78 c. s. W. D. are suspended until further notice.

HENRY JERVEY,
Major General, General Staff, Assistant to the Chief of Staff, Director of Operations.

PERSHING.
Amexforce, Paris.

(C. of S.) No. 2191, November 14. Confidential.

War Department has adopted as a policy not to appoint or promote any further officers in the United States Army for the period of the emergency. This policy to be effective November 11, 1918.

MARCH.
HARRIS.

Some weeks since I wrote the Secretary of War, as follows, regarding that order:

The summary order putting an end to all promotions was of so drastic a nature that it has worked a hardship, an injustice, indeed, in innumerable cases. I trust you may conclude to set that order aside, to the end that promotions earned in actual service may be effected.

The Secretary made reply, as follows:

There is an evident misunderstanding as to the cause for the suspension of promotions in the Army after the conclusion of the armistice. Appointment to a military office, as to any other office, may properly be made only when a vacancy exists. Appointments and promotions were made throughout the war to fill vacancies as they occurred. As you know, demobilization of the Army was begun immediately after the conclusion of the armistice, and from that time, instead of there being any vacancies, we had a surplus of officers in all grades, which it was necessary to reduce by discharge. If additional appointments were made to any grade, there would be no proper employment for the appointee.

As for the suggestion which is sometimes offered that the appointments might be made but the appointee immediately discharged, I think this comes from a misconception of the nature of a military force. It is apparently thought of in the same way as a medal or decoration. It would be difficult to justify the appointment of any person, civil or military, when there is no expectation or intention that he shall perform any duties under the appointment.

For the reasons I have given, no appointments or promotions are being made for the purpose of active service. There can be no objection, however, to appointment to an office to which no present duties are attached, but which, nevertheless, has an actual legal existence. Immediately after the armistice, therefore, I directed that a commission in the Officers' Reserve Corps, with inactive status, be offered to every officer and enlisted man who had duly qualified for appointment. A lieutenant who was recommended for promotion to a captaincy can not receive such a promotion in active service, since we already have more captains than we can employ and are discharging many daily. This man, however, does receive a reserve commission as captain.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey state who is the writer of that letter?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I stated that I had written to the Secretary of War, and that the Secretary of War had made reply, as follows.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator know how many officers have been offered and have received places in the Reserve Corps?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not know that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator know of any?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think I know of one only.

This statement of the Secretary of War is quite clear, and we should be grateful to him for presenting his views so frankly. Yet, I did not agree with him. There has been no measure enacted by the Congress, so far as I am aware, which limits the commissions which the War Department may issue except in the Regular Army. Certain it is, prior to the armistice, such commissions were issued daily, and, to a very large extent, to those who never left the shores of America.

When hostilities ceased there had accumulated a large number of recommendations for promotion, and the commissions were all ready for the signatures of the appropriate officers. I understand that included in this list were thousands of the very flower of our Army in France, lieutenants, captains, majors, lieutenant colonels, colonels, and brigadier generals, who won imperishable laurels at Chateau-Thierry, St. Mihiel, the Argonne, Sedan, and so forth, but who were refused promotion under the drastic order of the Secretary of War.

I do not think this course was acceptable to the American people. It is my belief that they would gladly sanction such increased expenditure as might be involved, even though the total should reach $100,000,000, the amount we have appropriated, at the President's demand, for the purpose of feeding Europe's unemployed.

Furthermore, if in order to find places for some of these heroes of the bloody battle fields of France it should be necessary to make vacancies, let the Secretary of War get rid of 10,000 or more of the officers filling executive and clerical posts in Washington and elsewhere in America and supplant them with the battle-scarred veterans of Chateau-Thierry and the Argonne Forest.

The Secretary of War has recently seen a great light and has found it possible to reverse himself, at least partially. Under date of January 30 a cablegram has been sent to Gen. Pershing authorizing him to "make such promotions among officers of the line up to and including the grade of colonel as will give the officers who, in his judgment, deserve it rank equal to the command exercised by them."

It is but natural that we should ask why, in view of this latter conclusion, it was necessary to issue the order of November 12, which caused such a vast measure of disappointment to thousands of brilliant young officers on the fighting line in France, and why the Secretary felt called upon to indicate, as he did in his letter to me, already quoted, that further promotions were not practicable.

As a matter of fact, the reversal of the order suspending all promotions does not meet the situation and in some respects is worse than the original order. Better no promotions than the selection of a favored few.

I know the Secretary entertains rather curious views on the question of promotions. Only recently he stated to me that a promotion was not a reward for services performed, but a recognition of the need of an officer to fill a higher rank, and was granted solely because the officer was capable of performing the service in that rank. I can not entirely agree to that. Our whole military history contradicts it. Promotions come in recognition of experience, fitness, and courage in the lower grades, and you can not gainsay it.

Thousands of young officers have been recommended for promotion for conspicuous gallantry in action or efficient service rendered elsewhere. I claim that every worthy recommendation by superior officers of those who have served in the battle line should be approved and the advancements effected.

This partial remedy of the Secretary of War is unfair and unequal, and will exclude and relegate to private life unhonored thousands of officers as much entitled to promotion as the comparatively small number who are likely to be benefited by the recent order to Gen. Pershing. Justice to all is my demand.

In this connection I wish to present an illustration of the Government's lack of adequate recognition for services rendered. Very early in the war about 1,000 young American doctors were commissioned as first lieutenants in the Medical Corps, were sent to the English Army and were scattered along the entire front line as surgeons, assigned to that army, whose medical force had become depleted.

They were a very superior class of men and they rendered splendid service. Ten or 15 gave their lives; 35 to 50 were wounded, yet, except in a few cases, no recognition of any sort has been given to these men, I am told, though no participants in the war more fully deserved promotion. They have been forgotten.

Now, I wish more particularly to present some points bearing upon certain of the psychological aspects of soldier life, and especially the treatment of our boys while overseas and upon their retirement from the Army.

Who is responsible for the inexcusable failures to deliver letters to our soldiers in France? This dereliction we must not charge against the much-censured Post Office Department which already has innumerable sins to answer for. The War Department established its own postal force, or pretended to do so. What a fiasco resulted! I doubt if there is a single Member of this Senate who has not received letters from disheartened parents complaining of the failure to deliver letters to loved ones overseas.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like in this connection, if it will not disturb the Senator from New Jersey, to call the attention of the Senate to a letter from a captain to a mother who had written him in regard to her son. The letter is as follows:

In reply to your letter dated October 3, 1918, would state that no word has been received at this station regarding your son.

2. The correspondence that has taken place regarding the above is becoming tiresome to this office. You were informed in our letter of August 17, 1918, that upon receipt of any word at this office you would be promptly furnished with the same for your information. With that assurance, and in view of the fact that the proper authorities have been notified to furnish a descriptive list of soldiers, it hardly seems necessary to constantly correspond regarding the same.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to this letter, because it was written by a captain to a mother who has not heard from her son since July last. She had written this officer in October and received this brutal answer. Mothers, fathers, wives, and relatives are entitled to receive courteous answers to letters about their dear ones whom they have given to their country.

I wish, as one, to join with the Senator from New Jersey in condemning such letters.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I desire to thank the Senator from Kansas for his contribution to the RECORD. I have a number; in fact, many hundreds of similar letters. Let me quote from one of the hundreds of such communications I have received, from Ernest L. Smithers, Maplewood, N. J., who writes as follows, January 17, 1919:

I attach herewith three envelopes which contained letters written to my son, Eric F., who is with his brother, a lieutenant in the Twenty-ninth Division, One hundred and fifteenth Infantry, American Expeditionary Forces in France. I may say that at least 25 letters sent to Eric by his mother, myself, and friends, written during the months of August, September, and October, have been returned to us, and they are still coming in. You will see the notation on the envelopes is "Sick. C. P. O. Directory Section."

The facts of the case are that my son was taken sick in August, 1918, and was in a hospital for two or three months, which was just the time when he needed his letters from home. We had been informed, like others, that it was vitally important to keep up the morale of the Army. With this point in mind, both Mrs. Smithers and myself and many of his friends forwarded letters regularly twice a week, only to have them returned, undelivered, and marked "Sick."

It certainly does seem like a great misfortune for letters to be returned in this manner, especially when a boy in the Army is taken sick and is in a hospital. Going through a period of this kind needs consolation, and the only consolation are his letters from his parents and friends at home.

My family is so distressed that letters written to our boy were handled in this way, and he was allowed to think that he had been entirely forgotten, that I feel it only right to bring this matter to your attention.

I feel constrained to cite another case from the hundreds which have been brought to my attention. R. Ireton, Camden, N. J., writes, January 23, 1919, as follows:

My son has received no mail of any kind for four months, although I am writing to him several times every week. Is there any excuse for this treatment? He received his last mail October 12, while in action at the front, with German shells falling all around him.

He was wounded October 21 and sent to a hospital at Blois, France, and since in a camp 12 kilometers from Le Mares, but has not had a piece of mail for four months now. Talk about German cruelty! Can you find much worse than wounded and sick men and their mail and pay kept away from them? He begs to know if we are living or dead with the "flu."

He has received no pay since July and we have not received any allotments since then, either. He can not even get the money we have sent him from home. He was wounded in August and received no mail for two months. He has not received his Christmas box, sent through the Red Cross. * * * Shouldn't they know that letters and a Christmas box from home are the most important things, next to life itself, to a wounded man thousands of miles away from home?

Here is a single paragraph from a communication from another constituent, Walter S. Smith, Jersey City, who inclosed the envelope of a letter sent a son, Corpl. Edwin E. Smith, in France, which came back marked "Sick." The writer says:

It is not my purpose to annoy you with needless complaints, but I would be obliged if you would take a look at inclosed envelope, which tells a story of a letter of cheer denied a soldier boy because he unfortunately was ill, and said letter dragged 3,000 miles back to the sender.

Words are literally inadequate to describe one's emotions in reading such letters from the parents of the boys overseas. It is incredible that the sick and wounded soldiers of a great Nation should be the victims of such brutality!

It must not for a moment be thought that I am presenting only rare cases. My files exhibit hundreds of letters of the same tenor, and I have no doubt every Senator on this floor can say the same. In other words, the postal service of the Army in France was lamentably inefficient, and not the slightest effort seems to have been made to improve it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, without undertaking to fix the responsibility—although I hope with the Senator that the responsibility will be fixed at some time—let me say that I hold in my hand a postal order which was bought by me here in Washington on the 22d day of June, 1918, and forwarded to a little nephew, who was not quite 18, and who was sick in a hospital in France. It was sent to him because he had received no pay during his service in France. This postal order was sent to him at his address at the hospital which was known. His unit was given, his name was given, and there was no question but that he could be easily identified if only an effort was made to do so. He was killed in action on the 18th of July. This postal order was received by me about 10 days ago, returned in the same envelope in which I sent it, marked "Not known."

There was absolutely no excuse for anything of that kind. His mother received a letter from him some time the latter part of October saying that he had recovered from his illness in the hospital and rejoicing that he had joined his unit and was going to the battle front. A few days after that she received a telegram from the office of The Adjutant General that he had been killed in action on the 18th or possibly the 20th of July; and two or three weeks after that, after I had taken the matter up here to try to trace up the matter, the mother received another telegram from the office of The Adjutant General wanting to know where she had gotten the information that her son had been killed in action.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. WEEKS. I think it will not be without interest for me to say that when the Post Office appropriation bill was under consideration in committee, I asked some questions of the Second Assistant Postmaster General, under whose direction the Foreign Mail Service is conducted. In making some explanation about the responsibility for the poor service, he suggested that, as of course is known, the War Department was responsible for the service after the mail left the docks in this country. The next day some employees of the Post Office Department came to my office with a very considerable number of letters which had been mailed in this country more than six months before, and had gone to France. The envelopes were stamped "unknown," and the letters returned to this country about three months before they were brought to my office. I was informed by these postal employees that there were a large number of letters of that character in the office of The Adjutant General in Washington, which had been lying there for three months, with apparently no attempt to deliver them or return them to the writers.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, we all know that the postal service of the Army in France was lamentably inefficient, and not the slightest effort seems to have been made to improve it.

Can anything more grossly stupid or heartless be imagined? Though accurately addressed to the soldier, with the name and number of his unit plainly indicated, the envelopes are marked "Sick," and the letters, instead of following the poor soldier to the hospital, are shipped back to America unread, unopened, undelivered.

Who is responsible for the delay in the payment of the soldiers' compensation? If any official dare assert that there is no such delay, let him come to my office and I will place my files at his disposal. There is such delay, prolonged delay in numerous cases, delay that is inexcusable. In one of the letters from which I have just quoted is the statement "he has received no pay since July," seven months ago.

Let me briefly cite another case, which not only illustrates the War Department's slipshod methods in this matter but in certain others to which I shall invite attention in these remarks. Writing from Prospect Plains, N. J., January 20, 1919, M. V. Landmann, speaking of a certain case, says:

Perhaps the records in this department are something like those of the Casualty Division of the War Department, where Miss Bagley (Mrs. Falconer's secretary) was assured late in December that as they had no record of Pvt. Willard Snedeker's being wounded, his wound, if any, must have been a slight one. As a matter of fact, he was so severely wounded in action October 3 that his leg was amputated above the knee October 4, but the parents have never received any notification. He arrived penniless but cheerful—not having been paid for many months—in New York January 5, and through the kindness of the Salvation Army was able to send a postal to his mother to let her know of his arrival.

A grateful country, indeed! This soldier, minus a leg, unpaid for many months for his services in France, returned to his native land without a penny in his pocket with which to purchase a postal card in order to notify his mother of his arrival. How do we expect to develop patriotism in the minds of our young men in the years to come in view of these things?

Another constitutent of mine—Mrs. Robert Daly King, of East Orange, N. J.—writes me, January 17, 1919, as follows:

It has come to my actual knowledge that our soldiers are not receiving their pay, and I know of no way to remedy this disgraceful fact than to make known to those who represent us our displeasure at this condition, register our protest, and ask that justice be done. * * * The soldiers of France, to whom we give high praise, will not fight without pay. So with England, and doubtless with other lands; but our men give their lives with all bravery and never falter in their loyalty to their country, without a murmur of complaint at the rank injustice being done.

Another constituent of mine—Alfred V. C. Genung, jr., of East Orange, N. J.—writes me, January 25, 1919, to the following effect:

My son, Ralph C. Genung, private, of One hundred and twelfth Heavy Field Artillery, Battery C, Twenty-ninth Division, has been out of funds since October, borrowing right and left, we, in the meantime, endeavoring to get funds to him through the Guarantee Trust Co., of New York, all this due to his not being paid by the War Department. How long would civilians working for the Government go without funds as our sons have been forced to do? And Army rules force them to hold their tongues as to their properly due stipend, and that small, as you well know.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. With the permission of the Senator, I should like to read an extract from a letter from a soldier of the Third Trench Mortar Battalion, Ninth Division, Third Artillery:

Mother, I have been here for about seven months, and never have had a pay day yet, and we sure have been having a pretty tough time. It certainly looks like Uncle Sam has forgotten his boys in the trenches; but, oh, if he will carry me back to my dear mother he can have what he owes me.

I want to state in the same connection that the paper that prints this letter also prints an account of the death of this boy from pneumonia in France.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, we Americans talk much of our liberality to our soldiers. Does it ever occur to us to get their viewpoint? Visit their camps, and this is the pessimistic song you will hear, sung to the tune of "Glory, Glory, Hallelujah":

All we get is thirty dollars,
All we get is thirty dollars,
All we get is thirty dollars,
But we don't get a blank blank cent.

Fifteen dollars for allotment,
Fifteen dollars for allotment,
Fifteen dollars for allotment,
And we only have fifteen dollars left.

Seven dollars for insurance,
Seven dollars for insurance,
Seven dollars for insurance,
And we only have eight dollars left.

Five dollars for a liberty bond,
Five dollars for a liberty bond,
Five dollars for a liberty bond,
And we only have three dollars left.

Three dollars for the laundry,
Three dollars for the laundry,
Three dollars for the laundry,
And we don't get a blank blank cent.

All we do is sign the pay roll,
All we do is sign the pay roll,
All we do is sign the pay roll,
And we don't get a blank blank cent.

As a matter of fact, our soldiers are returning to civil life absolutely penniless and in many cases with back pay due them. Furthermore, they are wandering about the streets in complete ignorance as to where they shall make further insurance and liberty bond payments in case they should earn sufficient money for that purpose, but there is absolutely no one in authority to enlighten them and no one who seems to care a picayune regarding their future in that respect.

Regarding this and similar matters, I understand Gen. Crowder, the Provost Marshal General, prepared a systematic plan whereby the various draft boards were to be clothed with jurisdiction in the premises, looking after the discharged soldiers, and furnishing them with aid and advice concerning their material welfare. This plan failed to receive the approval of the War Department, and now the soldiers to a large extent are at sea without chart or compass.

Never was there so much need of sympathy and care as at the present time, following the return of these boys to civil life. Gen. Crowder's plan was practical and would have prevented the unspeakable conditions that now exist.

The re-creation of these draft boards as Government agencies to meet and solve the soldiers' problems was an excellent proposition and would have restored normal conditions almost immediately, because the men would have come under the influence of the home atmosphere and their necessities would have been adequately appraised, understood, and adjusted.

But Gen. Crowder's proposals were, unfortunately, not adopted by the War Department.

We have provided 30 days' pay for the discharged soldiers, and the senior Senator from Arizona offered an amendment for 60 days' pay. This would have been very costly and would not have met the problem. The greater number of our soldiers do not want charity, particularly the men with jobs awaiting them. But the man out of employment wants to be helped until he gets on his feet, and meanwhile his family, if he has one, must be cared for.

Why not provide that these draft boards shall assist the men so situated to secure employment, supplying them and their families, if in actual need, with sufficient funds to sustain them for one, two, three, or even six months, until employment is obtained?

To return to the question of the ignorance of our soldiers concerning future payments on liberty bonds, and so forth, it is quite clear that under existing conditions such payments as have been made will, in many cases, be entirely lost to the soldiers, with the Government Treasury the gainer to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

In many cases, I understand, shrewd and unscrupulous speculators are hanging around the debarkation camps, buying up these bonds at greatly reduced figures, in effect, robbing our boys in khaki simply because they do not know in what direction to turn for advice and protection.

Who, Mr. President, is responsible for the gross delay in the payment of soldiers' allotments and allowances to mothers, wives, and other dependents? As unspeakably inefficient as the War Risk Insurance Bureau has been, much of the blame must rest upon the War Department.

As I understand the situation, the soldier's compulsory allotment is limited to $15, which is under the control of the War Risk Insurance Bureau. If the soldier voluntarily makes an additional allotment, the Quartermaster Department handles the job—or mishandles it. Since last June, when the War Department stepped in to assume charge of this branch of the allotment proposition, to the great confusion of the whole system, there has been nothing but delay, delay, and yet more delay.

Again, let me suggest, if any official of either the War Risk Insurance Bureau or the War Department questions the existence of these appalling delays, let him visit my office and my files will be placed at his disposal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no question in the world about the statements of the Senator on that subject until recently, but I think the present Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, Col. Lindsley, has considerably improved the situation recently.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have observed no evidence of it. I still have the complaints coming in daily.

This whole question of procrastination on the part of the Government in the payment of allotments and allowances to suffering, starving mothers, wives, and children of soldiers constitutes the chief tragedy of the war, so far as America is concerned.

In this matter of the heartless conduct of the Government, let me quote a letter from a mother in my State, which, in simple language, speaks more eloquently than can I or any other Senator on this floor. Mrs. J. E. Romaine, Maywood, N. J., writes me as follows:

I am in receipt of a communication from the Treasury Department, Bureau of War Risk Insurance, stating that the allotment and allowance of my son made out to me, which was paid in full to me to September 30 for $25, had been overpaid by the Government, as he was killed on the 25th of September. The demand is made upon me to refund to the Treasury Department $4.17.

I was not aware that the soldiers were employed by the Government by the day or hour. If you, dear Senator, were employing a man by the month and he was away sick or had died a few days before his month was up, would you deduct from his salary these few days? I, as poor as I am, would feel that I was in honor bound to pay this trivial $4.17. Dear sir, what would you advise—return the $4.17 or not?

What a picture of pathos! And, too, on the other hand, what an exhibition of brutal asininity on the part of the Government! Has it become such a Cheap John affair that it must hound the heartbroken mothers of the land in cases like this?

I shall not detain the Senate by quoting further from the hundreds of letters in my files, begging for aid in securing expeditious action upon allotment-and-allowance claims. The pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD would not suffice to present even a small fraction of them.

Who is responsible for the delays in reporting casualties, and why should months elapse before relatives in this country are informed of the wounding, the illness, or the deaths of loved ones in France?

Is there a Senator on the floor who can not produce hundreds of letters from constituents conveying heart-rending complaints of this kind?

Let me cite a case which has almost a comical phase. A young constituent of mine was wounded in France some months ago, lay in a hospital for weeks, recovered sufficiently to be sent to America, and reached his home in Jersey City. Here, after a time, upon answering a ring of the door bell, he was handed a telegram from the War Department, advising his mother that he had been wounded—an event which had taken place early in the fall.

Here is a typical letter, Mr. President; and if any Senator can listen to the reading of it without the blush of shame mantling his cheeks, then must he possess a heart of adamant. Martin J. Higgins, a member of the staff of the Sunday Call, Newark, writes me as follows:

There is a widow who has been in my election district—a Mrs. Ellen Sissons, 14 North Third Street, Newark—whose son, Pvt. George A. Sissons, Company L, Twenty-third United States Infantry, died as the result of wounds received in action on July 29, 1918. His mother was not notified of his death until New Year's Day. The soldier in his last letter to her informed her he had made out an allotment and had insured himself, making her the beneficiary.

This poor woman has never received a penny from the Government, and she is greatly in need. She is proud of the fact that she was honored by giving her only son for the cause of humanity, but thinks the Government is neglectful in not doing its part by sending her what is rightly hers—the allotment and insurance. It is nearly six months since the soldier died, and yet on January 4, 1919, the War Risk Bureau informed her that as far as they knew her son was alive and well, at the same time advising her to communicate with the War Department for "further information."

In the colloquial language of the street, can you beat it? This broken-hearted mother, after being kept in the dark six months concerning the fate of her only son, is finally, January 1, 1919, advised by the War Department that he died last summer, meanwhile allowing her to suffer for lack of the necessaries of life. Three days later the War Risk Bureau advises her that it knows nothing of the fate of her boy, and turns her over to the tender (?) mercies of the War Department.

> Can such things be and overcome us like a summer cloud
> Without our special wonder?

Multiply these cases by 50,000 and you can form some idea of the magnitude of the Government's dereliction in this matter, of vital concern to a vast army of patriotic yet sorrowing mothers, wives, and sisters in America.

Who is responsible for the total lack of adequate sanitary hospital facilities for our wounded and invalid soldiers who have recently been brought over, and who are largely distributed in various improvised hospitals, so called, throughout the country?

Why did not the War Department make adequate provision for the awful yet inevitable contingency? Did they expect this to be a bloodless war, a war of words only, a war of diplomatic "notes"? Did they expect the pen to prove mightier than the sword and that the President's brilliant fulminations of rhetoric and syntax would put the Huns hors du combat without the loss of life or the shedding of blood?

Fatal hope! Almost as fatal as the expectation that through the agency of a league of nations all future wars will be prevented.

While upon this unpleasant theme, let me ask, Why did not the War Department or other Government agency make some serious effort or take proper precautions to keep the influenza epidemic from our shores and from our camps last fall, the result being the death of tens of thousands of splendid young Americans, who deserved a better fate?

And who was responsible for the incredible neglect to provide proper hospital facilities to meet such contingencies? I shall not dwell in detail upon the horrors of that distressing period, but I can not refrain from mentioning a single incident.

One of my constituents died of the epidemic at Camp Humphreys, just below Washington. His body having been withheld from his relatives for nearly a week, I inquired the cause. The camp commander referred me to a near-by undertaker. The latter casually informed me that he had held the body until he could accumulate a carload for shipment, and a few hours previously he had shipped north 178 bodies.

Who is responsible for this lamentable state of affairs? Surely there can be no doubt upon that point. The same fatal policy of procrastination and unpreparedness characterizing every phase of the war, in its relation to the living, has been employed in dealing with the sick, wounded, dying, and dead. No such chapter of inexcusable neglect and inefficiency can be found in the pages of this or any other civilized nation's history.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the splendid speech of the Senator in dealing with these matters; but I can not help but wonder at the Senator's vote the other day in favor of turning over to this very department the settlement of two billion seven hundred millions of contracts. It seems to me that if this department is of the kind that the Senator describes, surely the Government ought not to turn over to it the right to settle these contracts, amounting to $2,700,000,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I quite appreciate that the Senator has asked the question in order to embarrass me.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all; quite to the contrary. I asked the question for this purpose, if the Senator will yield to me: I am intensely interested in seeing that every contractor in this country shall get every dollar to which he is entitled, but at the same time I am intensely interested in seeing that the Government's interests shall be protected in settling with contractors; and I believe that the Senator made a mistake in voting to turn over to this department, which he declares to be inefficient, the absolute power and right to settle this tremendous amount of money in contracts.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will give the Senator entire credit, upon his statement, for sincerity and good faith in interrupting me. I know that he feels very strongly upon this question, and so do I; but let me point out to him—and I do not want to prolong this discussion; I simply want to finish my subject and get through with my speech, which I want to have go in the RECORD as a protest against the conditions which exist at the present time—but, answering the Senator, let me say to him that that measure which was enacted the other day provided that in the settlement of these contracts through the machinery of the War Department which has already been established, which has already been paid for by the taxpayers, if it failed in any way to do justice to the contractor, or failed in any way to do justice to the Government, there was an appeals commission, and it was provided that both the Government and the contractors could appeal to that tribunal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me again, I am glad to hear this statement of views on the part of the Senator, because I understand that in conference the appeals commission to which the Senator refers is about to be eliminated, and I feel sure that we will have the able assistance of the Senator in keeping in the bill that appeals commission, so necessary to protect the interests of the Government.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I am thoroughly in favor of the principle of the appeals commission. Of the method in which it was written in the bill I did not approve. I believed that the original jurisdiction should be in the War Department, a department to which has been appropriated $34,000,000,000 by the vote of the Senator from Tennessee, a department which has been intrusted with all the war materials and all the war supplies, and which has the facts and the machinery for the settlement of these matters. I believe that the primary jurisdiction should exist in the War Department, although I believe in many cases they have been inefficient.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator understand that this same inefficient department of which he is speaking now demands that the appeals commission shall go out of this bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I shall be very glad to support the Senator from Tennessee in seeing that it stays in the bill.

Who is responsible for the fact that many of our soldiers upon their discharge are compelled to turn in their best uniforms and go forth into the world, and back to their home towns and their family circles, wearing frayed, ragged, deloused uniforms, looking more like tramps than the trim defenders of a grateful country?

Mr. President, I have been handed a letter by a Senator from a western soldier returning home. He says:

Under separate cover I am sending you a pair of shoes. These shoes I have worn since last July in France, in the trenches, and upon my arrival in St. Louis they refused to give me a new pair. I was just wondering if this would be the treatment that the rest of the boys would receive when they return home after going through hell for Uncle Sam. I believe that if you Senators would put forth a little more effort looking up things of this kind, instead of a lot of things you do, you would be working in the right direction.

Mr. President, I do not want to be sensational, but I asked that Senator to give me one of that pair of shoes, and there it is [producing a shoe], and I will mark it "Exhibit 900,000" for the Senators on this floor to examine.

Who is responsible for the failure to adequately mark the graves of American soldiers in France? I am aware that there is an organization for this purpose, the Graves Registration Service, but I am convinced the work of that agency is not being properly performed, and that if existing methods are not improved, American families who have lost loved ones on the other side are doomed to receive a grievous shock.

A recent issue of the Washington Star contained a letter from Chief Justice Walter I. McCoy, of the District of Columbia Supreme Court, who lost a son in France. Judge McCoy states that his boy's grave is marked only with a wooden cross, and that the name, with initials omitted, which was written upon it, was almost obliterated by the rain and would soon have been indecipherable had not a visitor to the spot made it more legible. Judge McCoy concluded his letter as follows:

This communication may also warn those whose relatives are buried in France to take steps that will save them great distress of mind.

The judge says he attempted to have a simple stone placed on his son's grave, but this request was denied.

In behalf of the mourning kinsmen of those who made the supreme sacrifice in France I demand that the War Department take immediate steps to so mark the soldiers' graves that the names will not be obliterated by the spring showers, as they are likely to be under existing conditions.

Who was responsible for the condition of affairs at Walter Reed Hospital in this city, and similar institutions elsewhere, whereby crippled soldiers were compelled to do their own laundry work?

Who is responsible for the neglect of wounded soldiers on shipboard as set forth in a recent issue of the Washington Star, as follows:

According to the narrative of this witness, whose name can not be used because he is a soldier of the United States on reserve, no provision whatever is made for the care of one-armed and one-legged men. These must attend to their own wants or starve. No waiters are assigned them. No arrangements are made to help them into or out of their bunks, and no organized efforts are made to assist them in navigating the deck in bad weather.

"They must go to the mess room for their meals or go without them," said the returned soldier. "They are placed in the position of the hog who was told to root or die."

Who is responsible for the failure of camp and post commanders to comply with the instructions embraced in Circular No. 77, directing the discharge of any enlisted man who is "needed to resume employment in an industry or occupation in which there is urgent need of his services"?

A constituent of mine writes me as follows concerning the situation at Camp Dix, in my own State, where he has a son:

Camp headquarters company alone has at present about 350 soldiers, retained there for clerical work, with practically little to do. So little is doing, in fact, that the boys in khaki are instructed by their officers to pretend to be very busy whenever visitors appear upon the scene, whether there is anything in the nature of business or not. Such action, to say the least, is repugnant to the American ideas of honesty. My son informs me that less than a score of clerks could easily perform all the work. It therefore not only seems a shame but a rank injustice that this large force should be retained at camp headquarters, especially when it is known that the major part of them are high-salaried men at home, with their jobs open for them immediately upon their release from the United States Army.

I have a case before me of a young man at a post in North Carolina, who was employed as a draftsman by a shipbuilder, who now needs his services badly, and is urging his discharge. The commander of the post refuses, saying:

It is impossible at this time to discharge class A men, as this post is now below the minimum required for these defenses.

As a matter of fact, this corporal is a member of the band. Does the fort commander expect to maintain his "defenses" down in North Carolina by "soothing the savage breast" of the Tar Heelers with music, or is he merely figuring on sufficient dance music for the gallant defenders of that advanced post?

Meanwhile, the shipbuilder is denied the services of this expert draftsman, and the family of the latter is compelled to live on a corporal's meager pay.

The War Department, it is true, is discharging soldiers by the tens and hundreds of thousands; but a reasonable degree of common sense and judgment should be exercised, to the end that soldiers badly needed in the industrial world should be given instant release.

Who is responsible for the order designating silver chevrons for the officers and men whose service was confined to this country, while the men who served overseas wear gold chevrons? Why is this distinction made? Is there any degree in the quality of sacrifice made when men left their business, their families, and their homes to go to camp and undergo the menace of influenza, pneumonia, and other dread diseases, whether they went to France or not?

Was there anything in their contract with the Government which limited their service to this country? No; they were under orders to go wherever sent, and they so understood it, and almost to a man were anxious to join the overseas army.

Nearly 2,000,000 American soldiers never saw France. Two million more did, but of this number 1,300,000 were not actually engaged, only 700,000 having reached the firing line.

Yet 2,000,000 men will wear the gold chevrons for overseas service, while nearly as many more will wear the silver chevron, though quite as patriotic, quite as brave, and quite as willing to go overseas as their comrades in arms.

Why should the War Department put this badge of disappointment on any American soldier and compel him to wear it? Give them all gold chevrons or take them off altogether.

Let every man be given a button to indicate his military service, and if a distinction is to be made let it be in favor of those who were on the front line only in France and actually under fire.

Some one has thus phrased his criticism of the War Department's discrimination:

Darling, here's your soldier bold!
Silver stripes instead of gold
Shine upon his sleeve to-day,
'Cause he did not sail away.
But, my darling, do not bleat,
For he did not get cold feet;
Simply did as he was told:
Silver stripes instead of gold.

I might, Mr. President, extend almost indefinitely this catalogue of the War Department's delinquencies in the treatment of our soldiers, who have sacrificed all the comforts of home for the rigors and dangers of military life, actuated by motives of the highest character.

Let me conclude the list by asking who is to blame for the fact that our soldiers when released from the service are not given proper discharge papers such as have been employed in previous wars—something strong, attractive, and altogether worth while—parchment, if possible—something to be shown to friends and relatives, hung in frames, perchance, and handed down to their children and their children's children?

Instead, if I am correctly advised, they are given flimsy slips of cheap paper, typewritten or mimeographed, which, when carried in the pocket for a few days, shrivel up to nothingness and find their way into some convenient wastebasket.

This, I take it, is but another evidence not only of the Government's unpreparedness, but also of the War Department's utter lack of a definite policy regarding the treatment of our soldiers as human beings rather than as mere cogs in the mechanism of warfare. The psychology of life seems never to have been recognized as an element in our Military Establishment.

The last communication I shall present for the consideration of the Senate is one from a citizen of Newark, in my State, who has been discharged from the military service, and who, recently, has come in contact, to a very considerable extent, with soldiers just out of the Army. The views he presents are so pertinent, and so suggestive as well, that I shall ask the Secretary to read the letter:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

I trust it is not presumptuous on my part to write you about some of the matters that have been observed by me since I came home. I have been giving some assistance to the local city employment bureau endeavoring to find employment for soldiers and sailors who have been discharged from the service, and in this way have listened to a great deal of the soldier talk and sentiment.

There is considerable bitter talk about the Government and particularly of the War Department, and running with this is a lot of socialistic thought and expression, and mostly so from the men who have been across.

Their main complaint is that the Government took them away from their employment or vocations, has given them $30 a month for war service, and then as soon as the armistice was signed has dumped them back in their own towns without a dollar in their pockets, and with the bottom dropped out of employment.

And then they will sarcastically refer to the amount of wages that have been paid in the shipyards and elsewhere whilst they have been away, and to the fact that the Government is going to charge off $1,000,000,000 to profit and loss on the building of merchant ships, which never carried a ton of cargo or a single man across.

And the idea that has been suggested of giving employment to our soldiers in the construction of dams and reclaiming arid lands, or building roads—all unskilled labor work—has been somewhat repugnant.

The soldier that is coming back is generally a different man to what he was when he went away. I find, as a rule, he is very temperamental. He has had a peculiar experience. He was pampered until he felt that he was real man and one of the saviors of his country to be. He has been closer to his God than ever before. He has been away from newspapers and magazines and has been left a great deal to his own reflections; and the thoughts and ideas that have generated in the camps and trenches are the uppermost and most important to him, and a lot of his talk has been socialistic.

And then this soldier man knows of all that the British and French are doing for their returning soldiers, and he freely quotes the facts that the British and Canadians give 320 acres of land and loan $2,500 to any veteran who wants to farm, and that they are giving $750 to a veteran to finish a college course, and also that they are giving their veterans from two to six months' pay upon being discharged to purchase civilian clothes and give an opportunity to look around for employment, and he talks of the vocational schools that the French and British have established.

And the soldier man is sore because he has not been decorated, and he tells you that the British and French are all wearing their bars and medals, and he can not understand how it is that the Secretary of War is promoting officers who never left the camps, but can not promote those who were recommended for distinguished war service because the armistice had been signed.

And the soldier can not understand why civilian traffic managers and draft boards should be recipients of war medals when the man who has been in active service and under fire is not even suggested or thought of, except in such cases where the British or French Governments have decorated our men.

And I find that a large number of these soldier men have bought liberty bonds and don't even know how to get them—don't know who to apply to to have them delivered.

And the soldier man has been told to keep up his war-risk insurance by his officers and through orders and the press, but no one seems to know where he can pay the premiums after he is discharged.

These things in particular, but a whole lot of complaints about back pay and allotments which have been made public, seems to be the wail of the discharged soldier.

It was suggested at a meeting of service men held a few days ago in this city that the Government should authorize some kind of a button or distinguishing mark to be worn with civilian clothes by the veterans of this war.

I am writing this to you, knowing the interest you have taken in the American soldier, and knowing your aggressive spirit in behalf of justice and Americanism, and I feel sure that you will take some active measures to have something done to remedy these conditions.

It does not seem reasonable to me that the American Government should suffer in comparison with the British or French in the treatment of the men who have been fighting its battles, and the most unpleasant thought of all is that these millions of men should have any opportunity in the future to speak reflectingly upon the treatment accorded them after they had made the supreme sacrifice.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The remarkable letter which has just been read I commend to the careful consideration of the Senate, the War Department, and the country at large.

In this plain narrative, Mr. President, I have extenuated nothing, nor has aught been set down in malice. I may not only assert that the half has not been told, but may go further and declare that the one-thousandth part has not even been suggested or hinted at bearing upon the crassly neglectful and inconsiderate conduct of the War Department in its treatment of our gallant soldiers, especially those who have "fought the good fight" to the best of their ability, have won, many of them, imperishable honors in active service, but are now treated as little better than derelicts, for whom the Nation has no further use.

How far this deplorable state of affairs is due to actual inefficiency and how much to that monumental lack of foresight and forethought which have always characterized this administration it is impossible for me to say. But the facts which I have presented are nothing but facts, and we know that facts are very stubborn things.

It is all very well, Mr. President, for us to felicitate ourselves as a Nation that the United States played a major rôle, in the final analysis, in the winning of this war.

It is all very well for the President to break the precedents of a century and a third, that he may head triumphal processions in foreign capitals, sleep in the chambers of royalty, dine off of gold plates in the palaces of the modern Cæsars, and have his photograph taken standing in line with kings, queens, and princesses. Those are interesting and perhaps alluring pictures. But what of the American private who returns to his native shores, unhonored and unsung, dismissed from the service, frequently without a dollar in his pocket? Is he entitled to less consideration than an old dray horse, his days of usefulness over, who is turned out into a green pasture and told to eat his fill?

No, Mr. President, until the War Department rises to the occasion, realizes that the private soldier is a human being, actuated by the same emotions which dominate presidents and kings, I am not in favor of granting the honor accorded alone to Washington, Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan to any American soldiers now living.

When the privates and officers lesser than those referred to in the bill cited at the beginning of my remarks (S. 5278) are properly provided for, then I may consider the propriety of according higher honors to the heads of our Military Establishment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator speaks of it as the Chamberlain bill. If the Senator will examine the RECORD, he will find that at the time I introduced that bill I stated the fact, and it appears in the RECORD, that it was introduced at the request of the Secretary of War and not as emanating from me.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will correct the RECORD by referring to it as Senate bill 5278. I stated in the beginning of my remarks that it was introduced by request.

Mr. President, I know it is a common practice to be intolerant in public criticism. I have endeavored to avoid this in my remarks to-day.

The Army has had a greater job than the Navy, and the difficulties have mounted high. Secretary Baker has done much to relieve serious situations. I believe that the War Department has been right intentioned, but conspicuously lacking in foresight.

I have endeavored to present to the Senate a picture of the situation affecting the common soldier that demands instant and drastic action. The Military Affairs Committee of this Senate and the Secretary of War should immediately confer and adopt some plan to alleviate existing conditions.

If in what I have said I can create a public sentiment and instill into the Secretary of War and Army officials a proper sense of their obligations to the men in the ranks, about to lay down their arms and return to civil life, I shall feel that I have rendered a public service.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I beg to repeat my opening assertion, that I am not willing to support the measure which has formed the text for my remarks, conferring the permanent rank of general upon the Chief of Staff and two other officers, and that of lieutenant general upon two or three more, until existing conditions in the Army are remedied—until adequate provision is made for subordinate officers who have rendered heroic service overseas, and for the rank and file of our splendid Army of fighting men.

Mr. BANKHEAD obtained the floor.

Mr. STERLING. I ask the Senator from Alabama to yield to me for just a moment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will yield.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, in connection with the very able address delivered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] and in connection with the correspondence which he has read and has had read at the desk, I wish to read an extract or two from a letter received from a lieutenant in France only yesterday. It calls attention to one particular phase of the failure of the Government to make payment to soldiers and discloses the reason for such failure. I read as follows:

The mail proposition has been the greatest curse to us all. A man can go without proper or sufficient food, march in wet clothing, or even fight without proper ammunition and equipment if necessary, but it is a mighty hard matter to keep up the morale of the men if they don't hear from home. Personally I went without mail for two months, during which time my wife was very ill. She sent me a cable October 22 that reached me December 6. I am in receipt of two letters to-day—written August 11 and September 12, respectively. Nor is this condition exceptional. The lad acting as my orderly at this time has not had a letter from his home in North Carolina since September 15; and I am certain that a good half of my company has been treated in like manner.

His reference to a cablegram reminds me of a cablegram sent under my own observation on the 15th day of January to a soldier boy belonging to the marines in France. It was plainly addressed, as many a letter had been addressed, to that young man. He writes a week later, and he had not yet received the cablegram announcing the death of his sister here in Washington.

Calling attention to that particular portion of his letter which refers to the pay and the reasons given for deferred payments, I read:

When a man is wounded the system demands that his service record be sent on to the hospital, and as it goes by mail it never reaches him, and as over half of this company has been through the hospitals nearly half of them are here without service record, as they have never reached here after being returned from the hospitals by mail. This means but one thing—every man who was wounded has not been paid since the last payment of his wages prior to receiving his wound. They do not pay a man who has no service record. A great percentage of our men have not been paid for over five months.

It is well known that there are temptations on all sides for the soldier, but I say most emphatically that if the morals of the boys have been affected no greater cause can be found than the deficient mail service. If the boy hears regularly from his mother he is better fitted to maintain his cleaner attitude toward life. In fact, Senator, this matter has grown to be a passion to me, because I have seen the effects first hand.

All I have to say further is that it will be a bad, a grievous, thing, indeed, if the boys who have enlisted with such a fine spirit of enthusiasm and patriotism and in a great cause should now have their morale imperiled and their ardor and patriotism cooled by reason of the fact that through this want of care, and one might almost say want of solicitude for their well-being, and want of supervision on the part of the War Department they have been and are yet denied the precious privilege of hearing from home.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, having listened to the lamentations of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] I am almost in doubt as to whether this country won the war or not. Did we win the war? How on God Almighty's earth did we win the war if the War Department is responsible for the mistakes, stupidity, and derelictions that have been charged and urged against it?

It is sometimes a wonder to me how we did accomplish this great achievement under the conditions that existed here in the United States Senate and in the Committee on Military Affairs of this body. At one time on that committee, I alone, of all the Democrats on the committee who attended its meetings, stood by the War Department against three of the most prominent Democrats on the committee, with the Republicans against it all the time, here on its legislative program on this floor.

Now, the Senator from New Jersey criticizes the War Department for what? For the alleged failure in mail service to deliver mail to the soldiers in the field; for the failure to pay the soldiers; for the failure to furnish hospital facilities; for the failure to pay insurance; for the failure to bury the soldiers and erect monuments, while the war was being waged and the Army was advancing, fighting victoriously.

All these things are charged, and what for? What can be accomplished now if there was proof of the allegations here and the charges made? Why is it all done?

The Senator has accused the War Department of being responsible for the severe winter last year. He has held the War Department responsible for the introduction of the epidemic of influenza into these United States and the failure to suppress it and to alleviate the condition of the people after it spread. Why is all that done, and where is there any foundation, in fact, for it?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KIRBY. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I criticized the War Department for failure to take preventive measures in time for the influenza. I should like to have the Senator answer whether he denies the fact that soldiers' pay is being delayed?

Mr. KIRBY. I do not deny the fact that some soldiers have not received pay promptly, but I do deny that the pay of the soldiers as a body has been delayed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does he deny the fact that the Postal Service has broken down?

Mr. KIRBY. I deny it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does he deny the fact that allotments are delayed?

Mr. KIRBY. I deny it, so far as it relates to the great bulk of them.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the Senator will deal with facts, I am perfectly willing that he shall answer.

Mr. KIRBY. I shall answer you whether you are willing or not about the matter.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator from Arkansas will yield, I desire to say a word. I give the Senator from Arkansas entire and unrestricted credit for standing for the War Department at all times in the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, but I desire to say whenever there was any voting done by the members of the committee, I was there and invariably voted with the War Department, because I thought it was doing the best it could under the circumstances. I do not wish the Senator to be misunderstood.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, the criticism is not leveled at the Senator from Montana. The Senator from New Jersey criticizes the War Department for not furnishing trained nurses and physicians to men who have lost an arm or a leg and are coming home already recovered perhaps from the injury. He criticizes the War Department because of the lack of hospital facilities and beds here, when the papers say there are 50,000 more beds already provided than have been used by the returning soldiers. He criticizes the War Department for not sending the bodies of the boys who unfortunately died in camp home the next day or the day after. He criticizes the War Department for delay in the pay roll. He does not tell you, what all the country knows, that there were not enough trained nurses and not enough doctors in the great Capital City of the Nation even to take care of the sick people who were dying with influenza here. No; nor that there were not enough coffins to bury the dead here, regardless of conditions yonder on the battle front in France. Was the War Department responsible for that condition here? It seems that the Senator expected monuments to be erected at the graves of the soldiers there while the Army was on the march, advancing in the midst of the campaign, in the face of stubborn fighting.

He complains that maybe the soldier's name had been effaced by the elements from the rude boards that had been placed at his grave. He knows what the methods for identification of these graves are. He knows that the soldiers wear a metal tag upon the wrist and that there is a metal badge with his number on it put on the board at the head of the soldier's grave that connects him with all the information the War Department has about the soldier, from his enlistment to his burial.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator has quoted it as my statement. I simply read the statement of Judge McCoy, who said that he visited the grave of his son and found it improperly marked, and asked that he might erect a stone monument there—a marker—and was denied by the War Department that privilege.

Mr. KIRBY. After the war is won, he charges that the soldiers have not been paid, that they have not had proper medical attention yonder in the hospitals, that they have not had the attention of nurses, they have been insufficiently fed, and that the graves of those killed in battle have not been properly designated by monuments, and then he criticizes the method of discharge of those soldiers returning home from overseas—says it is not done as it ought to be done. It is not done as he thinks would have been the best method of doing it. What is the trouble with the method that is being used now? They are being discharged, are they not? Just as soon as they were being discharged here in great numbers, as the War Department expected to do, there comes a protest from the great cities, saying, "You must not discharge these men in such numbers or about our places. You must take care of the interests of labor, and not discharge men to such an extent that it will interfere with the labor market and create a surplus of labor in the cities."

These are the conditions that have had to be met by the War Department.

Now, wherein is the War Department responsible for the epidemic of influenza that afflicted this country and the whole world? You would think it was directly to blame for it from the speech that has been made here on the floor to-day. How could it have been prevented? How could any one of these things been done better than it was done at that time? No man has risen on the floor and shown how it could have been done better than it was done.

It is easy enough to criticize when the entire program has been finished and when the war has been won. Yes; to say this, that, or the other might have been better done. From the sixty-three thousand four hundred and odd soldiers who went from the State of Arkansas to the war I have had complaints of about five who were not able to get letters from their homes at all; to be exact, I believe it was from only three. I have had only complaints from about a dozen or fifteen whose allowances have not been paid as they should have been paid and as they expected them to be paid, of the 63,400 of the Arkansas troops.

That is the sort of service which has been rendered, so far as I know. The people have not complained to me about these matters any more than to that extent. In the case of the four or five who had not been able to hear from their people for some time, notwithstanding the fact that their people here at home were hearing from them, I reported the matter to The Adjutant General, and he sent by courier across to the battle fields a message to the commanding officer, who was expected to deliver it to the soldier's company and to the soldier, telling him that his family were well and were hearing from him regularly.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. KIRBY. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will state to the Senator from Arkansas that when I was in France last summer I took occasion to investigate the mail matter to some extent, and I learned while there that 21 per cent of the letters which were written to soldiers were misaddressed and that 350,000 bags of mail had been sunk in the ocean, which fact might account for some of the letters which failed to reach the soldiers to whom they were addressed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KIRBY. I do.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator state what time of the year that was?

Mr. KIRBY. The Senator from Kansas stated that 21 per cent of the letters had failed of delivery because they were wrongly addressed and that 350,000 sacks of mail had been sunk at sea.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. On what date was that?

Mr. THOMPSON. That was in July and August last.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Have any been sunk since?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not advised as to that; but I think so.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, if there were——

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. KIRBY. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator whether he is familiar with the fact that thousands upon thousands of letters written by parents to their sons have been returned to the writers, with the notation upon the face of the envelope that their sons were wounded, sick in base hospital, and so and so, and finally the letters were marked "Return to the writer"?

Mr. KIRBY. I did not know that; but I do not dispute it, if the Senator from Wisconsin states it to be the fact.

Mr. LENROOT. I am receiving such letters every day. The Senator says that nothing can be accomplished by protest; but I wish to say that I have received this morning a letter from the War Department—I having protested at some previous time—saying that orders had been given to discontinue the return of such letters to the writers, but to find the addressee and to deliver the letter to him.

Mr. KIRBY. I only mention these things because I thought something ought to be said here along the line on which I have been speaking. Some of these letters, it seems, have been returned to the writers here. What else was there to be done about them if they could not find the addressee on the other side? They have brought them back; but now they are again sending them across the ocean, it appears, in order that the addressee may be found. It may be that many of these things ought not to have been done—I am not saying as to that—but what shall be done now that the war is over? The soldiers are coming back; they are being discharged; and I assume that there is as much work and chance for employment in the United States to-day as there was before the war began. Certainly the number of returning soldiers is diminished by a much larger number than I thought it would be. Two hundred and sixty-three thousand of these soldiers will not be engaged in the same occupations in which they were employed heretofore. Of the 263,000, many of them are sleeping under the soil of France, having fallen on the battle field fighting gloriously for their country; others have been cut to pieces and crippled for life.

The industrial condition of the country still exists; its soldiers are here now, and it seems to me that they might be reabsorbed in industry within a reasonable time. It is said that we are more prosperous than we were before the war began, and that the only thing which now prevents the continuation of our industries as they ought to be operated is the failure by the War Department to adjust the existing differences between contractors whose contracts were canceled because the Government did not need the material contracted for, on account of the armistice, and necessarily had to close out the contracts; and because of the failure to adjust differences between those who had informal or invalid contracts, who had performed service and furnished materials for the Government and who ought to be paid for it. The War Department came to the United States Senate and to the Military Affairs Committee about three weeks ago asking authority to adjust these matters as they ought to be adjusted.

The industrial necessities and the commercial necessities of the country demand that these matters shall be settled as speedily as possible and as fairly as it can be done, both for the contractors and in the interest of the Government. The department suggested a method that would accomplish that. The subject was referred to the Military Affairs Committee, and they debated and wrangled and had subcommittees appointed.

Finally, after about three weeks, they came in here with a bill, of which only about four or five of the Democrats of the committee were in favor. Two of the prominent Democratic members have been fighting it all the way through since the bill came into the Senate. One of the Democrats asked the Senator who was making the speech, "Do you not think if the War Department has been as bad as you say it has been, if it has failed to perform its duties to the soldiers and to the Army, and has failed in service to the country, it would be a mistake not to establish a commission to settle these differences between the contractors and the Government instead of leaving the matter in the hands of the War Department, as you propose to do by your action?" He said, "No." Yet that Senator was the Republican who has raised all this howl about the deficiencies and shortcomings and failures of the War Department in the conduct of and winning the war. The other Senator making the inquiry was a Democrat, who expressed thereby his disapproval and distrust of the War Department to fairly settle for the Government's interest these claims, which must be settled soon.

I am not going to speak much longer, but it seemed to me some Senator ought to stand by the Government here after it has won the war; that some one ought to have an interest in the conduct of the soldiers on the battle field being properly presented, and in the country getting a correct view and having a proper appreciation of all the great objects which have been accomplished. If here and there a plan has failed or has miscarried, if here and there inconvenience, delay, and injury have resulted because of something not having been done as well at that time as it now appears it might have been done, why should it be made a record here as an everlasting monument to a single failure of the War Department, which, whatever else may be said, did win this war with the Army that it organized and with the Army that was sent abroad and which was furnished subsistence, munitions, and equipment by the War Department?

The soldier, of course, is entitled to vast consideration in the matter; he did the fighting and he won the war. The soldier's rights in the Army ought to have been regarded, and they were regarded by a Nation which had as great solicitude for its soldiers as had any nation now on earth or any nation that ever has been, which was shown by every single act done on the part of the Government to take care of the soldier's interest and to promote that interest while he was there part of the fighting machine on the battle front. The Government is still so disposed and attempting to do that.

Complaint is made about nonpayment of insurance of a man who had died; that his widow or his mother had not received the insurance. It has not been stated that the insurance had been demanded; it has not been stated that the War Department had been informed that the man was dead. It may be that such was not the case.

I took up a paper this morning, which is published down in my State, and noticed a report of a case where some soldier had gone home to his wife and his mother and found they had been collecting insurance on his life for the past five months. The War Department was a little too rapid in the payment of insurance in that case. The soldier was not dead, and yet the department had been paying insurance for five months to his mother and to his widow. I did not know anything about that until I saw it in the paper this morning.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. CALDER. I know a case along the line of the Senator's statement, where a woman received her allotment five months after her husband had been discharged from the Army.

Mr. KIRBY. Well, the woman got both the allotment and a husband in that instance. She was fortunate as to her allotment. But that is, of course, an isolated case. I mentioned the other case, which was also an isolated case, to show that the criticisms generally are unwarranted.

Now, I am not going to talk further about that matter. I say the achievement of this country, going into war at the time we did, a war 3,000 miles across the sea from home, a war against a powerful enemy that must be fought in the air, on and under the earth and sea, an enemy that had whipped the other great nations of the Old World to a standstill, a war that must be fought with an army that had not been organized, that must be transported in ships that had not been built—I say the record of our accomplishment has been marvelous under the conditions as they existed and as conclusively shown by the facts as they have been developed. The War Department, notwithstanding the criticisms that have been hurled at it here and there by the opposition on the other side of the Chamber and by some of the Democratic members of the Military Affairs Committee, is entitled to great credit and to the everlasting thanks of this country for its wonderful achievement, as is the Army for the glorious achievements upon the field of battle.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, while the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] was making a speech a short time ago I referred to some correspondence which I had had with the Postmaster General. It was a rather lengthy letter, and I hesitated about putting it in the RECORD or having it read at that time; but I now ask that it be inserted in the RECORD, for it is a voice directly from the administration, which controverts one of the points recently made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the letter presented by him may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, January 11, 1919.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: You called my attention the other day to your experience with the mail to and from the American Expeditionary Forces in France, and asked if I could tell you just where the trouble at this time is.

I am inclosing herewith a letter from an Army officer which will interest you and which, I think, goes right to the heart of the trouble, namely, lack of supervision, or supervision by officers entirely unfamiliar with postal work.

Sincerely, yours,

OTTO PRAEGER,
Second Assistant Postmaster General.

LA HAYMIEX, FRANCE, December 1, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. ———: Just returned from an all-day visit to St. Mihiel, whither I went this morning on postal business, and as most of what I saw and did relates to the Postal Service, I think that perhaps I have more or less of the right kind of inspiration for a letter to yourself this evening. It was a long, cold ride both ways in a "Henry Ford," but I have succeeded in getting my feet fairly well thawed out beside madame's comfortable fireplace, and, barring the fact that my room is cold and I am wearing a heavy overcoat, I am all set for writing.

Just returned last night from a two days' absence at divisional gas school and learned that there was a big pile of mail over at our A. P. O. at St. Mihiel that was being held up from delivery on account of insufficient address. Had a "hunch" that probably some of mine might be in the pile, as well as many letters for other officers of the battalian, so secured the major's permission to go over to-day and try my luck at locating our share. Had very good success, and returned with two big bundles of letters for the officers and another big bundle for such of the men as I knew. Got back just at supper time and found all the officers together at our mess hall, and had all the sensations of a real Santa Claus for a little while. The fortunate ones were those who have only recently been transferred to the division. I do not know who is responsible for the stunt, but the mail for both officers and men has been forwarded from their previous divisions simply to the "Thirty-fifth Division." Of course, no one at the A. P. O. knows anything about where any of us are, and I found 30 big tiesacks full of first-class mail waiting for some one to come along and claim it. Found one lone private plugging along separating it alphabetically on a table. Don't know what they hope to do with it after it is separated. I spent most of the day going through the mess, with results as above stated. Found six letters for myself, including one from Cherry of October 26. Was very glad to hear from him and will answer soon. However, what I found in the beginning led me to kind of look over the whole establishment, and I found it generally pretty rotten. Out in the mail room I found Bernard Bradley and two other men who had been in the service over in the "Etats-Unis." One was on the Fort Madison and the other on the west division of the St. Paul & Portal. Needless to say we had a very good visit. I found these boys doing their end of it very well, but discovered that there was absolutely no supervision. There is a first lieutenant in charge of the A. P. O., but he was visible for only 10 minutes of the entire day. Reminded me of a postmaster in a first-class post office in the States. Said lieutenant has had no previous experience in the Postal Service, and to all appearances is attaining no present experience. Upon my return I made a report of conditions to the major, and he asked me to make up a written report on the situation. I am very willing to make the report but objected to signing it, lest I might get myself wished into the job of running the A. P. O., so the major agreed that if I would draw up the report he would sign it and send it up. Found no preparations have been made for handling the Christmas packages, which will undoubtedly begin to arrive very soon. Also discovered that whereas the A. P. O. is allowed a personnel of 20 men, it is running with only 14, and that no immediate increase has been thought of, "stuck mail" and Christmas to the contrary notwithstanding. Fine dope, and especially at a time when we are doing everything possible to keep the morale of the men at top notch. Most of the boys are looking forward to a return to America, while the probability is that they will soon be going up into Luxembourg or Germany. But there is nothing that will help so much in keeping their minds off their troubles as a prompt and regular mail service. I know, believe me.

* * * * * * *

Drop a line whenever you have time, and pass the word along to everyone else in the same connection. I think I will have the A. P. O. shook up by the time the replies come along, so that the delivery will be entirely prompt. I am,

Very truly, yours,

———— ————,
American Expeditionary Forces, France.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am wondering how much longer my brother Senators are goiong to impose upon my good nature. I am going to ask them please to let us consider the business before the Senate, for a while at least, and see how much progress we can make. We were considering section 5 of the bill as amended. I now ask the Secretary to read the section as it has been amended, in order that the section may be adopted as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the section as it has heretofore been amended.

The SECRETARY. Section 5, as amended up to this time, reads as follows:

SEC. 5. That the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, is hereby amended to provide that the term "rural post roads," as used in section 2 of said act, shall be construed to mean any public road a major portion of which is now used or forms a connecting link, not to exceed 10 miles in length, of any road or roads now or hereafter used for the transportation of the United States mails, excluding every street and road in a place having a population, as shown by the latest available Federal census, of 2,500 or more, except that portion of any such street or road along which the houses average more than 200 feet apart: Provided, That section 6 of said act be further amended as that the limitation of payments not to exceed $10,000 per mile, exclusive of the cost of bridges of more than 20 feet clear span, which the Secretary of Agriculture may make, be, and the same is, increased to $20,000 per mile.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if we really are through with the speeches and are going to get down to business, I think we ought to have a quorum present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Johnson, Cal.	Moses	Sterling
Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Sutherland
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Swanson
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Thomas
Colt	Kellogg	Overman	Thompson

Curtis	Kenyon	Penrose	Trammell
Dillingham	King	Pittman	Underwood
Fletcher	Kirby	Poindexter	Vardaman
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Saulsbury	Walsh
Gay	Lenroot	Shafroth	Warren
Hale	Lewis	Sheppard	Weeks
Henderson	Lodge	Smith, S. C.	Wolcott
Hitchcock	McKellar	Smoot
Hollis	Martin, Va.	Spencer

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] in attendance upon a committee of the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. I rise to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who is detained in connection with the work of the Committee on Agriculture.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is the adoption of section 5 as amended.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to section 5.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment as amended the following:

That said act be further amended by striking out all that part of the last sentence of section 4 thereof after the colon and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "One-fourth in the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-fourth in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States, as shown by the latest available Federal census; one-fourth in the ratio which the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural routes and star routes in all the States at the close of the next preceding fiscal year, as shown by the certificate of the Postmaster General, which he is directed to make and furnish annually to the Secretary of Agriculture; one-fourth in the ratio which the amount of internal revenue paid to the United States by the tax-paying population of each State bears to the total amount of internal revenue paid to the United States by the tax-paying population of all the States at the close of the next preceding fiscal year, as shown by the certificate of the Secretary of the Treasury, which he is directed to make and furnish annually to the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask if that is an amendment to section 5?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The amendment which I have offered is an amendment to section 5 as found in the committee print of the bill. My amendment undertakes to change the method of allotting this appropriation to the various States, and hence I have framed the amendment so as to make it an amendment of the original act of 1916. The amendment amends section 4 of the act of 1916 in so far as that section deals with the allotment of these funds to the various States.

The Senate will recall that, under the plan of allotment as defined in the act of 1916, the funds are broken into three parts; one third is allotted to the States upon a ratio of population, another third is allotted to the States upon the ratio of area, and another third is allotted to the States upon the ratio of rural and star route mileage in the respective States. The only change in the method of allotment that I would undertake by this amendment to effect would be to break the appropriation into four parts, so that one-fourth would be allotted according to area, one-fourth according to population, one-fourth according to mileage of rural and star routes, and—this is the new idea—one-fourth would be allotted according to the tax-paying contribution of the various States.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. By "tax contribution" in the States, what does the Senator include—income and excess-profits taxes?

Mr. WOLCOTT. "Internal revenue" is the language used in the amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. What does that include?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That includes income, excess profits, corporation capitalization taxes, liquor taxes, tobacco taxes, and so on.

Mr. President, I am quite aware that if this appropriation were for a purpose that, to my mind, could properly be called a Federal purpose the sort of amendment I have offered would have no countenance at all before any reasonable man. The common burden of the Federal Government that belongs to all the States of the country must be borne by the people of the various States according to their ability to pay, regardless of State lines; but this burden which is attempted to be laid upon the people of this country, as I view it, is in no sense of the word a common Federal burden; this is a burden that the Federal Government takes upon itself in order to make a contribution direct to the State treasuries for local State purposes; and I say, that being the scheme, some attention ought to be paid, in the distribution of this bonus, to the amount of money the various States pay by way of Federal taxation.

According to the way I look at it, it is not an appropriation designed to meet a legitimate Federal need, I care not how it be described. We may call it, if we please, an appropriation to establish post roads, but that to me is a euphemistic term. I think, in the last analysis, it is an appropriation to the States to have them build roads, whether they are post roads or what not, although, of course, in order to justify the Federal appropriation, we must call them post roads. If it is a gift to the States direct, to the State treasuries, why, I ask, should it be that in the distribution of this money the equitable principle that those who pay ought to receive a proportionate benefit, at least in part, should be ignored?

Let me call the attention of the Senate to what is going to take place under this bill. I have made some figures here, which may be slightly, but, if at all, very slightly, inaccurate, because I have figured them hastily here at my desk.

The State of New York pays in internal revenue, or did during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, $835,761,852.62. The State of New York will receive over the whole five-year program, out of all this $275,000,000 for road purposes, the sum of $13,692,821. It will take her five years to get that $13,692,000, but in one year she pays to the Federal Government in internal-revenue taxes $835,000,000.

I have on my sheet here a list of nine States. I will read them:

Arkansas, Mississippi, Vermont, Wyoming, South Dakota, New Mexico, Idaho, North Dakota, and Nevada—nine States. They receive out of this road money, this $275,000,000, over the whole five-year period for their road purposes, $35,135,461. They paid $29,985,943 internal-revenue taxes in the year ending June 30, 1918.

Mr. President, this group of nine States receives from the Federal Government for these roads more money than it paid in 1918 in the shape of internal revenue, whereas the State of New York, which I have just mentioned, paid $835,761,852.62 in the year 1918 and gets $13,692,000. Now, as I figure it, the State of New York pays twenty-eight times as much money to the Federal Government in the shape of internal revenue in the year 1918 as do these nine other States, but these nine other States get back from the Federal Government two and a half times as much money as does the State of New York. Now, I repeat, when you consider this appropriation as a gift of money to the State—as pap, in other words, as pork—some attention ought to be paid to the proposition that those who receive this pork, and who largely pay for it, ought to get some portion of it on the basis of their payment.

The State of Pennsylvania paid in 1918 to the Federal Government $589,056,143.20 in internal revenue. She gets over the whole five years $12,632,849.94 out of the appropriated $275,000,000. As compared with the nine States I have mentioned, Pennsylvania pays in one year nineteen times as much, and they get two and three-quarters times as much out of the road appropriation; and so I might go through the list.

The most forceful illustration of the injustice and inequity of this method of distribution is discovered when we look at my own State of Delaware. Delaware is not the smallest State in point of area. Rhode Island is smaller.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. What was the disproportion, if any, as to the amount of war contracts that Delaware got as compared with the nine States with which the Senator is comparing now?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee is a specialist on these contracts. He has been very laudably industrious in rooting out unconscionable contracts made with the War Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am talking about the conscionable ones now.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Just a moment. I defy the Senator from Tennessee to find an unconscionable contract made with any of these so-called profiteers that he has been hunting for that hail from Delaware. If they have made a contract it has been an honest contract, and they have given honest value for every dollar they have received.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WOLCOTT. Just a moment; I am going to answer the Senator. Furthermore, if the State of Delaware has gotten contracts from the Federal Government, I say that the State of Tennessee has not unduly contributed thereto in the way of taxes, nor have these other nine States, because the money did not, in the main, come from these States in the way of taxes to the Federal Government.

I now yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was not talking about unconscionable contracts.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Well, is a legitimate contract an undesirable thing in war times?

Mr. McKELLAR. But I want to say to the Senator I believe that the amount of contracts that have gone from the National Government to citizens of his State shows quite as wide a discrepancy in favor of his State as this appropriation shows in favor of the States he has mentioned.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That may be true or it may not be true. I should like to have the Senator satisfy himself by figures that it is true before he makes the assertion; but, if it be true, what of it? It simply means that the State of Delaware has business brains there, has business energy, and business thrift that put it in a position where it is needed by the Federal Government in time of great emergency. That is all it means. It is not a disgrace to Delaware; it is quite to her credit.

Mr. McKELLAR. We are taxing the rest of the country, though, to pay for these contracts which have gone to the people of Delaware.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We are not taxing these nine States to get it. The State of Delaware pays to the Federal Government in internal-revenue taxes more than do these nine States all put together, and she pays more than any one of 27 States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Lately largely out of war profits.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If anybody has a complaint, it is New York and Massachusetts and Ohio and Illinois and other States that bear the great burden of taxation.

Mr. McKELLAR. The people of Delaware pay the taxes out of the war profits on contracts that have gone to the State.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Well, it is being spent in the State of Tennessee. While I have not the figures, Mr. President, I dare say that for every dollar that has been spent in the State of Delaware Tennessee has had $500. They have Army camps there, I believe; they have cantonments there; they are building great munition mills there. The Senator from Tennessee ought to be the last to rise here upon this floor and assail the State of Delaware because it has gotten some business from the Federal Government. It is not to the discredit of the State of Delaware, but quite to her credit, if she can be of service to the Government in the time of her need.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wanted to ask the Senator if it is not true that contracts went to Delaware because there were people there who were able to fulfill the contracts?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is exactly what I said a moment ago.

Mr. LODGE. I did not hear the Senator say it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I said that they went there because they had the people there who could fulfill them, and could furnish what the Government wanted, and could not get elsewhere.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely. The conception of the Senator from Tennessee seems to be that there will be a certain amount of money in the United States Treasury, and the purpose is to divide it among the States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Well, if it were proper to divide it and it were done according to business merit and business ability to do things, by means of which the Federal Treasury receives its tax money, the basis of division would have some legitimate merit.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. Do I understand that the Government has spent or is now spending at Muscle Shoals, which I believe is in Tennessee, some $53,000,000, or nearly twice as much as the Senator states the nine States have contributed?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; I thank the Senator for the contribution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I must say to both Senators that they should look up their geography. Muscle Shoals, unfortunately, is not in Tennessee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Tennessee can very well afford to give up Muscle Shoals and then have plenty left.

I started to point out the unfortunate situation in the State of Delaware. Delaware is not the smallest State in area. Rhode Island is smaller. The State of Delaware is not the smallest in point of population. Wyoming and Nevada are smaller, I believe, in point of population. Delaware, however, gets the smallest sum out of this public pork that we are carving up here. I speak of it as pork for that is the way in which I regard it.

Mr. KING. We all think of it that way.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Delaware gets the large sum, over a five-year period, of $447,748.91.

The amendment that has been introduced here, as I caught it from the desk, allows the Federal Government to expend $20,000 a mile on these roads if that is matched by a State contribution of a like sum, which will be a $40,000-a-mile road. I may say that the last road I heard of as being built in Delaware cost $48,000 a mile. That was in war times. But let us say, if you please, that the roads will cost $20,000 a mile. Delaware, as a pacifier, is allowed $447,748.91, which, I think, at $20,000 a mile, will build her about 20 miles of road. Now, Mr. President, in one taxable year Delaware contributes to the Federal Government internal-revenue taxes of $32,943,383.27. Delaware contributes more than do all these nine States that I have mentioned. They contribute $29,985,943.56 in one taxable year as against Delaware's $32,943,383.27. She contributes nearly $3,000,000 more than do all these nine States; but when it comes to dividing the money, these nine States take $35,135,461.21 and hand Delaware $447,748.91. Delaware contributes in one year of taxes $3,000,000 more than they do, but they get eighty times as much out of the road money as does Delaware. Illinois contributes twelve times as much in annual taxes as they do, and they get nearly three times as much of the road money as she does. Ohio contributes ten times as much in annual taxes as they do, and they get nearly three and a half times as much of the road money as she does. Massachusetts contributes six times as much in annual taxes a they do, and they take over three and a half time as much of the road money as she does. I could not run my figures beyond that, to embrace a comparison with other States, because while compiling them the time for me to introduce my amendment arrived and necessitated stopping my calculations.

Mr. President, I am perfectly frank with the Senate. I am free to say that if my amendment is written into this bill I do not know that I will vote for this appropriation, because I am in sympathy with the idea that the time has come when we have got to think about the outgo in our operations and we have got to think about it seriously. Two hundred and seventy-five million dollars to me is a large sum of money.

Three and a half times that sum of money reaches approximately a billion; and only a short time ago a billion-dollar Congress was denounced in all the newspapers of this country as a most extravagant body, and a national campaign was fought upon the extravagance of that Congress. Here, toward roads, we propose at this time, when there is a great want of money, and untold and indescribable and inconceivable sums of money demanded, to appropriate as gifts to States, to help them do that which they ought to do themselves, $275,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As I say, if my amendment is written into this law, I am not sure that I will vote for it then; but I do say that, viewing it as I do as a contribution to the States, a gift and nothing more than a gift, to subserve a State and a local purpose, when we come to contribute the Federal money for that purpose let us pay some attention, at least to the extent of a fourth of it, to the proposition that the States that give the bulk of the taxes ought to get back their proportionate share of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If I understand the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, it means that the States which pay a certain amount of the revenue shall get back a certain proportion of that revenue.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Out of one-fourth of it. It seems to me I am really more generous than I ought to be, entertaining the view of this appropriation that I do. According to my proposal, as embodied in this amendment, one-fourth should be apportioned according to area, as I have already stated; one-fourth should be apportioned according to population; one-fourth should be apportioned according to mileage of rural and star routes; and I am suggesting by my amendment that the other fourth be set aside to allow the operation of this equitable principle, namely, that those who pay as to that fourth ought to get their proportionate share back. That is the scheme that I offer.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. According to that doctrine, it would be poor encouragement for the western country, which has built up such States as Delaware, to continue along that line. I think a more proper way would be to base it on something like the mileage of the different States, because——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that a fourth of it is based on mileage.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If these Western States that built up such States as Delaware and New York and the rest of these States are not permitted to share fairly well in the road proposition, it will not be treating them equitably, in view of the fact that you could not have accomplished what you have in the past without their assistance.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator is taking great credit to his western States, which he claims to have been building up Delaware and New York and other States. Delaware was living and thriving and doing quite well as a State in this country when the Senator's State was nonexistent; as a matter of fact, she was the first State to come into the Union. Her star was the first to appear in the flag's blue.

The Senator is entirely mistaken, however, when he assumes that there is no attention paid to mileage. Under the amendment I have proposed, ratio, based on mileage, is recognized. Three-fourths of this fund, under the amendment as I propose it, will be apportioned just exactly as the whole fund is apportioned by the committee. As to the remaining fourth, I introduce a new method of apportionment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know that the Senator from Delaware is an absolutely fair man, and, as he said awhile ago, even a generous man. He mentioned Tennessee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Not disparagingly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all, and I thank the Senator; and I am not mentioning Delaware disparagingly at all. It is a great State. Her people are a great and prosperous people. However, I just wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that while it is true that the powder plant which he mentioned was built by the Government near Nashville, in Tennessee, the Delaware corporation that built the plant made enough in profits to pay nearly all of this tax, coming from Delaware, I imagine, quite a large amount of it, anyhow. You ought to be generous about it. The Government has been kind to Delaware in the matter of contracts. She ought not to complain about taxes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I defy the Senator to establish that proposition. As a matter of fact, that corporation built that powder plant without a dollar of profit. According to the last contract I saw, they undertook to build it without making a dollar of profit. If they operated it, they were to be compensated. That was the contract as I saw it; but they never got to operate it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have always understood that the compensation was pretty generous for war times. This Delaware corporation probably can get along and pay the tax, even including the tax on roads; and I am quite sure that it will be fair and just and equitable. I am not criticizing that corporation at all. I understand it built a very fine plant in Tennessee, though I have never had time to go out to see it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I am not complaining of any tax that any Delaware corporation pays, nor is any Delaware corporation complaining. It is not a question of taxation at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is going to begin to enforce the rule. A Senator who yields the floor for any other purpose than a question is going to lose the floor.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am very glad the Chair warned me that the rule would be enforced.

The Delaware corporation to which the Senator refers is not involved in this thing at all; and I assert that the Senator, before he makes the statement that he does respecting the operations of that corporation in the State of Tennessee, ought to have the facts before him; and when he gets them here I shall be prepared to make it clear to any man who is open to reason that that corporation has been the most patriotic and most effective corporation in the United States of America during this war.

I wish to say no more, Mr. President, on the amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, did I understand that the Senator had yielded the floor?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I was about to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware a question before he takes his seat.

I notice that the Senator provides in his amendment—I thought I could find the language here, but I can not do so at the moment—in substance that one-fourth of this money shall be distributed on the basis of the amount of internal-revenue taxes paid by the different States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I can find it in the amendment if the Senator will hand it to me a moment:

> One-fourth in the ratio which the amount of internal revenue paid to the United States by the tax-paying population of each State bears to the total amount of internal revenue paid to the United States by the tax-paying population of all the States at the close of the next preceding fiscal year, as shown by the certificate of the Secretary of the Treasury, which he is directed to make and furnish annually to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask the Senator why it would not be preferable to base that on the total assessed value of all taxable property within the State. I ask the question for this reason: It seems to me that the administration of it would be very much simpler if the wording I suggest were used instead of the collection of the tax by the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That would hardly be satisfactory. I would not care to accept that amendment, because if that suggestion be adopted we are getting back more or less to the idea of ratio based on area. It is very easy to ascertain from the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of internal revenue paid by each State. The commissioner's report shows it for 1918 and shows it for every year. I think the basis for arriving at the figures is absolutely definite and certain, and I am afraid that the method suggested by the Senator from Utah would approximate too closely to the apportionment on the basis of area.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I want to get away from that, and if the Senator will read my proposed substitute for this he will find out that I did get away from it, I think, by using the words "the total assessed valuation of all taxable property." That takes in every bit of property which is taxable within the State; and it seems to me that that is a much fairer basis than the amount of internal revenue collected.

For instance, many of the States now are "dry." Other States are "wet." They pay a great deal of taxes there in that way, and if the valuation of the property were taken as the basis it would take in not only the property in that State that was used for that purpose but it would take in property in another State that was used for other purposes, and take in every conceivable piece of property the value of which is assessed; and it would be, I think, a fair distribution of that amount.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I had not seen the Senator's amendment when I drew mine, but I thought the Senator took account of income taxes, which are derivable not directly from real estate or tangible property, under his scheme.

Mr. SMOOT. Under my scheme the valuation of the property that produced that income is the basis for the distribution of that one-fourth.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The great objection that I see to that is that there is much income that is not produced directly by property. It is produced by many other things.

Mr. SMOOT. It has to be produced by property in some form or other, however.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I should like to invite the attention of the Senate for a moment to the basis of division or award proposed by the Senator from Delaware. He proposes, as a one-fourth basis, the internal-revenue taxes paid in the State. Now, the greater part of those taxes come from excess-profits and income taxes; and for two reasons nothing could be more unfair.

Let me illustrate: The income and excess-profits taxes of corporations are paid wherever they happen to have their general offices, and that is usually in New York, or some other big eastern city. Let me illustrate with the United States Steel Corporation. According to the latest report of the Internal-Revenue Department, the State of New York for the year ending June 30, 1918, paid, in round numbers, $685,000,000 of income and excess-profits taxes. Over $200,000,000 of it was paid by the United States Steel Corporation, and practically the only property it has in the State of New York is its office furniture. Now, where is that property situated? It owns many corporations, scattered over many States. In my State are situated the principal mines of the United States Steel Corporation, and they pay their taxes on all of their income in the State of New York, and it is credited by the revenue collector to the State of New York.

I have not access, of course, to the books and returns of the corporations and individuals in the office of the internal-revenue collector; but I think you will find that these big manufacturing and mining companies and railroad companies over the country pay their taxes at their general offices in the city of New York, in the city of Philadelphia, in the city of Boston, and in other cities. Such a division of the road fund, therefore, would be absolutely inequitable.

The State of Minnesota pays only $58,000,000, or did last year, of excess-profits and income taxes. I have not the slightest doubt that the mining companies on the iron range alone pay more than that. I have not the figures available, but I know something of the output of the mines in the State of Wisconsin, in the State of Minnesota, in the State of Michigan, and the big manufacturing companies whose offices are in the eastern cities, and it is more or less the same with all the Western States.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am not sure that I apprehend the purpose of the Senator's argument or the point he is seeking to make, but I want to inquire if the State, regardless of the place where the taxes are paid, may not impose a tax upon the mines to which the Senator refers which would enable it to get a fair return for the product of the mine and the profit of the mine.

Mr. KELLOGG. The State taxes all the mines by a direct tax for State, county, and city purposes. I am not talking about the merits of the appropriation. I am talking about the basis of division.

There is another reason. Take the income taxes. The amount of income taxes actually paid in a State does not depend upon the average wealth of the State. That is a very small factor. It depends more upon the enormous wealth of a few great corporations and very rich men. That is perfectly evident. Take the State of Iowa. Per capita the State of Iowa is one of the richest States in the United States. It is like Minnesota, a great agricultural community. It has not the big mines that Minnesota happens to have, but the average wealth per capita in the State of Iowa is probably as great or greater than the average wealth per capita in the State of Pennsylvania or the State of New York.

But because there are large incomes and the income-tax provision takes a big percentage of those incomes above certain amounts, therefore this fund would principally go to those States where these taxes happen to be paid. Such a basis, it seems to me, can not be defended. I do not know but a better basis than the one in the original bill could be found. The basis is one-third based upon earnings, one-third upon population, one-third upon the mileage of the roads in the State. As to those taxes not included within the income and excess-profits taxes, I am not able to say how fair that would be, but the internal-revenue taxes other than the excess-profits and income taxes are very small and would not be much of a factor in the distribution of this fund.

I ask permission to insert a table as a part of my remarks, so that it may be printed in the RECORD. Senators have asked to have it printed.

There being no objection, the table referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Receipts, income, and excess-profits taxes, year ended June 30, 1918, by collection districts.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it seems to me we would make time by considering section 6 and disposing of it before proceeding further with section 5. Let us determine first whether this plunder is to be voted. If we do not vote it, there is no need of spending time in quarrel about how it shall be divided. I consequently suggest that we consider section 6 first, in order that we may be able to get somewhere before adjournment to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

On a division, the amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 3, to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 6. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of said act, as herein amended, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sums: The sum of $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and available immediately; the sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920; and the sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921; and additional sums to be expended in accordance with the provisions of said act: Provided, That in the expenditure of this fund for labor preference shall be given, other conditions being equal, to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to submit a point of order upon section 6. Section 6 provides for an appropriation of $200,000,000 as an added sum which is in addition to the $75,000,000 appropriated two years ago for the building of good roads. It is admitted that this proposed increase was never submitted to the Committee on Appropriations. Subdivision 2 of Rule XVI reads as follows:

2. All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and when actually proposed to the bill no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received; in like manner, amendments proposing new items of appropriation to river and harbor bills shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on Commerce; also amendments to bills establishing post roads, or proposing new post roads, shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

That subdivision refers to three matters—first, general appropriation bills; second, river and harbor bills; third, bills establishing post roads. This is a general appropriation bill. It is moved by the direction of a standing committee. It proposes to add a new item of appropriation of $200,000,000, and is therefore clearly within the provisions of the rule. I make a point of order against it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the point of order?

Mr. THOMAS. The point of order is that this proposed appropriation was never submitted under subdivision 2 of Rule XVI to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Amendments to the Post Office appropriation bill are referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and not to the general Appropriations Committee. The point of order is therefore overruled.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hollis	Martin, Va.	Smoot
Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	Moses	Spencer
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Sutherland
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Swanson
Cummins	Kellogg	Overman	Thomas
Curtis	Kendrick	Page	Townsend
Dillingham	Kenyon	Penrose	Trammell
Fletcher	King	Poindexter	Vardaman
France	Kirby	Pollock	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Pomerene	Walsh
Gay	La Follette	Shafroth	Weeks
Hale	Lenroot	Sheppard	Wolcott
Harding	Lodge	Simmons
Hardwick	McKellar	Smith, Ga.
Henderson	McNary	Smith, S. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to reserve the right, if I may do so under the rules, to renew the point of order in the Senate, which I have made heretofore unsuccessfully, to section 5 and section 6.

Mr. WEEKS. I send an amendment to the desk, and ask to have it read.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, after the word "act," on line 13, insert:

Provided, That 10 per cent of the cost of the construction of good roads which has been undertaken and completed by the several States since January 1, 1900, shall be paid to said States from the appropriation provided in this section: Provided further, That such payments to the States shall be, within one year from the date of its receipt, expended for new construction in said States.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I am in general sympathy with the view expressed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] relative to the distribution of this fund if a fund is to be distributed. My own judgment is that the building of good roads is of essentially local concern; that the States should build their own roads, or the counties, or the towns, I am not particular which, but they should be built by those who are directly benefited by their construction.

There are some States that have spent a great deal of money in constructing roads. Other States have spent comparatively little. This kind of legislation is a direct handicap on those States which have been diligent in providing for their own needs. They not only have constructed at their expense their own roads, but now they are asked to furnish money to construct the roads in States which have not undertaken it. It is an unfair proposition even if it is a wise one, and, in my judgment, some parts of this money should be returned to those States that have been progressive, that have been looking forward and have been providing for the needs of their own people by constructing the good roads which their people need. Therefore, I offer the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I very much hope that the Senate will not adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. This principle of national aid to roads has been very carefully worked out, and it has been adopted and acted upon by every State in the Union. While it may be true that some States have built better roads than others, while it may be true that they have been enabled to build better roads than other States, they can not overlook the fact that great, rich, powerful States like New York and Massachusetts have been drawing continuously for 50 years from the balance of the country, and thereby they have accumulated their wealth. The great State of New York has been the gateway through which the commerce of this whole country has passed, and it has been gathering in, going and coming. I do not object to that. I am glad that the State of New York and the city of New York and the other States have so prospered. They own everything in this country, practically. All our railroads are owned by these gentlemen.

I do not object to that; I am making no complaint about it; but my contention is that if the bill as we have reported it can be adopted, if these increases in the appropriations can be accepted and the law as amended and as it has been accepted by all the States of the country can go into operation, we will have an era of road building in this country such as we have never enjoyed before; and the result of all that will be that the States which have not heretofore been financially able to build good roads, for which they are being criticized, will be given an opportunity to build roads and develop their lands and develop their resources. They will then be much more able to contribute to the State of New York and the State of Massachusetts and add to their wealth than they have heretofore been, and we will make them immensely rich if they will allow us to do it.

I hope the amendment to the amendment will not be adopted. I do not think my good friend from Massachusetts is really serious about it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be again read.

The SECRETARY. Insert in section 6, after the word "act," where it occurs in line 13:

Provided, That 10 per cent of the cost of the construction of good roads which has been undertaken and completed by the several States since January 1, 1900, shall be paid to said States from the appropriation provided in this section: Provided further, That such payments to the States shall be, within one year from the date of its receipt, expended for new construction in said States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I assume it is not the intention of the supporters of the committee amendment to accept any such amendment as that offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator from Alabama has just stated that this matter had been very carefully worked out. It certainly has.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment? I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Shall I lose the floor if I yield to the Senator from Alabama, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator should lose the floor by yielding, I shall not insist on interrupting him, but I simply desire to ask a question. I am not quite sure that I understood the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. Do I understand that the Senator means to go back to 1900 and to pay 10 per cent for 19 years?

Mr. WEEKS. I mean that of the money that has been expended by a State since 1900 in the construction of its roads—and, of course, it applies to all States—10 per cent of it shall be returned to those States and be used for additional road construction in those States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thought that was it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there is one phase of this situation suggested by the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to which I wish to direct attention. Let me say before I embark upon a very brief discussion of it that I am not at all in love with the provincial character that this discussion has assumed. It is not particularly pleasant to talk about what State is getting the better of some other State, what State is getting too much money, and what State is paying the money. The poor old State of New York is constantly referred to as a source of riches and wealth. I am not going to comment upon that in particular, although I have some ideas about it.

Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama forgets a few things, or perhaps he is not informed of them, when he discusses the matter in the way in which he did a moment ago. The Senator from Alabama and other Senators seem to forget that the State of New York and some other States—but I happen to know about that State—tax themselves at an infinitely higher rate to make these internal improvements than do the people of other States who refrain from making any internal improvements. I say in all seriousness to the Senator and to any others who are interested in this problem that the State of New York is now faced with a most difficult and perplexing situation, for the very reason that it has gone ahead and spent approximately $150,000,000 upon its roads and nearly $150,000,000 upon its canals, and has embarked upon other great public improvements which have been demanded by the people of that State and have been sanctioned by referendums in many instances by the people of that State.

As the result of embarking upon these improvements, the people of the State of New York are actually faced with the highest local tax rate, in the aggregate, in the Union. While they are faced with that tax rate, the Federal Government steps in and makes it all the more difficult for them to arrange their finances by invading their field of taxation and duplicating the taxing efforts of the State by the imposition of certain kinds of Federal taxes. That may not excite any sympathy from the Senators who come from States which are not so rich in the aggregate as is the State of New York; probably this statement will not make a vote against the amendment of the committee, because it is perfectly apparent, as I have listened to some of this discussion, that there are Senators here who do not care about the local problems of certain other States in this Union.

The budget of the State of New York has grown since 1905 from $26,000,000 a year to a budget of $82,000,000 a year in 1918. The wealth of the State has not multiplied by any such ratio in that period; the population of the State has not increased by any such ratio during that period. This vast increase in the expenditures of the State is due to the fact that the people of New York determined to take care of their own affairs and agreed to tax themselves. We are to-day per dollar of valuation of property of all kinds in the State taxing our people at an infinitely higher rate than do the people of Alabama or the people of Nebraska or the people of Tennessee. But the limit has been reached.

It is a very grave question whether or not the State can develop any further sources of taxation. The Federal Government has invaded our field of taxation with respect to inheritances. We can not get another penny from inheritances. The Federal Government has duplicated the State tax in effect, and no longer can the State of New York, to meet its own local expenditures, hope to get any money from that source. The Federal Government steps in and puts its taxes on the incomes of corporations. The State of New York prior to that time, and, I think, still to-day, has the highest corporation tax of any State in the Union. If it has not the highest, it has one of the highest. So it goes from one thing to another in the matter of taxation.

Now this bill simply adds to the burden—it is one of the many bills that add to the burden—another $275,000,000 to be taken from the Treasury of the United States, and the taxes of the people of New York must be raised even higher than they are to-day, when they are already higher than the taxes of the average State in the Union.

The junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] described to me a rather interesting incident that occurred, I think, at Harrisburg during the recent inauguration of the governor of Pennsylvania. I bring it to the attention of the Senate to show how this thing is drifting. I believe it was stated by the recently elected governor in his inaugural address that the money collected from the State of Pennsylvania by Federal taxes during the year preceding his inauguration was greater in amount than all the money required to support the State of Pennsylvania since it became a State in the Union.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. The governor of Pennsylvania also showed that one-sixth of the Federal revenues are paid by Pennsylvania.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is probably true.

Mr. PENROSE. A few days ago I had the statement put in the RECORD.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I know that comparisons are odious; I am not contending that because Pennsylvania pays one-sixth of the revenue she should have one-sixth of the roads, or that because New York pays 40 per cent of the revenue it should have 40 per cent of the roads.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I want to ask the Senator if he can state what the average rate of State taxation is in his State; that is, the State and county taxation, aside from municipal taxation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was very familiar with those figures when the original act which this bill proposes to amend was before the Senate, and I gave them at that time. It was rather astounding, even to me—and I knew something of the high rate of taxation in New York at that time—to find that a dollar in value in New York was taxed much higher than a dollar in value in most of the States of the Union.

Mr. STERLING. Aside from municipal taxes, would the rate be as much as 3 per cent on the assessed valuation for county and State taxes?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We have to include in the average the municipal taxes also. They all come out of somebody's pocket.

Mr. STERLING. That is true, but——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not say what the percentage is, but I make the statement that it is infinitely higher than are the tax rates in many other States.

Mr. STERLING. The municipal tax rate, of course, involves the idea of the benefit of living in a city, and so forth; but take the average rate of tax paid by the farmers in the Senator's State—the county and State taxes—what will it amount to?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I could not tell the Senator the average, but I will guarantee that the rate is higher than that of other States.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New York to one of the reasons why the tax rates are higher in New York and in Massachusetts and why there is abundant reason, at least, for making a comparison with other States. In the expenditure of all these moneys for building roads and for other purposes State debts have been incurred, and they are particularly pronounced in the case of those two States. The total debt of all the States in the Union in 1913 was $403,000,000, and of this the State debts of Massachusetts and New York were $227,000,000; in other words, a greater State debt was incurred by those States in building roads and for other purposes than by all the other States in the Union together.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, I am certain, is correct, of course, because he reads it from the accepted figures.

Mr. WEEKS. These figures are taken from a statistical abstract.

Mr. STERLING. I am not in a position to make comparisons between the rate paid in New York and the average rate of county and State taxes; but I am strongly of the impression that the rate is not so high as it is on our Western States—as it is in the State of South Dakota, for example. Taking the rate on personal property, farm property, and farm lands, I think it is higher on the assessed valuation than is paid on similar property in the State of New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not, of course, enter into any controversy with the Senator from South Dakota on that point, because I do not know the rates in South Dakota and for the moment I have not the New York rates before me; but I am of the very clear opinion, Mr. President, that the time is coming when some of the so-called rich States, instead of being rich, will be the poorest States in the Union from the taxpayers' standpoint.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just one moment. I know the State of New York is now confronted, and has been confronted for the last two years, with perhaps the most difficult situation faced by any other State in the matter of raising money to pay its expenses, in spite of its alleged wealth.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the same disproportion the Senator complains of exists in the Senator's own State. For instance, New York City pays taxes out of all proportion to the taxes paid by the remainder of the State. I know that is so in my own State. The city of Memphis pays one-sixth of all of the State taxes of the State of Tennessee, and that same proportion exists throughout our entire system.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is mistaken about the city of New York paying taxes out of proportion. It pays taxes in the State of New York in proportion to its wealth, and incidentally the proposal to incur the greater portion of these expenses, such as those for good roads—in fact, all the expenses under the good-roads item and under the barge canal item—was submitted to a popular referendum of the people of the State, and the city of New York voted overwhelmingly in favor of both projects.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator has just been referring to the unfortunate financial condition of the State of New York and to the difficult problems confronting it. Upon the principle that misery loves company, I think I may assure him that if we keep on a little longer the Nation will be in the same condition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My own opinion is that certain of the States will starve first and the Nation afterwards at the present rate of expending money. The Federal Government, of course, has the last opportunity to do the taxing, and it can supersede apparently, as laws are now framed and passed, the taxing powers of the States by one method or another. The States are gradually toppling under this continual increase of Federal appropriations, and one of the signs of the toppling is that more and more as the years go by do the people of the States ask the Federal Government to come to their aid and spend money out of the Federal Treasury, which, incidentally, according to my view of the matter, means the atrophy of local ambition, spirit, and civic pride. We are tending in that direction every day the Congress sits. We have commenced to starve some of the States—not all of them—in the matter of their local revenues, and we are spending the money in other States, and encouraging the appetite that is growing so fast in this country amongst millions of people for money from Washington. This is but one instance of it.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts is germane to this exceedingly difficult problem. The State which I happen to represent in part has spent $150,000,000 on roads. It has spent that amount primarily for the benefit of its own citizens. They voted to do it and they bonded the State, and, in addition, the counties have also bonded themselves for large sums. We spent it also for the benefit of people passing through the State, whether it be for business traffic or pleasure traffic. We can carry that burden with perfect ease, I believe, if we have left to us the field and resources of taxation, but the Federal Government is taking them away from us with nearly every tax bill that passes Congress, and we have this great burden placed upon us. So the time has come when the people of that State, as I happen to know—and it has been reflected in public sentiment pretty strongly, Senators, for the last few years—are insisting that a halt be called to Federal appropriations; otherwise their local burdens, coupled with their Federal burdens, will break down their State finances. It can not be carried much longer.

It may seem to some a surprising suggestion that emanates from the Senator from Massachusetts, to wit: That some of the States be reimbursed for some of these public improvements. But the time may come when they will come here on their knees and beg you to give them money to help them. It is not a laughing matter; it is not a trifling suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, although it may be a little ahead of time; but the time will come when these burdens can not be borne any longer.

That is one of my objections to the proposal in this bill that at this time, when the people of my State, as well as the people of other States, are burdened with taxation to an extent never before known in this country and with no immediate outlook for relief, the Congress shall appropriate $200,000,000 more to add to that burden and give no benefit through the expenditure of this particular $200,000,000 to millions and millions of people who are suffering from heavy local taxation.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to ask the Senator if he means to intimate that the rate of Federal taxation is any greater in the State of New York than in any other State of the Union?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I did not say anything like that; I did not mention the rate of Federal taxation. I mentioned the local taxes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. As I understood the Senator, he was complaining of the special burden being put upon the State of New York by virtue of this provision of the pending bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; the Senator is mistaken. I did not say that the rate of Federal taxation was greater in New York than in any other State. Of course, that would be absurd; it is not. I say the people of New York and of many other States have assumed of their own volition a very heavy tax burden, and when they assumed that burden they felt certain that their local sources of taxation would be reserved to them; but in recent years they find that the Federal Government has invaded their field of taxation and has made it literally impossible for them to raise any more money from those sources to meet their local bills, and the more money the Federal Government appropriates in the manner suggested by this bill, the heavier becomes the burden of those people.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to ask the Senator if the Federal Government has invaded any field of taxation in New York which it has not invaded in every other State in the Union?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, of course, the Federal laws are general in character, but not all the States in the Union by any means impose an inheritance tax; nor such a heavy inheritance tax as is imposed in New York. If the rate on inheritances in Ohio is the largest, perhaps New York is the second; but the inheritance tax in New York was a heavy tax, and was meant to be, to help pay the debts of the State; but along comes the Federal Government and doubles it. That means that New York can never get any more from that source. That is not the only instance; there are others; in fact, the starving process has started, and yet the burdens of taxation continue to rise. Had some of the States which are supposed to be wealthy known that this tendency in Congress was going to make itself so powerful, we would not of our own volition have shouldered this burden locally. We would have waited for Washington to give us the money, as other States have waited.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will allow me a moment——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, the rates of Federal taxation are the same everywhere; there is no question about that; but the rates of collection are very different. Federal taxes are collected with great thoroughness in some parts of the country and very imperfectly in others.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment reported by the committee. By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. WEEKS. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BANKHEAD obtained the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I want to offer to this section. I send it to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, at the end of line 15, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and add the following:

Provided, That so much of the appropriation apportioned to any State under the said act approved July 11, 1916, or under this section, for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available for expenditure in that State until the close of the second fiscal year succeeding the close of the fiscal year for which such apportionment was made, except that amounts apportioned for any fiscal year to any State which has not a State highway department shall be available for expenditure in that State until the close of the third fiscal year succeeding the close of the fiscal year for which such apportionment was made.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I will say that the effect of that amendment is this:

Under the existing law the succeeding year after the apportionment is made, if the State or local authorities do not furnish their half, the money goes into the general fund for redistribution the next year. A great many of the legislatures will not meet this year to furnish, if this bill passes, the half that the States have to furnish. All that this amendment does, instead of confining it to the succeeding year, is to put the requirement for the second year one year later before the redistribution is made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator allow the amendment to be printed and lie on the table and take it up the first thing in the morning?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; that will be all right.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 6, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 5, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, exercise, we beseech Thee, Thy holy influence to safeguard the home-loving, peace-loving, law-abiding citizens throughout our Republic from the influence of evil-minded men and women, who, by their glib tongues and seductive harangues, are going over the country seeking to stir up strife, discontent, and hatred among their brethren who love the flag and all the sacred principles which it represents; whose objects are to overthrow our Government, that they may get something for nothing.

Inspire, we pray Thee, the legislative assemblies throughout every State in the Union and the lawmakers at the Capitol to pass laws which will drive them from our midst and keep them far from us.

Ours is a people's government and the people have it in their power to rectify mistakes and remove abuses without dynamite, fire, and the sword. So let us live in peace and harmony and practice the precepts enunciated by the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BENJAMIN C. GREENE.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, unless this is in order on Calendar Wednesday, I suggest that the motion be made to dispense with the business in order on Calendar Wednesday.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday to-day be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business for to-day. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. We are to have a meeting of the Republicans in the House at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. The gentleman told me that yesterday, and I told him I would move to rise at 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LITTLE. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman then move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval bill?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. He will go into it as soon as he can. [Laughter.] Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, there are only three Calendar Wednesdays remaining before the final adjournment of Congress. The call is on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has several important bills which can not be considered at this session of Congress unless an opportunity is given to reach them on Calendar Wednesday. For that reason, last night I objected to unanimous consent at the expense of Calendar Wednesday. In view of the fact that some of my constituents are interested in the relief proposed in one of these bills from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I feel it is my duty, Mr. Speaker, to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with business in order on Calendar Wednesday to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to dispense with business in order on Calendar Wednesday to-day. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor of dispensing with Calendar Wednesday business to-day, the motion is agreed to.

BENJAMIN C. GREENE.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I have already sent up to the desk the resolution to which I referred.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

House resolution 536 (H. Rept. No. 1034).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Benjamin C. Greene, clerk to J. F. C. Talbott, a Representative from the State of Maryland at the time of his death, the sum of $166.66, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Representative in Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

OFFICIAL REPORTERS OF DEBATES AND OFFICIAL STENOGRAPHERS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I now present House resolution 506, with a privileged report (H. Rept. No. 1033) from the Committee on Accounts, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided for by law, to each of the official reporters of debates of the House of Representatives additional compensation at the rate of $1,000 per annum, payable monthly, and to the assistant to the official reporters of debates, additional compensation at the rate of $500 per annum, payable monthly.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 3, after the word "debates," insert the following words "and to each of the official stenographers to committees," so that the resolution as amended will read as follows:

"Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided for by law, to each of the official reporters of debates and to each of the official stenographers to committees of the House of Representatives additional compensation at the rate of $1,000 per annum, payable monthly, and to the assistant to the official reporters of debates additional compensation at the rate of $500 per annum, payable monthly."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of this resolution from the Committee on Accounts, permit me to say that the testimony before the committee was to the effect that the positions of official reporters were created in 1875; that at that time they received the salary of $5,000 per annum; that they are receiving the same salary now; and that that salary in the meantime, except that some extra compensation was given for two or three sessions of Congress, has not been increased. The testimony before the Committee on Accounts shows that a very largely increased amount of work has been done by these official reporters and official stenographers to committees, and, in the judgment of the Committee on Accounts, we felt that this increase was justified, and accordingly the committee recommended favorable action upon this resolution.

As Members of the House will see, this increases the amount of compensation $1,000 per annum. In 1875, when these positions were created, the Clerk of the House received $4,320. He receives now $6,500. At that time the Sergeant at Arms received $4,320; he now receives $6,500. The Doorkeeper received $2,592; he now receives $5,000. The Postmaster received $2,592; he now receives $4,000.

We submit in our report figures showing the number of pages in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at that time and the number now contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, indicating the increased amount of work. The total number of pages in the Forty-fourth Congress RECORD was 8,550. The total number of pages in the Sixty-fifth Congress RECORD to January 20 was 23,230.

In view of this increased amount of work, in view of the fact that the salaries have not been increased since 1875, and in view of the fact that the salaries of practically all the other employees of the House and of the Government, including Members of Congress, have been increased, the Committee on Accounts authorized a favorable report on this resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish the gentleman would yield me some time.

Mr. HASTINGS. How much time?

Mr. STAFFORD. Five or ten minutes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like five minutes after the gentleman from Wisconsin concludes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to oppose the increase of salary to the official reporters of debates of the House, but I do rise to oppose the committee amendment to extend this increase to the stenographers to committees. We have four such stenographers receiving $5,000 a year. Their work is not to be compared with the work of the men here who take down the official debates and proceedings of the House. The position of the official reporters of debates is a very trying one. They have to be here long hours under stress and strain. The official stenographers to committees do not occupy near the time in their work that the official reporters of debates do. Years back, perhaps 15 years ago, there was a strenuous fight on this floor against granting them any such salary as $5,000 a year. Court reporters, doing the work that these reporters to committees do, do not receive any such salaries as $5,000 a year.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. How much do court reporters in the District of Columbia receive?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not give any information except as to my home city. These stenographers to committees are privileged to employ other reporters when the work is so heavy that they can not do it all themselves, and the work of these other reporters is paid for by the Government in addition.

I can see much reason for increasing the salaries of the reporters of the House. This matter was considered by the legislative subcommittee a year ago. Representatives of the official reporters' staff came before the subcommittee and presented the facts, and we were favorably impressed with the case they made, and believed that some relief should be granted to them. I do not know what may have been the impression of the other members of the committee, but for my part I was not impressed that it was advisable to increase the salaries of the stenographers to committees.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman stated that there were four official stenographers to committees.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. And they are permitted to employ additional stenographic help, and those additional men are paid by the folio.

Mr. STAFFORD. Paid by the folio.

Mr. HOWARD. Now, the gentleman would not contend that the four official stenographers to committees could begin to perform the work incumbent upon them in these sessions of Congress?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am making no such contention. I am only calling the attention of the House to the facts. I am not saying that they could do all the extra work under any circumstances; I am only saying that the work of the two separate corps of stenographers is not comparable, and the situation is not comparable.

The taking of testimony in the committee room does not require the same expertness that is required here to report the debates on the floor of the House. A higher grade of men is necessary here. If we did not have the highest grade of efficiency here we would be in trouble continuously over the reports of our debates. I think it is a worthy and proper recognition of these expert men on the floor here to increase their compensation a thousand dollars, because of the continued long sessions and the high character of their work, but I have not been convinced that there is any need whatsoever of increasing the salaries of the committee stenographers. Court reporters in my city receive in the neighborhood of $4,000 a year.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. The testimony before the committee was to the effect that these committee stenographers work much longer hours than the official reporters of the House. Committees sometimes meet as early as 9 o'clock in the morning, and a great many of them at 10 and 10.30 o'clock, and they work longer hours, they work continuously during the day; and, while they are permitted to call upon outside reporters to assist them, they are only permitted to call them in when all of the four officials are occupied.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will go into it minutely, I venture to say that he will find, if he takes the number of hours that these men devote to their work and the number of hours that the official reporters occupy in the performance of their duties, comparing the number of hours, that the work here on the floor is more than one-third greater.

Mr. HASTINGS. The testimony before the committee was just the other way, in my judgment. They work longer hours.

Mr. STAFFORD. They begin earlier, but the sum total will not compare at all with the sum total of the work of the Official Reporters of debates.

Mr. HASTINGS. The testimony before the committee went to show that the committee stenographers work very long hours.

Mr. IRELAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, who is a member of the committee.

Mr. IRELAND. I should like to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that at first my viewpoint of the matter absolutely coincided with his; but the testimony brought before the committee, however, convinced me that the propositions were not divisible and that the committee stenographers should be dealt with on the same plane as the reporters of debates of the House. We found that the work of the committee stenographers extends over a greater period, over longer hours during the day even, than that of the reporters of debates of the House, and while, as the gentleman from Wisconsin says, their work may not be quite so arduous at the time and not require quite so much expertness as that of the reporters of debates of the House, yet most of the reporters of debates of the House have graduated from the positions of stenographers to committees, and they have all proven themselves worthy of that promotion, and it is regarded as a promotion. They are paid, however, the same salaries at present.

So far as the volume of work that comes before all of the committees is concerned, it is so much greater than it has been in previous Congresses that, coupled with the fact that they are all employed most of the time, we thought them not only entitled to the same raise in pay that we would give the House reporters, but that possibly there should be two added to their force. We have not by any means encouraged the securing of the best talent by the manner in which we pay the additional reporters to committees. I think the resolution, under the circumstances, is conservative. I very much appreciate the efforts of the gentleman from Wisconsin at economy. If I were not absolutely conscientious in believing in the merits of the raise to all of them, I certainly should not support it.

We pay the additional reporters to committees 15 cents per folio. The Senate pays 25 cents per folio. I am not sure about all of them, but I think that the departments down town—at least some of them—pay 30 cents per folio. When we fail to pay the same price that the departments down town and that the Senate pay, we can not hope to get the same grade of men for the additional force. It is my thought that we should grant the same compensation to these men that the Senate does.

I want to say further to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the committee report is unanimous, and taking all things into consideration, we firmly believe that the amendment proposed should be agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield me five minutes?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield the gentleman from Iowa five minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to disagree with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. I think there is no question about agreeing that the reporters in the House for a long time have been entitled to this increase in salary, and the same argument by which we arrive at that conclusion should convince us as to the necessity of increasing the pay of the four reporters to committees. The salaries of the reporters to committees were fixed a great many years ago, when we had one session of about three months and another long session of six or seven months. At this session of Congress, at least a month before the Congress convened, these reporters to committees were called upon to commence to take down the hearings of the various committees. This is especially true of the work in the Committee on Appropriations. For several weeks before Congress assembled the reporters to committees were called upon to attend the hearings and to report them. That is true when Congress is not in session. When a committee of the House finds it necessary to hold an important hearing, these reporters come, and come freely, and I can never yet recall a single instance when a committee was ready to proceed with hearings when a very efficient reporter was not there to do the work.

The work of Congress has grown so that it is not comparable with the work of 10 years ago or 15 years ago or longer ago, when we fixed the salaries of these reporters. The work of the various committees of the House has increased manyfold. And in like proportion the work of these reporters has increased. These reporters are called upon to commence their work at 10 o'clock in the morning. They work all day, sometimes until long after the dinner hour at night. They have had no increase in compensation, and it seems to me they ought to have an increase in compensation. I hope there will be no real, substantial objection to the amendment that is offered to the committee resolution. Let us be fair to these willing, efficient, and faithful employees, who have great responsibilities.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 55, noes 2.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 201, nays 71, answered "present" 6, not voting 151, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question now is agreeing on the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, on the 1st day of the month the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] contended that a certain statement sent out by the Comptroller of the Currency was unfrankable. I ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD the statement of Mr. Williams which was asserted to be unfrankable, together with a letter from him to me inclosing the statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter and statement from the Comptroller of the Currency. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, is it the purpose of inserting the letter in the RECORD to make what was unfrankable before now frankable?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No; the purpose is simply that the Members of the House may determine that question themselves, whether they think it is frankable or not.

Mr. MANN. It becomes frankable as soon as it is printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not think that is the purpose.

Mr. MANN. I would not be surprised at anything he did.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will not enter into any controversy with the gentleman at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement and letter are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, February 1, 1919.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I thank you very much for calling my attention to the complaint made by Congressman TREADWAY to-day on the floor of the House, to the effect that the Comptroller of the Currency should have sent out, in franked envelopes, a copy of his press statement of January 23, which, in the opinion of the Congressman, was not properly frankable.

It is entirely true that copies of this press statement (embodying the proposal of a certain newspaper man which was prepared with a view to conducting a propaganda against this office and the Comptroller of the Currency) were sent by mail in the ordinary Treasury envelopes which are used for the distribution of all official mail.

Evidence in my possession showed that not only the Comptroller of the Currency personally but the administration of this bureau were being wantonly, maliciously, and unjustly attacked; and I believed it was to the interest of this bureau and its effective administration that the banks—which are under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency, and to which the regulations and instructions of this bureau are issued—should be informed as to the origin and character of the attacks which were being made upon it. In fact, I believed it to be my duty to inform the national banks of the sinister character of the efforts which were being put forth to destroy or impair the authority of and respect for the comptroller's office, which must be sustained if its service is to be effective, and if the results, which it is expected to accomplish, are to be secured.

The statement which was given to the press and mailed to the national banks showed that these attacks were being made deliberately and "disguised"; that the plan was to "get several bankers in on the deal"; that even the bankers who were to contribute to the expense fund were not to be told "who is to handle the publicity at the beginning"; and that everything was to be done "quietly at first." For supervising and conducting a shameless attack upon a public officer, against the integrity of whose administration the discredited newspaper man admitted he had never heard a complaint or criticism, he proposed—in the memorandum which accidentally fell into my possession—that his "charges" would be "$250 per week."

I do not believe that your colleagues in the House of Representatives would approve or condone, for one moment, such tactics, and I trust they will concur in the view I take, that the subject was one which I was justified in bringing to the notice of the national banks under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency.

In view of the complaint which Representative TREADWAY has made on the floor of the House, I hope that as a matter of fairness the press statement upon which he based his complaint (a copy of which I inclose) may also be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Faithfully, yours,

JNO. SKELTON WILLIAMS.

Hon. A. J. MONTAGUE,
House of Representatives, Washington.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, January 23, 1919.

John Skelton Williams, the Comptroller of the Currency, to-day gave to the press the following statement:

"The origin of propaganda recently started against the Comptroller of the Currency and this office is explained by a document which came into my possession accidentally within the past few weeks, a photograph of which, in the interest of decent journalism and fair play, I feel it my duty to make public.

"The document is headed 'Memorandum for Mr. ———.' The name, typewritten in the memorandum, but which I prefer not to make public now, is that of an official of a banking institution (not national) which has been under serious criticism by the comptroller's office for months past for irregular, unlawful, and discreditable practices.

"Evidence in my possession shows that this 'memorandum' was prepared by a newspaper correspondent in Washington, who was the author of the recent stories sent out from Washington to various newspapers (to the effect that active opposition to the confirmation for a new term for the Comptroller of the Currency had been developed on the part of both Democratic and Republican Senators and criticizing the comptroller's administration) and who probably was the instigator of other articles of like tenor.

"This correspondent was sent for. He came to the Treasury last Monday and was asked whether he had sent out stories criticizing the Comptroller of the Currency. He first denied that he had done so, except to one newspaper in Buffalo, N. Y., of which he said he was the Washington correspondent; but subsequently he admitted that he had furnished the material for the story to various other newspapers in different parts of the country, including, among others, the New York Tribune, the Wall Street Journal, papers in Boston, Louisville, etc.

"Although he refused to admit that he had delivered the document mentioned above to the bank official to whom it was addressed, he confessed that he had been in consultation with that official in this connection on a number of occasions and had received his criticisms of this office, and that he had been carrying on negotiations with some one whose name he refused to divulge—but who was evidently the bank official to whom the 'memorandum' had been addressed—with a view to conducting a campaign to oppose the confirmation of the Comptroller of the Currency in the event of his renomination. He declined to affirm or deny his authorship of the 'memorandum.' His refusal to disclaim may be taken fairly, under the circumstances, as confession.

"He said he had not yet received 'a nickel' for his propaganda work, but subsequently admitted that he had, within the past few weeks, gotten money as a loan from the banker to whom his memorandum was addressed and who had been secretly attacking and criticizing the Comptroller of the Currency.

"He claimed that his negotiations as to the propaganda were only under way. In response to my question whether he had ever heard any breath of criticism directed against the integrity of my administration, he declared that he had not.

"He insisted that he had not yet consummated his negotiations for conducting his 'publicity campaign' and getting newspapers to print his 'disguised' stories, although he confessed that he had already given wide circulation to the yarns he had written in the effort to injure the comptroller.

"I am a little doubtful as to whether this newspaper scribbler (a discredit to a noble profession, seeking fees to defame a Government official) or the contemptible offender with whom he was conspiring should be dignified with public notice, but I think the people should understand the nature of some of the things appearing in the newspapers, so as not to be imposed upon and in order that they may distinguish paid-for propaganda from real facts.

"The following is a copy of the 'memorandum' referred to in the foregoing statement, a photograph of which memorandum by chance, but unfortunately for its author, has come into the possession of the Comptroller of the Currency:

"'Memorandum for Mr. ———.

"'If reappointed and confirmed, the present Comptroller of the Currency will remain in office for five years.

"'All that is needed is determination on the part of two or three Republican Senators. If they assume the responsibility, the Democrats are not apt to make a serious fight for Williams in the Senate.

"'A publicity campaign should be started at once, but should be run very quietly. Several papers will print stories if the stories are handed to them disguised.

"'Full publicity can come when the name is sent to the Senate and referred to the committee.

"'In the meantime a story here and there would help the Senators along.

"'Get several bankers in on the deal. Do not tell them who is to handle the publicity at the beginning. That is a matter strictly between you and me for the present, because I will want to work quietly at first, since when I have to come out in the open I will be sure to make some enemies in high places.

"'Since the fight promises to last only a few weeks, and in handling the publicity I will be sure to incur some enmities, the charges will be $250 a week. I am sure I can do some good work for the cause.'"

THE MEETING AT POLI'S THEATER.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, much has been said about a meeting on Sunday afternoon at Poli's Theater. The newspapers of the city state that I attended that meeting. I rise at this time to deny the statement. I was not invited; I did not attend and did not know of the meeting; never heard of the meeting until I read it in the newspaper accounts. [Applause.] It is a case of mistaken identity. The newspaper reporter in recording me as attending that meeting got his wires badly crossed.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MASON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MASON. To a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, it has been stated in the same newspaper already referred to and in several others that at the meeting on Sunday, reading from the headlines of the paper and from comments made by a Member of another legislative body, there was urged a red America. Several gentlemen in both branches of Congress have been kind enough to quote from this paper the statement that I was present, and by inference and argument that I approved of the doctrine of anarchy or nihilism. I desire to make a statement in regard to that in my own defense.

The SPEAKER. How does it link the gentleman up with it? There might be 40 Bolsheviki meetings held and the gentleman not be connected with any.

Mr. MASON. One gentleman in another branch of Congress says that he will not use any names, but he afterwards uses my name, and it is printed in the headlines in the paper. The headlines are false, and the man who wrote them knew he was lying when he wrote them.

The SPEAKER. What the Chair wants to know is, Is the gentleman's name mentioned in the headlines?

Mr. MASON. It is.

The SPEAKER. Go on.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, I am not going to take long, and I would not pay any attention to this burst of enthusiasm on the part of certain people who get excited when they read something in a newspaper if I was not deeply interested in the cause that brought it about.

The gentleman in another Chamber who uses my name by printing these headlines in the papers says, reading from the headlines:

Urge "red" America—Bolshevik speakers stir huge audience at Poli's Theater—City's radicals in throngs—Representative MASON charges plot to keep Slav funds in United States—Speaks from box after Albert Rhys Williams and others laud Soviets and tell of spreading propaganda in United States—"Suff" pickets take up collections—Adopt Johnson resolution now in Senate.

In order to connect me with it, and in order to air his own views of patriotism and hatred of the red flag, which we all hate and despise in this country, he said what he did.

And you want to understand, gentlemen, that in the city of Chicago we do not talk about anarchists, we hang them [applause], but we do it by action of the court when they advise violence and destruction of the law of this country. We people in Chicago believe that in all the American sky there is no room for but one flag, and that is the American flag. [Applause.] That is what we believe, and any man who tries to push his propaganda by insulting me and my record upon this case let him answer to his own constituency. I will answer to mine. I sat in my home the night the bomb was thrown by the anarchists that murdered the policemen in the city of Chicago, in the home I had worked for and earned with my own hands and my own brain, and if there is any place in the world where we believe in obedience to law and where we are against nihilists and anarchists it is in the great State of Illinois. We believe in obedience to law, and when I attended this meeting I went there, as I wish every Congressman in the United States had gone, simply to hear what the facts are from that side. When the man wrote this article that we were urging a "red" America, he states what is not true. Not one of the speakers there made any assault; they were all speaking of American ideals. I noticed, when I went in, some large decorations which were prominent in red, and I will admit it stirred me a little bit, because we do not like this doctrine of destroying law by force, and I felt like taking a fall out of the whole outfit, but when the speaker arose he said those decorations belonged to the side show, the theater, that was coming on in a few minutes. He said, "Our decorations are here," and he pointed to two American flags upon the platform. Now, Mr. Speaker, I should not refer to this except for the fact that there is a general disposition to work one end or the other in this present propaganda for and against.

As one of my colleagues stated, there is a propaganda in the United States to uphold the Bolsheviki government, and I believe that is true. I know also there is a propaganda going on in the United States to uphold the spawn of the Czar, who are trying to reorganize the government that will be controlled in a way that the bondholders will be sure to collect their interest on their bonds. But I am an American citizen, and I say, a plague upon both your houses. I say—and that is where this whole trouble arises—that we have got troops in Russia to-day without a declaration of war. As I showed the other day from a letter addressed to my colleague from Washington, 15,000 American boys are in Russia. I do not believe they should be there fighting on either side of this political scramble. As much as I hate the doctrine of anarchy and nihilism, a change of law by force, I hate and despise the doctrine of the Czar, and, as far as I am concerned, I do not care which one of them wins in Russia; but my people in Illinois are begging me to get their boys out of Russia. I had a letter from a blind man this morning who says that his boy is in Russia, and he wants him home; that he did not enlist to fight Russia. But a propaganda is running here not only for the Bolsheviki, not only for the anarchists and nihilists, but a propaganda is going on to get us into war with Russia. When I said that the other day a gentleman said, The idea of our declaring war! And yet this morning's paper, the same paper that publishes a lot of headlines about urging a red government in the United States, this same paper says in its editorial this morning:

The imperative duty of the allies lies in crushing the Bolsheviki by force of arms immediately and the organization of Russians to the exclusion of German intrigue.

Then he goes on to say that this is an enormous task, but it is not more of a task than the task of——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that what is going on over in Russia has nothing to do with the question of privilege.

Mr. MASON. Very well, Mr. Speaker; but I think it has. I think if I could be heard a minute on that, the Speaker might change his views. I am charged here by a man with advocating the disobedience to law and the destruction of law, and they charge here there is a propaganda going on by the Bolsheviki. My answer is that I am opposed to both the Bolsheviki and also the Czar reorganization, but I propose to show that those who are running this propaganda, who are making this false charge against me, believe that we should go to war with Russia, and they say it will not take more sacrifice——

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but on a question of personal privilege you can not go into the byways and highways of history and these various ramifications that are going on over in Russia. If you did, you never would get through with it. Now, if the gentleman has anything to say about his own case, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. MASON. I think, Mr. Speaker, I have stated my own case myself to my colleagues, and I will let it end with that for the present until I can have the time and comply strictly with the rules. You have all been more or less lied about by newspapers, and instead of having your condemnation I should have your sympathy when I say that I love this country; that I am opposed to force being used; that in Chicago we drink that in with the milk we get in our childhood. We are opposed to any change of form of government by violence, and the man who charges me, if some of these pulpheads—you know what a pulphead is? We have had pinheads and blockheads, and now the pulphead comes along, made of soft pulp with a little printing ink on it, and he reads an article that you are a bad man.

And the next moment you say, "Why, the gentleman from Illinois is a fine man." And then they will praise you and sing and shout your praise until the next morning, when some piece of pulp comes out with another piece of ink and the same "pulphead" begins to shout to down you.

Let me say before I sit down that I am sorry to say that many of my colleagues in both branches of Congress, instead of going to the meeting and hearing what was said, being too indolent physically to give a little time to consider and hear the facts, simply get the "pulphead" idea and say, "It is in the newspapers; it must be true."

I say to you the meeting was not in the interest of the "Reds." The young man and the young woman who spoke there spoke simply to give their ideas of what the truth was over there. There was not an insulting remark made, nor was there a suggestion made to change the laws of the United States.

That answers the gentlemen who so far have shown their characteristics of having pulp instead of brains and run off chasing wild rumors because some newspaper is interested in the propaganda of the spawn of the Czar.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—DAVENPORT VERSUS CHANDLER.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to call up the House resolution 523 and dispose of it. It is the report of the Committee on Elections No. 2, seating Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma, the sitting Member. It can be disposed of in a moment, I think.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 523.

Resolved, First. That James S. Davenport was not elected to the House of Representatives from the first district of the State of Oklahoma in this Congress and is not entitled to a seat herein.

Second. That T. A. Chandler was duly elected to the House of Representatives from the first district of the State of Oklahoma in this Congress and is entitled to seat therein.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

VALIDATION OF CERTAIN WAR CONTRACTS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 13274.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

On the amendment of the Senate to the bill and to the title of the bill the conferees have been unable to agree.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
C. S. THOMAS,
F. E. WARREN,
P. C. KNOX,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference report as read.

The SPEAKER. There is not anything to act on.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. The parliamentary motion in a case of this sort is to recede from the position of the House conferees and agree to the Senate amendment, is it not?

The SPEAKER. That is a preferential motion when the time comes to make it.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, let me state what the facts are, so that my motion may be understood. The Senate struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted as one entire amendment a separate bill, so that the conferees had to bring back a report showing an entire disagreement. As a matter of fact, the conferees did reach an agreement practically on every proposition except that involved in section 7 of the Senate bill, which relates to mine and mineral war contracts.

Now, I am moving at this time to agree to the report of the conferees disagreeing to the Senate amendment. Then I shall follow that with a motion to agree to a further conference asked for by the Senate on yesterday afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to further insist on the disagreement to the Senate amendment No. 7.

Mr. DENT. No. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the Chair said, and was going to put it.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. GARNER. If the House should agree to the conference report—that is, the statement of the committee—and further insist on its disagreement and agree to the conference, do the conferees still think they would be bound by the agreement they made to the House in the beginning as to section No. 7?

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that I propose, after we vote on the first motion I made, to adopt the conference report, to move to go into conference; and I shall state frankly and accurately the position of the conferees and await the different instructions the House may see fit to give.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMLIN. At what period of these proceedings will it be in order to move that the House instruct the conferees to further insist on their disagreement?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is making a motion to further insist.

Mr. HAMLIN. He is moving now to agree to the conference report as reported.

Mr. DENT. That is the motion, and the effect of that motion is that we insist on disagreement to the entire Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. Here is the situation about it: If this motion of the gentleman carries, he asks for a new conference; and then, if the House agrees to a new conference, before the conferees are appointed the time comes to make a motion to instruct the conferees.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if this motion is agreed to—and it is immaterial whether it is or not—then it will be in order for the gentleman to move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment and ask for further conference.

Mr. DENT. That is what I stated to the House.

Mr. MANN. If that motion is agreed to, then it will be in order to instruct the conferees.

The SPEAKER. That is precisely what the Chair stated.

Mr. DENT. I thought I had stated that.

The SPEAKER. That is precisely what the Chair stated.

Mr. HOWARD rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

Mr. HOWARD. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. At any stage would not the preferential motion be for the House to recede from its position in disagreement and agree to the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. Yes. It is in order right now.

Mr. HOWARD. Then, Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to section No. 7.

Mr. MANN. The conference report properly ought to be disposed of first.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing to dispose of. He reports a disagreement.

Mr. MANN. That is a report of the conference committee. It is not important.

The SPEAKER. You do not have to act upon the report. There is no report. That is the truth.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] makes a preferential motion that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment. Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman——

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DENT. Would not the effect of the motion of the gentleman from Georgia be to adopt in its entirety the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. Of course it would.

Mr. HAMLIN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. HAMLIN. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the motion of the gentleman from Georgia is a preferential motion, on that motion how much debate will there be?

The SPEAKER. If somebody moves the previous question, there will not be any.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves the previous question. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOWARD. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 68.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers on that vote.

The SPEAKER. Tellers are demanded. Those who favor taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. I asked the Speaker whether the previous question was on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia. I understood it was.

The SPEAKER. It is on both.

Mr. DENT. It was only on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. The part of the conference report that my motion of agreement was made upon was what is known as section 7 of the Senate bill, known as the Henderson amendment. The motion that I have made had no reference to any portion of the bill except that. If I can get a vote on that proposition, which includes these mining claims——

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but the gentleman can not argue that question now——

Mr. HOWARD. I want to make myself clear——

The SPEAKER. Until we get through with this vote. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] says he did not include in his motion for the previous question anything but the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, let the amendment be reported. We can not understand it.

The SPEAKER. The House is dividing. Those who favor taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Thirteen gentlemen have risen—not a sufficient number. The previous question is ordered on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FIELDS. Is it in order to offer an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Georgia?

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered on it.

Mr. FIELDS. I wanted to straighten out the situation, if I may be permitted to do so, by offering an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, may we have the amendment read?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent it can be read.

Mr. SLOAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment, in which the House is now asked to concur, be read.

Mr. FOSTER. I object. That is the whole amendment.

Mr. MANN. That is a matter of right, to have the amendment read under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement of one minute's duration.

Mr. DENISON. I object. I tried to get tellers on this thing, and no one over there would stand for it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. HAMLIN. I understood the gentleman requested only the reading of the amendment known as section 7 of the bill, and not the whole.

Mr. FOSTER. No. He demanded the reading of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Not a word was said about section 7. It is not confined to that. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That whenever during the war emergency and prior to November 12, 1918, any individual, firm, company, corporation, or foreign government has made an agreement with the Secretary of War, or with any officer or agent acting under his authority, or with any agency of the Government authorized to procure for the War Department, for the production, manufacture, sale, acquisition or control of equipment, materials or supplies, or for services, or for facilities, or other purposes connected with the prosecution of the war, and such agreement was reduced to the form of a contract or accepted procurement order and executed or signed on behalf of the Government, but the agreement did not comply with statutory requirements, in every such case the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to waive, on behalf of the Government, such noncompliance: Provided, That he finds such waiver is not inconsistent with the public interest, and in this event the said agreement shall have the same validity and effect it would have had if such statutory requirement had been complied with: And provided further, That such waiver shall not validate such contract or procurement order in so far as any claim for unearned profits may be involved.

"That whenever, prior to said November 12, 1918, any individual, firm, company, corporation, or foreign Government has made any agreement, oral or written, express or implied, with, or has received any order or request, oral or written, from the Secretary of War, or any officer, agent, or agency as aforesaid, for any of the purposes aforesaid, and the same has not been reduced to contract form, or when the Secretary of War has not waived such noncompliance, but such individual, firm, company, corporation, or foreign Government has in good faith made expenditures, incurred obligations, acquired or furnished facilities, equipment, materials, or supplies, or rendered services, in reliance on such agreement, order, or request, in every such case the Secretary of War is authorized and directed, on behalf of the Government, to enter into such contract with such individual, firm, company, corporation, or foreign Government as will, under all the circumstances, fairly and equitably compensate him or it for the expenditures made, obligations incurred, equipment, materials, or supplies furnished or acquired, or services rendered, as aforesaid: Provided, That in no event shall such contract provide for compensation on terms more favorable than the terms, if any, for which the aforesaid agreement, order, or request may have provided.

"That whenever, prior to said November 12, 1918, the War Department, through its officers or agents, has taken possession of any land, or whenever the holder or owner of any land has removed from or removed any improvements from such land at the order or request of the War Department and no valid contract has been made with respect thereto, then the Secretary of War, if he finds that the public interest does not require the possession or occupancy of such land by the Government, is authorized to make compensation to the owner or holder thereof for the fair value of such improvements so removed and the expense incurred by such owner in removing therefrom or for the fair value of the use of such land of which the War Department has taken actual possession and for any expense or loss incurred by the owner or holder by reason of such possession.

"SEC. 2. That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the War Contracts Appeals Commission (hereinafter referred to as the commission), which shall be composed of three members, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall continue in office for one year from the date of this act. One member of the commission shall represent the War Department, one member shall represent the Department of Justice, and one member shall represent the business interests of the country. None of the members of the commission shall be interested in any order, contract, or agreement within the purview of this act or have any interest in any firm or corporation having such orders, contracts, or agreements. Each member of the commission shall receive a salary of $7,500 a year, payable in the same manner as the salaries of judges of the courts of the United States. The commission shall choose a chairman from its own membership and may appoint a secretary, who shall receive a salary not exceeding $5,000 a year, to be determined by the commission and payable in the same manner as the salaries of the members of the commission.

"That there is hereby appropriated, for the purpose of defraying the reasonable expenses of the commission, including the payment of salaries herein authorized, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, available immediately and until expended, the sum of $50,000.

"That within 30 days of the date when the Secretary of War offers any contract or compensation as provided in this act or refuses to offer such contract or compensation, the party to whom said contract or compensation is tendered or refused, or the Government by a duly authorized officer from the Department of Justice may file with the chairman of the commission a notice of appeal: Provided, however, That if the representative of the Department of Justice agrees with the action of the War Department there shall be no appeal by the Government, but settlement can be made at once. If the Secretary of War shall refuse to waive noncompliance with statutory requirements in respect to any agreement within the purview of the first paragraph of section 1 of this act or upon the expiration of 60 days from the date of the taking effect of this act shall have failed to waive such noncompliance, the contractor named in any such agreement may, within 30 days after such refusal or after the expiration of such 60 days, file with the chairman of said commission a notice of appeal. In all cases where an appeal is taken hereunder the commission shall proceed to examine and review the facts and circumstances of the case and make its award or finding thereon according to the justice and equity thereof. Upon giving receipt in full of all demands against the United States arising out of the transaction by reason of which the award is made, the appellant shall be entitled to receive the amount of any award so made, and the proper officer of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay the same, but if the appellant is dissatisfied with the amount so awarded he shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount awarded and shall be entitled to sue the United States in the Court of Claims to recover such further sum as added to said 75 per cent shall make up such amount as will be fair and just compensation as provided in this act, and the Court of Claims is hereby given jurisdiction to hear said suit and render judgment therein.

"That whenever the Secretary of War and the contractor shall fail to agree in the matter of the adjustment or settlement, or as to the interpretation or application of the terms, of any contract which has been made for any of the purposes set forth in this act, and in the execution of which there has been compliance with statutory requirements, or compliance has been waived as herein provided, the contractor or the Government by a duly authorized officer from the Department of Justice may give notice to the Secretary of War of intention to appeal to the commission, and provided notice of appeal is filed with the chairman of the commission within 30 days: Provided, however, That if the representative of the Department of Justice agrees with the action of the War Department there shall be no appeal by the Government but settlement can be made at once. On an appeal being taken the commission shall thereupon proceed to determine the questions at issue as set forth in said notice of appeal; and the contractor shall be entitled either to receive the whole amount of such award as may be made as in full of his claim on the questions submitted or 75 per cent of the same and sue the United States in the Court of Claims for any remainder, all as provided next above as to agreements otherwise within the purview of this act.

"That in executing the duties and powers conferred by this act the commission may make its own rules and regulations and may hear and determine issues informally. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to furnish to the commission such evidence, documents, or papers pertaining to transactions as to which notice of appeal has been filed as the commission may request. The commission is authorized in its discretion to appoint an examiner in any region or district when such region is within the United States where in its judgment the taking of additional testimony is necessary to the determination of any case. Such examiner shall be a resident of the region or district for which he is appointed, and shall not have any interest, directly or indirectly, in any contract or transaction coming before him or receive any compensation save and except such per diem compensation and expenses as shall be fixed by the commission. Whenever the commission shall refer to any such examiner any claim presented hereunder, the examiner shall proceed, under the direction of the commission, to hear the parties, take the proofs, and return the same to the commission with his recommendations thereon as promptly as possible: Provided, That in no case shall any award either by the Secretary of War, the commission, or the Court of Claims include prospective or possible profits on any part of the contract beyond the goods and supplies delivered to and accepted by the United States and a remuneration, which may include a reasonable profit, for expenditures and obligations or liabilities necessarily incurred in performing or preparing to perform said contract or order: Provided further, That the foregoing proviso shall not apply to any contract executed in compliance with all statutory requirements.

"SEC. 3. That nothing in this act contained shall be held to validate any such contract unless the officer who was at the time of the making of such contract the chief of the division or bureau, as the case may be, in which said contract was negotiated, or in the event that such officer was not responsible for the making of such contract, then the officer in such division or bureau who was so responsible, together with the officer who signed said contract, shall each severally make and subscribe to an affidavit in writing, giving the definite terms of such contract, the name or names within his knowledge, of any such officer or officers who took part in the negotiation or making of the same, and stating whether or not within his knowledge any officer aiding in such making was interested, directly or indirectly, in said contract, and in addition subscribing to an oath to be appended to said affidavit in substantially the following form and tenor:

"'I, ———, chief of the division or bureau (naming it) in which the contract hereinbefore mentioned was negotiated, at the time of negotiation thereof, and the officer in the division or bureau (naming it) responsible for the making of the contract hereinbefore mentioned, and I, ———, the officer who actually signed said contract, do hereby each severally swear that I am not and was not at the time of the making of said contract directly or indirectly interested in said contract.'

"That in respect to any such contract as to which any one of said officers can not take the foregoing oath, or after diligent search or inquiry by the contractor can not be found, or is at the time actually engaged in foreign service, or refuses to take said oath, then upon such facts and the fact required in the oath of such officer, appearing by an affidavit of the contractor, or of one of its partners, chief officers, or chief agents acting in its behalf, the Secretary of War shall promptly report such contract to the War Contracts Appeals Commission and furnish to said commission such evidence, documents, and papers pertaining to the transaction as may be within his control, and such commission may request, and original jurisdiction is hereby vested in, said commission to hear and determine said claim with the powers and upon the procedure hereinbefore described in this act. Said commission shall make its award or finding thereon, and deny said claim or grant it in whole or in part, according to the justice and equity thereof, and the award or finding shall have the same force and effect, and create the same rights as if made under the provisions of section 3 of this act. And it shall be the further duty of said commission in hearing, investigating, and determining such claim to find and determine whether any of such officers is or was at the time of the making of said contract directly or indirectly interested in said contract.

"SEC. 4. That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to validate any agreement, contract, or order procured by fraud or to relieve any officer or agent of the Government from prosecution under the penal statutes of the United States for any fraud, criminal conduct, illegality, or irregularity in connection with any of the agreements or orders referred to herein or the execution or signing thereof. In all proceedings hereunder witnesses may be compelled to attend, appear, and testify, and produce books, papers, and letters, or other documents; and the claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving the same shall not excuse such witness from testifying, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person in the trial of any criminal proceeding.

"SEC. 5. That no settlement of any claim arising under the provisions of this act shall bar the United States Government through any of its duly authorized agencies, or any committee of Congress hereafter duly appointed, from the right of review of such settlement, nor the right of recovery of any money paid by the Government to any party under any settlement entered into, or payment made under the provisions of this act, if the Government has been defrauded, and the right of recovery in all such cases shall extend to the executors, administrators, heirs, and assigns, or any party or parties: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to relieve any officer or agent of the United States from criminal prosecution under the provisions of any statutes of the United States for any fraud or criminal conduct: And provided further, That this act shall in no way relieve or excuse any officer or his agent from such criminal prosecution because of any irregularity or illegality in the manner of the execution of such agreement: And provided further, That the names of such contractors and the amounts of such partial or final settlements shall be filed with the Clerk of the House for the information of Congress and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or as a public document, within 10 days after such confirmation.

"SEC. 6. That whenever, under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of War shall make an award to any prime contractor who shall have sublet any part of said contract for material, equipment, or supplies to any other person, firm, or corporation who has in good faith made expenditures, incurred obligations, rendered service, or furnished material, equipment, or supplies to any prime contractor, with the knowledge and approval of any agent of the Secretary of War duly authorized thereunto, the Secretary of War shall apportion the amount of said award justly due to each of the subcontractors of said prime contractors. Before payment of said award the Secretary of War shall require any prime contractor to present satisfactory evidence of having paid said subcontractors or of the consent of said subcontractors to look for their compensation to said prime contractor only; and in the case of the failure of said prime contractor to present such evidence or such consent, the Secretary of War shall pay directly to said subcontractors the amount found to be due under said award; and in case of the insolvency of any prime contractor the subcontractor of said prime contractor shall have a lien upon the funds arising from said award prior and superior to the lien of any general creditors of said prime contractor.

"SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to ascertain and determine the amount or amounts of money heretofore invested or contracted to be invested and obligations incurred by any and all persons and investors for producing or for the purpose of producing or preparing for producing, within the United States, to supply the urgent, published, and evident needs of the Nation during the war, any ores, metals, minerals, or mineral substances mentioned and enumerated in an act of Congress approved October 5, 1918 (Public, No. 220), entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of those ores, metals, and minerals which have formerly been largely imported, or of which there is or may be of an inadequate supply"; the production of which by any claimant or claimants was requested, or demanded, by personal solicitation of, or personal inducement to, such claimant or claimants made by the War Industries Board, the Shipping Board, or the Department of the Interior.

"And that said Secretary ascertain, determine, adjust, liquidate, and out of the moneys provided and appropriated by said act pay to the parties entitled thereto the amount of such losses and damages as he, the said Secretary, shall find and determine have been sustained and suffered or are likely to be sustained and suffered, by reason of having made such investments for said purposes or having produced surplus stocks of such materials; and that in each case he shall make such determination, provision, settlement, advancement, or final payment, and by agreement with owners and claimants make such other adjustment, or take such other action as he shall find and determine to be just, equitable, reasonable, and expedient; and that he make such provisions as he may deem necessary, advisable, and reasonable to prevent further losses pending final decision, settlement, and disposition in any case or cases; that the payments herein authorized be made to the claimant or claimants the said Secretary shall find to be morally, equitably, and justly entitled thereto; that in ascertaining and determining the losses and damages sustained or to be sustained, and the adjustments, settlements, payments, and provision to be made the said Secretary shall consider the prices and conditions existing at the time of each investment and the prices and conditions existing prior to the war, as well as those existing at the time of such determination, adjustment, and settlement, together with all of the circumstances and conditions of each case; that the final determination, decision, provision, disposition, and action of said Secretary in each case shall be conclusive and final; that all payments shall be made and all expenses incurred by the Secretary paid from the funds and appropriations provided and appropriated by said act of October 5, 1918 (Public, No. 220), and that said funds and appropriations shall continue to be available for said purposes until such time as the said Secretary shall have fully exercised the authority hereby granted and performed and completed the duties hereby provided and imposed: Provided, however, That said Secretary shall consider, approve, and dispose of only such claims as shall be made hereunder and filed with the Department of the Interior within three months from and after the approval of this act.

"That a report of all operations under this section, including receipts and disbursements, shall be made to Congress on or before the first Monday in December of each year.

"That nothing in this section shall be construed to confer jurisdiction upon any court to entertain a suit against the United States."

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, for the purpose of simplifying this situation, to withdraw my motion that I previously made, and at the proper time the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will make a motion, and I will then ask the Chair to recognize me to make a motion to instruct the conferees on the particular section of the amendment, section 7, which will very greatly simplify the situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks leave to withdraw his motion.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has the right to withdraw it.

Mr. HOWARD. I will withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws it.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he come down in front.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and agree to the further conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to inquire of the chairman of the committee to what part of it the gentleman desires to disagree?

Mr. DENT. I intend to make a statement as to the situation, as briefly as I can, when I am recognized on my motion.

Mr. DOWELL. But the gentleman's motion is to disagree to all of the Senate amendments.

Mr. DENT. The Senate amendment is one entire proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the liberty of stating to the House, as there has been a good deal of a muddle on this thing, that there is only one Senate amendment, though it contains several sections. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] is entitled to one hour.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, as just stated by the Speaker, there is one Senate amendment, which is the bill the Senate adopted. The Senate struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and adopted a bill of its own. Consequently we had to come back to the House, under the promise that I had made to the House that we would ask for instructions in regard to section 7, before any final action was taken on the entire amendment. As a matter of fact the conferees have practically agreed on the bill in every particular with two exceptions. One is the Senate provision requiring that the contracting officer who happened to make the contract shall make an affidavit as required by law that the contract was beneficial to the Government and that he himself had no personal interest in the contract, and that this must be done before the claim can be considered. The other is section 7, which has brought up so much trouble here on the floor of the House, and which provides for the payment of claims arising out of the development of war minerals by the Shipping Board, the Secretary of the Interior, and the War Industries Board. The conferees on the part of the House refused to agree to that section. I think if the House will read that section there will be no question in the world that there ought to be a unanimous vote not to adopt it in the language in which it was adopted by the Senate. According to the construction that we placed upon it and which it is possible to place upon it, every person in the country who happened to own a piece of land with an undeveloped mineral deposit upon it, upon reading the statement of the Secretary of the Interior in the newspapers that he should develop these particular ores needed for war purposes, and who went to work to do it, would have a claim against the Government. Why, the language of section 7 of the Senate bill may be so construed as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to recognize any moral obligation that he sees fit. I do not believe that there is a single Member of this House who is willing to let Congress go that far.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. On page 16 of the bill I find this language:

> The production of which by any claimant or claimants was requested, or demanded, by personal solicitation of, or personal inducement to, such claimant or claimants made by the War Industries Board, the Shipping Board, or the Department of the Interior.

How does the gentleman reconcile that language with his statement that the Secretary of the Interior would be permitted to settle these claims where a man simply read something in the newspaper?

Mr. DENT. That is not the only provision in section 7. Section 7 contains about three pages. The gentleman has read only one short paragraph of it.

Mr. WINGO. The question is, Does not that section limit the consideration of these claims to cases where there was personal inducement or solicitation to the individual?

Mr. DENT. I do not think so. I think that is one among many various clauses in it that are improper, and I do not believe in that sort of thing. It is a strange thing in legislation to provide that an obligation be recognized because of some personal solicitation. What does "personal solicitation" mean? Can anybody define it? Can anybody construe it? Does anybody know what in law the words "personal solicitation" mean? Is that language used in any statute in any State of the Union or by Congress at any time or anywhere?

Mr. DENISON. I want the gentleman to explain to the House, if he will, why he objects to settling claims that are merely moral obligations growing out of transactions with the Department of the Interior, and yet is willing to settle moral claims growing out of transactions with the Secretary of War? I want him to explain the distinction.

Mr. DENT. I will explain to the gentleman. I am glad he asked me that question, because I am coming to that. I have no objection—of course it would not make any difference whether we objected or not—but personally the conferees have no objection to being instructed. We would be glad to be relieved of that responsibility. I stated to the conferees of the Senate that I was willing to state on the floor of the House that if this bill was sent back to conference I would agree to a separate section giving the Secretary of the Interior the right to adjust, discharge, and settle contracts in exactly the same language that we have given that right to the Secretary of War, and that is as far as, I think, anybody ought to ask us to go.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. In order that the House may understand the gentleman's position, as a matter of fact the House passed what is known as the war minerals bill, carrying an appropriation of $50,000,000; that fund did not become available until after the armistice was signed, and the aggregate amount of those claims, as it is estimated, that could have been paid out of that appropriation was less than $8,000,000, and was so reported by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. If I may have time.

Mr. GORDON. Nobody claims to have any contract under this war minerals law.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, let us see——

Mr. DENT. I decline to yield further.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. DENT. For a question. I should like to finish my statement, though.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is it not true that the claims embraced in the so-called war validating act which we have passed through the House every one of those claims included in that act is based upon a contract, either perfect or imperfect?

Mr. DENT. That is true.

Mr. HAMLIN. But not upon a moral obligation alone.

Mr. DENT. That is true.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is it not also true that the moral claims, called, are claims on no kind of an obligation, but simply moral ones?

Mr. DENT. Some of them may be.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask that the gentleman be permitted to continue and not be interrupted.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield for a brief suggestion?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS. If the gentleman would refuse to be interrupted and proceed to make an orderly statement——

Mr. DENT. That is a good suggestion, although I dislike to decline to be interrupted.

Now, I repeat that I am willing if this bill is sent back to conference to agree to support the section giving the Secretary of the Interior the right to adjust contracts in the same manner that we have given the right to adjust contracts made with the War Department. But I am not willing to agree to section 7 as it passed the Senate. I want to say to the House that ordinarily I would not be willing to go that far, because I do not think that this legislation is germane to the bill this House passed. The Senate has put on an amendment which is not at all germane to the subject matter of the bill as it passed the House, and I think a committee having jurisdiction of that subject, whatever it may be, should have had hearings and introduced a bill of its own. I do not think it is wise legislation on matters of this kind simply by amendment on the floor of the Senate when not a single committee of either House has had an opportunity to examine the question. [Applause.] But in order to get a bill—and this matter is urgent and pressing—in order to get a bill, I am willing to go as far as I have stated to the House, and that is to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust contracts made under his department in the same manner and in the same form that we authorize the Secretary of War. I will now yield to the gentleman from Georgia five minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Before the gentleman yields, will he yield to me for a question?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I am asking for information. I have been informed by one of the principal chrome producers in the United States, who has been producing chrome during the war at the request of the Government, that if there was an embargo placed on the shipment of these rare minerals and substances into this country at this time, or if there was protection afforded by a proper tariff law, that these people could continue their present business in the production of these minerals, and claims would not be necessary.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman's question illustrates the point that I recently made, that all these things ought to be investigated by a committee.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Can the gentleman inform the House as to the total amount of claims involved in this amendment?

Mr. DENT. I can only say to the House that a representative of the Department of the Interior appeared before the conferees and stated that the total sum involved would be somewhere from four and a half million dollars to eight million dollars, but the number of claimants he did not give us.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. GORDON. The representative of the Interior Department did not claim that any of these contracts had been made under this law?

Mr. DENT. He said some had been made.

Mr. GORDON. By whom?

Mr. DENT. The Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GORDON. My understanding was that the Secretary of the Interior did not get a copy of the bill until after the armistice was signed.

Mr. DENT. Oh, no.

Mr. GORDON. I am talking about the war mineral bill.

Mr. DENT. The commissioners were not actually appointed until after the armistice.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am asking for information. There is no doubt that the War Industries Board and the Fuel Administration all requested the coal people to go on and make investments for the output of coal, and a lot of fellows were exempted to go into the mines instead of fighting. The question I want to ask is, If a man did develop a coal mine at the request of the War Industries Board, got his hole in the ground and his tipple up about the time the armistice was signed, could he not come in under the provisions of section 7?

Mr. DENT. I think so.

Mr. WINGO. No; coal was not included in the rare-minerals bill. If the gentleman will read the bill, he will see that coal was not included.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, here is the situation in a nutshell. I will ask not to be interrupted, because I have only five minutes. There was a great shortage in this country of pyrites, chrome, and manganese. Pyrites was wanted to make sulphuric acid for ammunition; chrome was wanted to harden the gun metal, and so was manganese. The lining of all the guns was of chrome steel, to make it efficient and durable. The Secretary of the Interior himself puts the stamp of his approval on this bill; he has practically dotted every "i" and crossed every "t," and we have led these men up to the very brink of bankruptcy by inducing them to go into the production of these war minerals, going to the banks and borrowing large sums of money to increase the output. These gentlemen up to this very minute have not received one single penny. The gentleman from Alabama says that there is no germaneness between this amendment and the former war-contract bill that we passed. He takes the position that the Government of the United States should not recognize the moral obligations on the part of the high officials of this Government.

Why, the man who stopped long enough to consider, to put his fingers to his forehead to get his mental equilibrium, to determine where this or that thing would lead him, was denounced as unpatriotic and a slacker. He was told that the Government needed him, and these patriotic gentlemen responded to this call, and now we want to force these men into bankruptcy and force them to carry these large loans in the banking institutions that have raised the rates of interest on them from 5 per cent to 6½ per cent. The Government of the United States induced them to produce it, and not a single unjust dollar is going to be paid under the provisions of this act to any single solitary man in the United States of America. We would have been impotent to conduct this war if England had cut off the entire manganese supply to the United States during the pendency of the war, if it had not been for the miners of manganese. These gentlemen responded, and section 7 gives to the Secretary of the Interior power to administer this fund, and if the war-minerals bill had become a law in time these gentlemen could have received the funds from the Public Treasury, but under the delay incurred in the passage of that bill, up to this good hour, these men who have invested their all in response to their Government's call have not received a penny, and yet gentlemen are willing now, after they have done their part and done it nobly and patriotically, to say to these men, "You can be dragged into a bankruptcy court; you can forfeit the savings of a lifetime, and your Government will permit you to suffer." That is the situation, and you appropriated $50,000,000 for this very purpose in the minerals bill, and at the very maximum, paying all of these claims under the provisions of this amendment, will not exceed $8,000,000. They are just. There is no looseness about it. There are limitations and restrictions put upon the powers of the Secretary of the Interior that amply protect the Government against fraud, and against those who did not enter into these undertakings in good faith, and I ask the gentlemen in the House to give these men who responded to their country's call in time of great peril justice and relief, and see to it that these claims are paid promptly and expeditiously. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I have had so many requests for time that I ask unanimous consent that the time that I have at my disposal be extended for one-half hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to have his time extended half an hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I do not blame the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] for opposing legislation outside of and beyond the jurisdiction of his committee, added on by the Senate, but there are some things that go on in this House that make even that course sometimes necessary. It is absolutely impossible for anyone to collect 5 cents by way of a claim bill against the Government of the United States, and the House is largely to blame for it. We have a day for consideration of private claim bills on the Private Calendar about once every four years, usually considered at a night session, when unobjected claims only are taken up, usually with only about half a dozen Members present, when anyone can make the point of no quorum and break up the proceedings and all claims fail. This is exactly what happens.

Whether wisely or unwisely, on October 5, about one month before the armistice was signed we passed this bill, and I want to read two short paragraphs of it. It is in point. It is the thing on which this section 7 is based:

SEC. 2. That the President is authorized from time to time to purchase such necessaries and to enter into, to accept, to transfer, and to assign contracts for the production or purchase of same, to provide storage facilities for and store the same, to provide or improve transportation facilities, and to use, distribute, or allocate said necessaries, or to sell the same at reasonable prices, but such sales made during the war shall not be at a price less than the purchase or cost of production thereof.

That gave the President power to take a man's property away from him and to do whatever he wished with it. But we did not stop there. Section 4 penalizes the man if he does not submit to this performance. That section reads as follows:

SEC. 4. That any person who shall neglect or refuse to comply with any order or requisition made by the President pursuant to the provisions of this act, or who shall obstruct or attempt to obstruct the enforcement of or the compliance with any such requisition or order, or who shall violate any of the provisions of this act, or any rule or regulation adopted hereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not exceeding $5,000, or be imprisoned for not more than two years, or both.

Everyone knows that the President had nothing to do with it, but these several boards were given power to and did order men in before them, and said, "You come in here and turn over your business or I shall take it away from you by force and run it by the Government."

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. In a moment. First we authorize that a man's business shall be taken away from him by a vi et armis proceeding, and, second, we propose to fine him $5,000 if he does not willingly submit to it, and now it is proposed that we shall not pay him anything for it if he does it. I do not say that this is the place to put this on; it may not be a good place to add legislation to this bill; but what I do say is that during war times, having by force of arms taken a man's property away from him and penalized him when he did not turn it over, then afterwards we ought to pay him for it. [Applause.] We at least ought to give him a chance to be heard. This does that and no more. Secretary Lane will protect it.

It has been current conversation around where I have been sitting that this bill did not pass until after the armistice was signed. That is not true. The bill was signed October 5, one month before the armistice. Some one may say that we knew the war was ending. We did not know the war was ending. We do not know that it is ended now, and judging from some of the performances that have been taking place around the Capitol the last few days it does not seem to be at an end.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Does the gentleman know of a single instance where the property of these miners or mine operators was taken by the United States Government?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, I have a brief on my desk that it would take all day to read showing what the proceeding was.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What minerals did the act of October 5 apply to?

Mr. FERRIS. The recital of them includes a whole paragraph, which I shall insert at this point:

Be it enacted, etc., That by reason of the existence of a state of war, it is essential to the national security and defense, and to the successful prosecution of the war, and for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy, to provide for an adequate and increased supply, to facilitate the production, and to provide for an equitable, economical, and better distribution of the following-named mineral substances and ores, minerals, intermediate metallurgical products, metals, alloys, and chemical compounds thereof, to wit: Antimony, arsenic, ball clay, bismuth, bromine, cerium, chalk, chromium, cobalt, corundum, emery, fluorspar, ferrosilicon, fullers' earth, graphite, grinding pebbles, iridium, kaolin, magnesite, manganese, mercury, mica, molybdenum, osmium, sodium, platinum, palladium, paper clay, phosphorus, potassium, pyrites, radium, sulphur, thorium, tin, titanium, tungsten, uranium, vanadium, and zirconium, as the President may, from time to time, determine to be necessary for the purposes aforesaid, and as to which there is at the time of such determination, a present or prospective inadequacy of supply.

They are rare minerals needed for the linings of cannons, and in connection with munition plants, and this bill gave the Government plenary power to order a man in and take his property away from him whether he would or not. Section 4 provided a fine and imprisonment if he did not submit, and now it is proposed that we shall refuse to pay him for what we have taken and refuse to give him any tribunal to which he may appeal. It is not a square deal; it only affects the small men—the small miners. They can not afford to wait always for their pay. They can not afford to go into the courts and litigate this case; it is too much to expect; it is only common honesty; only common justice. We can not afford to do less. They served us well in this war. Let us so treat them that they would serve us again if emergency arose.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, the other day, when this bill was sought to be sent to conference, I insisted that the conferees ought to give assurance to the House that this amendment of the Senate, known as section 7, should not be agreed to in conference without first giving the House an opportunity to know something about it. I did not at that time say, and do no now say, that all these proposed claims are without merit; that the Government is not under a moral obligation to make compensation in certain cases; but I did say that we ought not to establish a precedent in this House of subjecting $50,000,000 to the payment of claims, the validity of which the House had never for one moment considered one way or the other. Now, the trouble of the matter is that there is a wrong impression, in my judgment, in the House as to the character of claims which would come under section 7, as compared with those in the other portion of the bill.

There is not a single proposition included in what is known as the war-validating contract portion of this bill, and which bill was carefully considered by the House, that does not rest upon a contract of some kind, either a perfected contract under the law or a contract informally made by some one who had authority to make a formal and valid contract. But the Secretary of War is not authorized to compromise and settle a single claim that does not rest upon some such contract. That is the point. The difference between that class of claims and those embraced in section 7 is that no contracts were ever made with these mine owners by the Government, neither could have been made, for Congress had not authorized them. If the Secretary of the Interior had wanted to make a contract with one of these fellows he could not have done so, because he was not authorized by law to do it. Consequently not one single one of these claims mentioned in section 7 rests upon a legal foundation, but if they exist at all they must rest wholly on moral grounds, and the fellows who are pressing these claims recognize that fact to be true. Why, bless your soul, as soon as this war-validating-claim bill was introduced in this House these mine owners made a grand rush upon the Capitol that would do credit to any football team in existence and landed down here in the conference room of the Bureau of Mines. Not knowing exactly what they wanted they proceeded to organize themselves into a convention, and after proceeding while they finally concluded, as one of them expressed it, that since other people are being taken care of by the Government he could not see why they should not "get theirs"—that their claims were moral and the Government ought to acknowledge a moral obligation as well as a legal one. That is all there is to it. Now, it may be that there are certain circumstances surrounding some of these particular claims that would warrant the Government in paying them, but, gentlemen, we ought to safeguard that. If you are going to recognize so-called moral claims that have no foundation in law, then where are you going to stop?

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. For just a question.

Mr. DENISON. Of course, the gentleman knows there are a great many of these war contracts that have no foundation of law at all, but are merely moral obligations?

Mr. HAMLIN. No; I do not know that.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman is not informed about the bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am informed about the bill and every single one of the claims embraced—if I had time I could read here—are founded upon a contract. Here is the law in regard to the contract-validating bill:

That whenever during the war emergency and prior to November 12, 1918, any individual, firm, company, corporation, or foreign government has made an agreement with the Secretary of War, or with any officer or agent acting under his authority, or with any agency of the Government authorized to procure for the War Department, for the production, manufacture, sale, acquisition, or control of equipment, materials, or supplies, or for services, or for facilities, or other purposes connected with the prosecution of the war, and such agreement was reduced to the form of a contract or accepted procurement order and executed or signed on behalf of the Government, but the agreement did not comply with statutory requirements, in every such case the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to waive, on behalf of the Government, such noncompliance.

Mr. CANNON. Right there, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. That requires a contract.

Mr. HAMLIN. Absolutely.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then——

Mr. HAMLIN. And no one questions the right upon the part of the Secretary of War to make such contracts.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, am I right in the understanding that if this bill goes to conference again, that after section 7, Senate amendment, that you will write into it authority for the Interior Department exactly as we did for the other?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am not on the conference committee and can not answer that question.

Mr. CANNON. Are there no original contracts?

Mr. HAMLIN. There is not.

Mr. CANNON. I know how I am going to vote.

Mr. HAMLIN. Here is a brief filed by these people who have these claims.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would like to have about five minutes more.

Mr. DENT. I am sorry, but I can not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time may be extended five minutes and I may have that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. HAMLIN. I have here now—the gentleman from Georgia talks about the War Industries Board, the Interior Department, the Bureau of Mines, the Geological Survey, and so forth, insisting and demanding—and my friend from Oklahoma expatiated along the same lines—that these people produced these minerals on the request of somebody connected with the Government, and therefore there is a contract. The gentlemen overlook the fact that no one connected with the Government had any right to make a contract. Now, let us see. They have set out here in a brief, which I take for granted is the strongest evidence they have on that point, and the first thing set out is an advertisement by the California Chrome Co. insisting that all the chrome producers produce all they can because the Government needs all the chrome; then next a bulletin from the Geological Survey says this:

Unfortunately for the United States, the present domestic supply of chromite is scarcely one-fourth of the quantity needed for war and domestic uses * * *

At present we are facing a deficit in the supply of chromite and we should spare no effort to increase the output in this country as well as that of adjacent countries.

Now, that is the statement made by the department; not promising to take care of them in any sense of the word, but asking them to redouble their efforts as patriotic men to produce over that which they had been producing in small quantities.

The Du Pont Powder Co. tendered to the Secretary of the Interior their advertising space in the magazines of the country, and he made an announcement of the pressing needs of the country for those minerals, just as the Food Administration and the President and everybody else were insisting that the farmers of this country plant more acreage, grow more wheat, more corn, raise more hogs and more cattle, because they said that "food would win the war." Does any man in this House believe that in doing that they were placing this Government under obligations to compensate these farmers for any loss they might sustain in case the war should end?

Mr. HOWARD. They did it to the extent of $1,250,000,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. They never paid them a cent nor made a contract until Congress had given them the authority to do so. That is exactly what we had not done in this case.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman talks about newspaper advertising being the basis of this. Does the gentleman think the newspaper advertising has come within this limitation of law which says the claim shall be limited to where there was personal demand on the part of certain agencies of the Government?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am contending that the only pretense they have for any kind of claim upon the Government are the things they set out here themselves in the advertisements to the effect that the country would need this material.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman state that was the only thing?

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say——

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman say there were no personal letters?

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say to my friend from Arkansas, who is a good lawyer, that he knows if they could prove that the War Industries Board, the Bureau of Mines, or the Geological Survey, or any other agency of the Government promised these people absolutely to indemnify them against any loss that that promise would not be worth the snap of your finger, because they had no authority to make it. Consequently if your claim has any foundation whatever, it must be wholly upon moral grounds.

Mr. WINGO. I have not been talking about that.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman refers to that.

Mr. WINGO. I am trying to get the gentleman away from something that we all agree on to discuss something that is in issue.

Mr. HAMLIN. I can not yield any further.

The thing resolved itself into this one proposition, that there is no basis in law for these claims at all, none whatever, no contract made, and none could have been made. And the difference between this character of claims and those embraced in the balance of this bill is as great as night is from day. And, as the gentleman from Alabama says, this character of claims has no more business on this bill than a wart has on the nose of a prima donna.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman if there is any reason, if these gentlemen have any sort of claim, why they should be put on a different basis than these others that have claims?

Mr. HAMLIN. I will say to my friend from Texas let them do what the people under the balance of this bill did. Let them have a bill introduced and let it go to the committee having jurisdiction of the matter and let that committee investigate it, and hold hearings, and let the House consider it as it considers ordinary measures. Let the Senate consider it as it considers ordinary measures. And then, if the Congress of the United States wants to throw open wide the doors of the Treasury to claims not based upon law, of course, then it will be all right to let the money be paid; but do not let us tack it as a rider on this bill without giving it any consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, like the gentleman from Missouri, I am a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining. The chairman of that committee introduced a bill in this House which had practically verbatim the provisions of the amendment covered by section 7. That bill was introduced for the purpose of relieving the persons who had become operators in war minerals. We had no hearings on that bill, but it was taken and put on as an amendment to this bill.

I think the House ought to become aware of the fact that it is proposed here by an amendment to authorize the use to the extent of $50,000,000 of money already appropriated by this Congress. I was interested in the passage of what is known as the war-minerals bill, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] seemed to think there was something in the provisions of that bill that justified this proposed amendment. There is nothing in that bill which justifies it. That bill simply authorized the President of the United States to go out and purchase these war minerals. It authorized the President of the United States, if there was an idle mine, and a mine that was not operating sufficiently, to go out and take it over; but there was nothing in that bill to authorize any man under any of the provisions of this amendment to make a claim against the United States Government.

I do not claim that there may not be some men who engaged in the production of these war minerals who have a just claim against the United States Government, but it seems clear to me that the Congress of the United States would be very unwise, without the consideration by any committee of the House and without the consideration by the Committee of the Whole, to enact this legislation which authorizes a part of the executive department to pass upon claims without any law to guide him, without any rule to guide him, but simply upon the supposed proposition that there is a moral obligation.

I assert that there is not a Member of Congress who has considered this measure or who knows anything about the measure, that could rise in his seat now and tell us of a specific instance of a mine operator who has so invested his money as to have a just and valid claim against the United States Government.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the Committee on Mines and Mining reported out section 7 to the Senate regularly and then simply placed it on this bill so as to insure its passage?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not know what steps were taken to insure its passage.

Mr. RAKER. Now, one other question.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I understand that there have been no hearings on this bill.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a further fact that the Committee on Mines and Mining of the House sort of tentatively had an understanding that that committee would not dispose of the matter, but would let the Senate dispose of the matter in such manner as they saw fit?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Not to my knowledge. Now, I can not yield further. I have only five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. All right.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. We have already been furnished with a brief on this subject. That brief was furnished by the men who suffered these great losses, and I certainly sympathize with them very deeply, and I hope there will be some remedy found for them. But that brief bases their claim largely on the fact that the executive departments of this Government violated a tacit agreement with them—with these ore producers—by permitting imports to come into the United States.

Now, I would like to know if that would form the basis of a moral obligation on the part of the United States? There is a provision in the war mineral bill to the effect that the President of the United States has the right to put on a tariff to protect these men. He did not do it. I would like to know if that is an instance of a violation of a moral obligation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I was trying to find in this brief of these claimants a statement which I am certain that I read in it, in which they expressly disclaimed having any contract with the Government. They disclaimed having invested a dollar upon the faith of any statement of any official authorized to act or speak in the premises.

That is the real objection to this bill. Now, with sobs and tears, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] read the provisions of this mining bill, and he read the provisions showing that it authorized the President to do a great many things. But he did not tell you that any of these claimants had acted under that authority of the President or under the authority of anybody authorized by the President, and the truth is that the President never did authorize any of these claimants, and no person acting for the President in that matter under this bill ever authorized anybody to spend a dollar under this legislation.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is a statement in that brief there from Dr. Leaf stating that the bill spoken of by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] was not operative, because it could not become operative if there was an overproduction, and he said there was an overproduction, and it could not operate.

Mr. GORDON. Yes. That is the fundamental objection to this bill. I call your attention to the fact that section 7—if you will get it and read it—which is now before the House does not require that these claimants should have been authorized by the President or anyone acting for the President. There is the vice in all this proposition. They take themselves right out from under the provisions of this mining bill, because this section 7 does not require that these expenditures which they made and these obligations which they incurred must have been made or incurred pursuant to the authority granted by the President or anyone acting in his behalf.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit another interruption?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I may be mistaken as to Dr. Leaf. My eye caught this: Mr. George L. Pratt says:

> It seems to me that anyone who can read English will see why this bill is inoperative. The Secretary of the Interior would have to complain of a shortage.

Mr. GORDON. Certainly. It never became operative.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman says this was not done at the suggestion of the President. It must have been done at the solicitation of one of the departments.

Mr. GORDON. The law does not authorize a department to do that.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman know whether a citizen who is sent for by a department official would have any way of knowing whether that official was authorized or not?

Mr. GORDON. Oh, you can not take the authorization of every Tom, Dick, or Harry. This mining bill does not permit that. You can not do that.

Mr. HARDY. Is the head of this department one that could be called a Tom, Dick, or Harry?

Mr. GORDON. These dollar-a-year men go around and say to people, "Get busy and help win the war." Do you say that you can base a claim against the Government on the mere unauthorized statement of one of these officials or dollar-a-year men?

Mr. HARDY. Nobody has said anything about the dollar-a-year men. This bill does not embrace any of the men you are talking about.

Mr. GORDON. This mining bill upon which they are undertaking to base section 7 requires that a contract must have been made by authority of the President, and, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] just stated and read out of the record, before the President is authorized to act in the matter he must find that there is a shortage of these minerals. There has never been any such finding, and neither the President nor anybody else had authority to act in the matter.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman refers to these as activities entered upon at the suggestion of Tom, Dick, and Harry. But this bill limits it to "the production of which by any claimant or claimants was requested, or demanded, by personal solicitation of, or personal inducement to, such claimant or claimants made by the War Industries Board, the Shipping Board, or the Department of the Interior." Does the gentleman think that a private citizen of America, when called upon by one of these departments to do something for the Government, should go and make inquiry as to whether that department was authorized by the President?

Mr. GORDON. Of course; he must do that. He is bound to do it at his peril. This mining bill confers extraordinary powers on the President, but it limits and restricts the power of the President to commit this Government. The President must first find that there is a shortage of these minerals.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield for a moment on that point?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. This bill does not limit these claims to those who were requested or solicited by the Interior Department, or the War Industries Board, or anybody. That is the section of the bill which deals with their investigation of claims; but the section which authorizes them to pay claims says they may pay anybody who went out for the purpose of producing something that might be needed, because they had read in a paper somewhere that the Government would need it.

Mr. GORDON. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. I do not know anything about a paper, but I have in mind a particular case where a man was sent for by the Secretary of the Interior, who urged him to produce minerals——

Mr. GORDON. That does not justify any claim against the Government. You personally might go out and induce somebody to produce something for the Government. Do you mean to say that that would make any valid claim against the Government, or that it would bind the Government in any way?

Mr. HARDY. It would bind me if I induced you to do something, and, in my opinion, the Government is as properly bound and is under the same moral obligation to pay its just debts as an individual.

Mr. GORDON. You are entirely mistaken about that. You open the doors of the Treasury to everybody who has done anything which might be construed as helpful to the Government since this war started.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the amendment of the Senate to the House bill is for the purpose of validating contracts which are not legal, and according to the decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury not one of these $2,000,000,000 contracts could be paid unless the claimant should go into court and there be able to secure a judgment against the United States.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FOSTER. Just for a question.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is it not true that the ruling was based on the fact not that they were not contracts but that they were not formally reduced to writing and signed, as the law specifically requires?

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Missouri is a good lawyer and has practiced law, and he knows the difference between a legal contract and an illegal contract and whether an illegal contract can be enforced in the courts or not. Now, these are contracts that could not be paid under existing law.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will permit, that is only one of the kinds of contracts contemplated by the bill that is in conference. The case that the gentleman from Missouri names is only one phase of it. There are three other phases of it.

Mr. FOSTER. Here are a lot of men who were induced to speed up and do work in order to secure the war minerals that were necessary in prosecuting this war.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. No; I can not yield. I have only five minutes. I will yield later if I get more time. Men were asked to come to Washington on this matter of war materials. I hold in my hand a copy of a telegram sent to a man in Arkansas who came here and was urged to go back home and mine as much manganese as possible in order that it might be used for the war. He had two sons then in the Army and three more going, which made five sons who went to help win this war in Europe. He remained at home, and each week when his men were paid off he would make a speech urging them to work harder and longer in order that they might get out more of this material for the use of the Government and win the war quickly. To-day that man is a bankrupt, because he acted in good faith and did as he was urged to do.

Is this great Government of ours willing to say to its citizens, "When we urged you to go and put your money into a mine in order that you might produce the necessary material to win the war, now we are not going to pay you anything for it"? That man told me that before the war he was worth $100,000. To-day he has lost it all. Is the Congress of the United States going to say to these little fellows throughout the country, "We will not help you, but we will protect the men who hold the great contracts amounting to billions of dollars"? I say we should be ready to protect the little fellows, too. [Applause.] I voted for the bill to validate these contracts when the bill passed the House, because I believed this Government ought to settle up these contracts. Now, I believe we ought to settle the contracts of these men who were urged by the Government to go out and produce these war materials. It is true that the bill which passed the House early in May went to the Senate and remained there until October before it came back, and was agreed to and finally signed on the 5th day of October. Before it was turned over to the Secretary of the Interior to administer it was too late to do anything with it. The Secretary, wisely in my judgment, refused to administer that law until further action was taken by Congress. Now, can we not trust Secretary Lane under this bill not to permit payment of illegal contracts that ought not to be allowed? I believe we can trust him, and I believe that we ought to agree that these small claims shall be settled along with the others, which amount to two or three billion dollars. Let us not forget the small men. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD].

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I want to tell you something about how this situation has worked out with regard to one of my constituents. Mr. W. H. Denison, from my home county, went into the manganese business in 1887. I know of no better citizen anywhere. Some 15 or 20 years ago the manganese industry ceased to be profitable, on account of manganese coming from South American countries; but when the war started Mr. Denison was sent for and came here at the solicitation of the War Industries Board, the Shipping Board, and the Interior Department, and was told what to do. He was a loyal citizen. He was anxious to do anything that his Government needed he should do to help win the war. He had three sons in the Army and two more to go. Five of those sons did go into this war. Three of them have returned. When those three sons went to war Mr. Denison was a man in good circumstances in our country, worth $100,000. When they returned he was broke, and he was broke because this Government told him what to do, and because he had done it, and now the Government, or some Members of Congress at any rate, seem not to want to carry out the understanding that the Interior Department and the War Industries Board had with him.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman is talking about a specific case, and that is what I have been wanting. The gentleman has mentioned the name of a person who produced manganese. What I would like to know is, What agency of the Government created this obligation, what particular officer of that agency dealt with this gentleman?

Mr. OLDFIELD. This man was not a lawyer, as the gentleman no doubt is. He did not wait for a legal contract as some gentlemen probably would. He was anxious to win the war and he wanted to win it before his sons were killed in France. Therefore all he knew was to do what the authorities at Washington told him to do. He said to them, "Gentlemen, take over my mines and operate them, I will be your superintendent until the war is over without a nickel of compensation; I have sent every boy I have to France." They said, "Oh, no; we do not want to take over the mines."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Who are "they"?

Mr. OLDFIELD. The War Industries Board and the Shipping Board and the Interior Department. I do not know which particular one, but he did not want to take these chances. He said, "I have lost a great deal of money in the manganese game; I have saved up something like $100,000 in other business, and I would rather work for the Government for nothing than to take any chances." They said, "No; we can not do that, you go back and do it," and they intimated that if he did not do it he was a slacker. Now, gentlemen, that was a very bad name to call a man in my country. A man would rather do anything than be called a slacker in Arkansas. Therefore he went back and did it.

When these boys came home from France—and remember that these boys were in business with him before they went away; they are efficient young fellows and well educated. They were helping him run the various businesses, and he dispensed with their services. One of them resigned from a lieutenancy in a camp in Arkansas and went to France as a private in order to get into the war. He was at Chateau-Thierry, and he now comes back and finds his father and mother paupers because his father had enough confidence in the United States Government to do what they told him to do. Now, is not that a moral obligation?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Assuming it is a moral obligation in the broad and general sense, how would the claimant reduce to specific figures the exact measure of damages that he holds against the Government, there being no contract?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I assume that the Secretary of the Interior will adjust that matter, just as the Secretary of War is going to adjust those matters.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But these matters are matters of incomplete contracts; they have had a beginning, or they are proceeding under an old one.

Mr. OLDFIELD. The Secretary of the Interior knows that he can do it, and the War Industries Board knows that it is largely responsible for making paupers out of business men in the country. They think they can adjust these obligations, and I am willing to leave that to them.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But these are all generalities only.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to print in the RECORD a letter which I received from Mr. Denison:

Hon. W. A. OLDFIELD,
Congressman from Arkansas.

DEAR SIR: Below I quote the exact telegrams as passed between myself and the Mineral Division of the War Industries Board:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 15, 1918.

MANGANESE DEVELOPMENT CO.,
Care W. H. Denison, Cushman, Ark.:

You are invited to attend a conference of producers of manganese ores with Mr. L. J. L. Replogle, of War Industries Board, and Messrs. Leigh and Spurr, of Shipping Board, meeting to take place Friday afternoon, March 22, at 2.30, room 716, National Defense Building, Eighteenth and D Streets, Washington.

POPE YATEMAN,
Raw Minerals Division, War Industries.

To which I replied, as follows:

CUSHMAN, ARK., March 18, 1918.

POPE YATEMAN,
Raw Minerals Division, War Industries Board,
National Defense Building, Washington, D. C.:

Your wire 15th, inviting me to attend conference producers manganese ore on 22d. Please wire nature of this meeting and who you expect to be present; will be there if possible.

W. H. DENISON.

Receiving the following:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 18, 1918.

W. H. DENISON,
Cushman, Ark.:

Meeting to get views of producers, with a view of stimulating production and cutting off part of imports to release shipping for war needs. Manganese producers from all over the country will be present.

POPE YATEMAN,
Raw Minerals Board.

I attended the meeting, offered the Government my mines free, also my services without compensation, for the duration of the war, as I at that time had two sons in the Army and three more going. I wanted to do anything to win the war, and win it quick.

The sense of our meeting with the war boards here was that we must speed up production. I hastily returned to Arkansas, invested every dollar I had, and induced many others to do likewise, also borrowed, along with my associates, over $50,000, and put it into the manganese-mining business.

Without the pending relief measure, I am bankrupt, will lose every dollar I have, and my credit also.

Respectfully,

WALTER H. DENISON.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I am going to try and speak simply on the legal aspects of this bill. Gentlemen have addressed themselves to a brief that has been filed by some claimants—what claimants they do not say. They have talked about a brief as being involved in the bill, but that brief can have no possible relationship to the bill before us. The question is not what the people said in the brief, but the question is, What are the provisions of this bill? The chairman of the committee started the discussion by saying that anyone in the United States who has a piece of land upon which or under which there are minerals can prosecute a claim against the United States and enforce it, and then he says that it provides for the adjustment of simply moral claims.

Now, that is the general line of discussion here. The question is, Are these two things true? Can any man who has a piece of land with underlying minerals present and enforce a claim, and, secondly, does this bill provide for the adjustment of claims which have no basis except a moral basis?

I say neither of these things is true. Let us turn to the bill and see; and I am going to read all that is important, and I ask if you will be good enough to follow my reading.

Section 7 is as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to ascertain and determine the amount or amounts of money heretofore invested and obligations incurred by investors for producing, to supply the urgent, published, and evident needs of the Nation during the war, any ores, metals, minerals, or mineral substances mentioned and enumerated in an act for encouraging the production of ores necessary in the prosecution of the late war and which have formerly been largely imported, or of which there is or may be an inadequate supply.

Then follows a provision in the first section of the act limiting the claimants to those who have been requested by three agencies of the Government—by the Shipping Board, by the War Industries Board, by the Secretary of the Interior—to produce these metals as to which we passed this act.

It does not provide that any man who has some land under which manganese may lie may present a claim, but only those men who have been requested to produce this metal in pursuance of this act by these three agencies of the Government. They are not subordinate officers, they are not dollar-a-year men, they are not Tom, Dick, or Harry, they are not second lieutenants or captains. They are the responsible agents of the Government. What more responsible agency of the Government can you mention than the Secretary of the Interior? During a time of national peril, what more important and responsible agency of Government can you name than the War Industries Board? During a time when it was important and necessary to transport our ships and materials to France, what more responsible agency of the Government could you suggest than the Shipping Board? Having provided that only those who are authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, by the War Industries Board, and by the Shipping Board can present these conditions, what is the next provision? The next provision is that for payment. Does it provide, as gentlemen have claimed, that only moral claims or claims based upon a moral obligation alone shall be adjusted? No. Let us take the language and see.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Is not a moral obligation upon an honest man binding upon him?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Surely it is, and I am not decrying the force of a moral obligation, but I am saying that gentlemen are wrong when they say that it is possible under this act to adjust a claim which has its only basis in moral obligation, and I point to the act itself, which reads thus:

> That payment herein authorized be made to the claimant or claimants the said Secretary shall find to be morally, equitably, and justly entitled thereto.

What is the meaning of "equitably"? I have turned to the dictionary and I find the following to be the definition of "equity":

> Equal justice; in practice, the impartial distribution of justice.
> 2. The application of principles of right and justice to the legal adjustment of differences, where the law, by reason of its universality, is deficient.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand a moral obligation against myself, it is an obligation that I ought in good conscience to pay, and I feel that I should pay a moral obligation just the same as I should a legal obligation; and I feel that my Government should recognize and pay a moral obligation—an obligation which in good conscience it ought to pay—just the same as it ought to recognize and pay a legal obligation. When the war-contracts bill was before the House I was in favor of the settlement of those claims. I voted against the bill, because I did not approve of the method of settlement proposed by the bill. That bill has been so changed in the Senate that I think it has been very materially improved, and I can support the bill as it comes from the Senate. As to these war mineral claims, I want simply to say this: These men who owned the mineral lands and the mines have invested their money on the request of the Government and with the faith that the Government would see that they could sell their product. They did it at a time when the Government needed their product for war purposes, and when the Government had stopped the supply of such products from coming into the country from other countries. On the faith of that understanding, that promise, that request, of the Government, they have invested their money. If the Government could or would give them protection against ruinous competition from other countries, so that they could continue their business and sell the product of their mines, all of these gentlemen, I dare say, would be satisfied. I have talked with a number of them, and they say if they could go ahead with their business and sell the product of their mines, they would make their money back and be satisfied. But the present administration will not give them protection, so they can never get back the money they have expended at the request of the Government and for the good of the Government in any other way, so far as I can now see, except in the manner provided in this bill. If I could have my way about it, I would give them protection against competition with other countries where the cost of production is so much cheaper than in this country. That would enable them to continue operating their business and let them get their money back in that way; but I can not have my way about that, and I do not intend, if I can help it, to let this Government make those men lose the money they have invested for the benefit of the Government and not get it back from some source.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman would not induce a man to perform such labor for himself without compensating him?

Mr. DENISON. Certainly not.

Mr. HARDY. Is the gentleman willing to have his Government repudiate an obligation which he as an individual would recognize?

Mr. DENISON. I am not.

Mr. DECKER. Who made this promise to these miners?

Mr. DENISON. The Secretary of the Interior and the War Trade Board.

Mr. DECKER. Where did they get their authority to do that?

Mr. DENISON. The war minerals bill passed the House several months before the war ended, and the country was given to understand that the bill was going to become a law. It passed the House promptly, and was held up, it is true, for a long time in the Senate, but the country was given to understand that it was going to become a law; we all recognized the absolute necessity that it should become a law, and on the faith of its becoming a law some of the departments of the Government went ahead and induced these men to invest their money.

Mr. DECKER. Does the gentleman mean to say that these men, with enough intelligence and information and money to run a mine, did not understand that the Secretary of the Interior could not make such a guaranty as that?

Mr. DENISON. They not only had enough intelligence and money, but they had enough patriotism. [Applause.] And they did go ahead and put their money into these investments in order to help win the war.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman said awhile ago that he was in favor of his Government keeping its moral obligations.

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think we all agree with him upon that.

But the gentleman does not mean to convey the impression that an adverse vote here to-day would mean the Government would not keep its moral obligation, if there is any?

Mr. DENISON. I do not mean to say that; I do not know whether it will or not. I am saying, as far as I am concerned, that the Government ought to meet these obligations, and ought to do it in the manner provided in this bill, if it will not do so by giving them enough protection to enable them to continue operating their mines and plants.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does not the gentleman think a bill ought to come in in the regular way and let the House consider it?

Mr. DENISON. That would be preferable, of course; but just now there does not seem to be any chance to get a bill through Congress in that manner. Besides, if we are going to authorize the War Department to settle the moral obligations they have incurred, we ought with equal justice to let the Interior Department settle the moral obligations they have incurred. In either case, it is claimed, the obligations were properly incurred in the prosecution of the war.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the provision for two reasons. One of them is that I believe it is the duty of the Government, the same as an individual, to meet its moral obligations. The other reason is a practical one from the standpoint of the Government. The gentlemen arguing against this proposition ask, Why do not you bring in a separate bill? If you vote down this proposition to-day and there is not some provision made for the settlement of these claims, mark my prediction, these valid contracts that no man can investigate and honestly say that the Government ought not to pay will be used as a wedge by which bad claims will get into this House during the next 15 or 20 years, and sooner or later you are coming in with an omnibus bill that will carry many times the few millions of dollars that will be paid out under this bill. I did not like to vote for the original bill, but I finally came to the conclusion it was to the interest of the Government from a monetary standpoint to clean these matters up now while the issues are fresh, while the officials are present, and while all the evidence is available to get them out of the way. Now, what is involved in this? The only question it involves is this: Are you going to undertake to meet the moral obligation of an informal contract, illegal contracts, if you please, made by one department of the Government, attached as a provision on a bill providing for the same kind of contracts in another department of the Government? If I had my way about it I would write a general bill which would require all these claims of every class to come in and be presented within the next six months and thus clean them up and get them out of the way and not consume the time of this Congress during the next 20 years in undertaking to consider the claims. Some gentleman said, "What authority did these gentlemen have to make these claimants do what they did?" I will tell you what they had, the strongest authority that ever existed in this country, the authority which existed during this war and that was the fear of your Government, the fear of being called a slacker. Why I know of one instance where one of these representatives went to a farmer who had a small deposit on his land and he said, "You must either go to work and get this out or we will take charge of your farm." He said, "By what authority am I required to do that?" He had a copy of the bill that this House passed months before, and he said, "This bill is still pending in the Senate, and the President has written a letter for it. It is going to pass. You will either do this or we will take away your property." Tell me, is that not the strongest authority that any man would recognize during these trying times, the demand of his Government to do something for the prosecution of the war?

Oh, but the gentleman says these claims are based on newspaper advertisements. I deny it. I am opposed to allowing such claims, and the pending proposal excludes them by limiting relief to claims based upon personal solicitations, personal inducements, and personal orders of Government representatives. I wish to God that every contract that will be settled under the War Department provision will be as clean as the contracts that Mr. Lane will settle under section 7. Gentlemen talk of the original bill that passed this House—the war-contract bill—covering only those cases where they had a contract of some kind a little bit informal. Oh, no; you are going to take care of cases like this where a man, a department employee, sits here in Washington and calls up contractors and orders without limit their output. "What is your price? We are not fixing any price; send in the goods and your cost sheets and then we will fix your price." They will settle claims where there was not even a price agreed upon, in some instances. You tell me you are going to settle these claims and pay the bill and talk about the authority to settle claims with the little mine owners throughout the country. I have not one in my district of which I know. I would be ashamed of our Government if it should say it would settle the claims of these big war contractors and then say to a man like the old man Bill Oldfield talked about, "There is no legal obligation; nothing but a moral obligation; and the Government does not meet its moral obligations." A government that will not meet its moral obligations falls into contempt.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I am opposed to this bill because of section 7. Section 7 came before the Committee on Mines and Mining. It was taken away from there. It came in the form of a bill. It was taken out and attached to this bill. There have been no hearings on this. As a matter of fact, section 7 opens up the possibility of any man to come in with a claim that he had developed, or tried to develop, a mine, and although he did not give one single pound of ore to the Government he still was attempting to produce the ore that was provided for development in the bill we passed on December 5, 1918.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARLAND. Not now. An attempt was made in this bill to pay everybody, whether they produced material or not. It seems to me that claims of that kind are not any more just than the claims of those who are abroad now and who lost all of their business. I met men on the other side and in this country who had gone into the Army at the call of war and who lost all of their business. Have they not just as much claim because of the fact that they had to go to war and forsake their business? They are coming back now without anything to which to go.

This bill that we passed on November 5 provides also that the President of the United States can issue a protective tariff to take care of these men and their business. He has refused to do it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARLAND. And I want to say that I believe when the Republicans come in that they will pass a tariff bill to take care of them.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

Mr. STEAGALL. I am not opposed to this Government's paying its honest debts, whether they be in such shape as meets the technical requirements of the law of contracts in every case or not. Of course, in the haste with which we have proceeded in the conduct of the war there has been unavoidable waste. That was not unexpected in the unusual situation that confronted the country. But we ought by all means to throw every possible safeguard around the allowance of claims not supported by clear and well-established contract. I am willing to take care of the sort of obligations that seem to be contemplated by those who support the Senate amendment No. 7. But while I hesitate to differ from the able lawyers on this floor who have contended otherwise, I am thoroughly of opinion that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. DENT] is eminently correct when he states to the House that this amendment would embrace claims where there has never been even any semblance of a contract or obligation on the part of this Government, and where there has never been any sort of request or demand or solicitation upon any claimant for any particular production to support such claim.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. STEAGALL. No. I have not the time.

This amendment will open up a flood of claims from every corner of the country, if people desire to bring them in, as they may be expected to do under its blanket provisions. The chairman said they had had an estimate from one party only as to the amount of claims that would probably be presented. I believe he said the Secretary of the Interior had suggested that they would amount to about four and one-half millions. I take it that he had in mind such claims as he had information about, or in connection with which his department had been asked to accept responsibility. But we have not heard from the Shipping Board nor the War Industries Board nor any others. No man can tell what these claims will amount to nor how high they will mount. The only limit we know of is that payments can not be made in excess of $50,000,000, as provided in the other bill, out of which appropriation it is proposed that payments shall be made.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I regret that I have not time to yield.

I wish to discuss for a moment the legal effect of the language used in this amendment, which is the purpose for which I arose. I ask those who have discussed this phase of the bill to follow me for a moment while I call attention to the language used. The first paragraph of the amendment authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and determine the amount or amounts of money that may be claimed, and so forth. This paragraph merely authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to investigate claims, and it is this paragraph which contains the limiting clause which it has been argued restricts payment to such claims as are based upon production, which was requested or demanded by personal solicitation to, or personal inducement to, such claimant or claimants, made by the War Industries Board, the Shipping Board, or the Department of the Interior. The limitation seems to have been shrewdly drawn to apply only to the clause which directs and authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to make investigation of claims. The investigation which he is directed to make, as provided in the first paragraph of the amendment, is safeguarded by the limiting clause referring to production requested, demanded, or solicited by department officials, but this paragraph of the amendment carries no authorization for the payment of money to claimants. The succeeding paragraph is the one which authorizes the payment of claims. This paragraph also directs the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain, determine, and adjust claims and directs that they be paid to parties that he may determine are entitled thereto such losses and damages as he may decide have been sustained or suffered or that may be sustained and suffered. This paragraph which directs payment does not carry the limitation set out in the first paragraph, which directs the Secretary of the Interior to make investigation of claims. I think it is clear that no such limitation applies to payments to be made under any recognized rule of construction of the language used in the amendment. In any event, it is surprising to me that any man in this House should be willing to support this amendment, so carelessly worded as it is in its present form. I think if such legislation is to be carried in this bill it should at least be carefully framed and its meaning made clear. I do not for a moment question that the bill will be administered in perfect good faith and with all due regard to the obligation resting upon those who will represent the Government in all adjustments involved. But I think it is due them, as well as the Government, that their duties should be clearly defined and the interest of the Government safeguarded as far as possible against all unjust and unfair claims. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-three minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to myself eight minutes.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, when the conferees went into conference upon this bill they went in, practically, instructed upon this proposition. The chairman of the committee had stated to the House that he would bring the matter back to the House before taking action upon it. We therefore felt that we were instructed upon the proposition.

Now, I do not believe that there is a Member of the House who wants section 7 of the Senate amendment in its entirety. I do not believe, on the other hand, that there is a Member of the House who wants the Government to repudiate any honest, moral obligation. If the conferees are instructed, why, of course, I as one of the conferees shall abide by the instructions given us. If we are sent to conference with a free hand, I as one of the conferees will do all in my power to help to amend the provision so that it will take care of moral obligations and at the same time protect the Government against unjust claims.

I am not in favor of recognizing the claim of every man who says that he enlarged his operations because he read an advertisement in the newspapers that the Government wanted him to do so. On the other hand, where the Government or any of its agents in charge of the prosecution of the war, or in preparing the means for the prosecution of the war, induced men to invest their money and produce these materials, the claims of these producers are just as legitimate as the claims of any other producers, and that class of producers should be cared for. I am not in favor of individuals growing rich by reason of special favors extended to them by the Government.

On the other hand, I am not in favor of bankrupting honest men and destroying legitimate business by the strong arm of the Government. I realize that a great deal of amendment must be made to this provision before it should be accepted; and, if given a free hand in conference, I shall do all in my power to help to perfect the amendment, so that it will do justice to the Government on the one hand and to the honest, legitimate business man on the other.

I believe that it would be a mistake to instruct the conferees. If you instruct them to disagree to this amendment in its entirety, it must go out of the bill. If you do not instruct the conferees to disagree, the amendment can be revised or amended in conference. Therefore, instructions would mean that the amendment would be accepted as it passed the Senate or rejected in its entirety. I think that either course would be a mistake. On the one hand it would give advantage to men who have no just claims, and on the other it would defeat many honest obligations. Therefore, I hope the conferees will be permitted to work out a provision that will take care of honest and legitimate claims.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman tell me where, under section 7, any man would have a legitimate claim except where they were asked to do work by one of these departments?

Mr. FIELDS. I am not in favor of recognizing a claim which has as its only basis the fact that a man read in a newspaper that the Government wanted him to produce these minerals.

Mr. HARDY. Can the gentleman show me, under section 7, where such a claim could be made?

Mr. FIELDS. I think it could be done. But I would put such safeguards into the amendment as would prevent that.

Mr. HARDY. Is the gentleman in favor of putting in the bill a provision authorizing the payment of all persons who at the solicitation of these departments had invested their money and made an expenditure?

Mr. FIELDS. I said a moment ago that I am not in favor of this Government, because of its ability to do so, bankrupting any honest, legitimate business man.

Mr. HARDY. Then I take it that the gentleman is in favor of paying the moral obligations of the Government.

Mr. FIELDS. I am absolutely in favor of the Government paying its moral obligations. I have no patience with the individual who will look for legal or technical excuses to get away from moral obligations.

Mr. HARDY. I believe the gentleman wants to see justice done. Does not section 7 require that every claim under it should show that the work done was done at the request of one of these departments?

Mr. FIELDS. There is some difference of opinion on that, and I think that the conferees should be careful to throw proper safeguards around it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman does that and closes debate, I would like to have five minutes on this bill. I wondered if the gentleman would object if I would ask unanimous consent for five minutes, not to be taken out of the gentleman's time?

Mr. DENT. I will not object.

Mr. KAHN. I believe the time has been agreed to by the House. I have no objection to the gentleman asking for further time.

Mr. DENT. I understand one gentleman yielded back two minutes of his time, and if the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is willing, I will yield those two minutes.

Mr. KAHN. And I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri three minutes of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. I am recognized for five minutes. If there is any controversy about it, that settles it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not a member of the committee that has charge of this bill or of any committee that deals with this or any kindred question, and the most I know about the pending measure is derived from the debate I heard here to-day. I understand this bill, especially section 7 of the Senate amendment, provides a method by which certain claims may be presented against the United States, allowed, and paid. Gentlemen say the claims provided for in the Senate amendment are founded upon a moral obligation, not founded upon a legal obligation.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes. Make your question short.

Mr. HAMLIN. Section 7 does just what the gentleman says, and makes the findings of the Secretary of the Interior absolutely final.

Mr. RUCKER. I am greatly obliged to my colleague, but I hope I shall not be interrupted any more, because I want to say in the time given me what I have in mind. Gentlemen say—and my good friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] has put everybody to the test by inquiring, "What is the difference between a moral and a legal obligation between honest men?" Everybody should answer, "There is no difference." Ought not the Government to pay its moral obligations as well as its legal obligations? My answer is, "Yes." But I want to suggest another thing. I am surprised to hear gentlemen argue strenuously here—as has been done eloquently by gentlemen from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] and from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] and Texas [Mr. HARDY], and the Lord knows who else, because there are many of them—in the behalf of paying everything asked for by men and corporations of great wealth, who have large claims against the Government, but say nothing in behalf of the poor man or the man of moderate means who has suffered a loss. Is it possible that the time has come when before the Congress of the United States the millionaire's claim will get the ear of Congress while the poor man's claim can never force itself through the doors which exclude him from this floor?

Let me suggest that I am in favor of doing what is morally right, but let me also suggest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] and to these other advocates of complying with and discharging moral obligations—let me suggest to them that when you give ear to the rich you should go clear down the line and enter into the humble homes of the millions of people who have lost, just as these manufacturers and other rich men have lost, and carry a little sunshine into the homes of the poor. Oh, you say, "They do not pay the taxes nowadays, because under a Democratic administration, thank God, we have made the wealth of this Nation pay a large part of the revenues by levying an income tax upon the rich." That is true. But the poor pay their part—not the bulk of it. But I tell you again, that when Old Glory was in danger, when she was waving in the air and flying in the breezes, and the summons came to the boys to respond to the call to arms, most of the boys came from the homes of poor men, because there are more poor men than there are rich men, and although the poor men individually have less dollars than rich men, everybody knows that poor men have the larger number of boys.

What are you advocates of the "moral-obligation" doctrine going to do in a case like this?

The Government asked the farmers of the country to plant more corn and to sow more wheat, and the farmers responded nobly and patriotically. They relied upon having the services of their sons on the farms to help harvest the increased crops; but before the corn matured, before the golden grain waved in the sunshine and the breeze, another draft law came along and took the 18-year-old boy and the man 32 years old and up to 45, and, by reason of the draft law, the farmer was deprived of his help to harvest his crops. Storms came, and the wheat fell and rotted in the field. Ought you not, as a moral obligation, to determine how much you owe that man and pay him? And what about the young man, like one from my district, who had been progressive and industrious, honest, sober, and frugal, who had exercised great business sagacity and accumulated property of considerable value, who was part owner of a bank, cashier in the bank, owner of a large hardware store, owner of four or five hundred acres of land and the stock upon it, who was drafted into the service? The summons came to him, "You must leave your bank counter, abandon your hardware store, turn your farm over to tenants, sacrifice your stock and crops, and go to war." Such a man is to-day at the front, where the firing line recently was in France. He has a mortgage debt of over $30,000 on his property and has an interest rate of $5 or $6 a day to meet. He was taken away from a profitable business and put in the trenches with a gun in his hand to fight back the enemies of democracy. Would it not be fair and morally right to pay that man his salary as bank cashier and refund to him the interest he has paid? The Government prevented him from earning money to pay it and, therefore, is morally obligated to reimburse him. Oh, before you attempt to be morally fair with millionaires, for God's sake be morally fair to the poor men of my country. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], and when he has concluded his remarks I shall move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is recognized for 12 minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I favor the principle involved in section 7 of the Senate amendment. Now, let us look at the situation in all fairness. We were getting manganese and chrome and pyrites, minerals absolutely necessary for the manufacture of our ordnance and ammunition, from Rhodesia and South Africa. On account of the exigencies of war our supplies from those sources were cut off, and the various departments and bureaus of our Government that were called upon to furnish the ordnance and ammunition for our country necessary to the winning of the war looked with apprehension upon a serious situation. Thereupon the Secretary of the Interior called to Washington some of the owners of land on which these minerals could be found and explained to them the situation. He appealed to their patriotism to put the necessary mining machinery upon their lands in order to develop the mines situated thereon. In all good faith these owners of the land proceeded to meet the requirements of the Government. It has been said here that if they had not done so they would have been denounced as "slackers." That is probably true. If they had refused to help their country they certainly would have been subject to the charge of being unpatriotic. Therefore I deem it proper to review the situation that was pending in this country. We were in the midst of war. I was informed this very morning by Gen. Lord that our expenses for the whole of that war, up to January 1, 1919, averaged $24,879,202.32 a day. But I feel confident that toward the close of the war the expenses of this Government were probably nearer $40,000,000 a day. The sudden closing of the war was undoubtedly a happy surprise to most of the people of this country. They feared a longer struggle. One day more of this war would have cost this country at least $24,880,000. Now, the sum total of the claims involved in this paragraph, as stated to the conferees by Mr. Manning, of the Mining Bureau, would at the outside be $8,000,000, and possibly $4,500,000 would be nearer the correct figure.

When these gentlemen who owned the mining properties came to Washington to consult with the Secretary of the Interior and other Government officials and were told the situation, they went honestly and patriotically to work to produce the ores that were needed by our Government in order to manufacture those materials that were essential to the winning of the war.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. No; I can not yield. I am sorry, but I have not the time. If the war had continued for any considerable length of time, these people could and would have delivered to the Government every pound of ore they produced, and could and would have received their pay for it. And no one would have objected. That is the truth of the matter. But the armistice, coming as suddenly as it did, found these men almost at the beginning of their operations. They paid out of their own pockets in good faith hundreds of thousands of dollars to develop these mines, and I say they undoubtedly have an equitable claim upon the Government. Oh, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] got up here a moment ago and waxed eloquent about the poor farmer not getting anything. Let me call the attention of the Members of this House to the fact that there will be reported into the House in a few days, I understand, from the Committee on Agriculture, a provision that will pay the farmers of this country $1,250,000,000 to guarantee the price of $2.26 a bushel for wheat. Some of the members who are violently opposed to this pending proposition will readily vote for that enormous sum for the farmers. Are not these other men, who valiantly came to the aid of their Government in the hour of its stress, entitled to something? Would you say to them, "We know that you came to the assistance of the Government, but you ought to pocket your loss; this is a poor country; you ought not to come in here and ask to be reimbursed even for the moneys that you expended in developing your plants, but the farmers are entitled to $1,250,000,000 out of the Public Treasury to maintain a fictitious price for their wheat?" Evidently in the minds of some Members it is entirely a case of whose ox is being gored.

There are some gentlemen in this House who think that every man who has a claim against this country is a crook. Thank God I do not believe that of my countrymen. [Applause.] I believe that there is as much honesty in the United States as you will find anywhere on the globe. I recognize the fact that every safeguard ought to be thrown around a provision of this kind. I feel confident that the conferees on the part of the House will endeavor to throw around the legislation every safeguard, so that claims that can not be fully substantiated will be rejected and thrown out. And I want to say one thing in that regard: This section of the bill would be under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior. Parenthetically, I do not believe that it is a good thing to add a legislative provision of this sort to a measure that embraces a subject that is of a somewhat different nature. You could not do it in the House, because our rules forbid it. But they can do it in the Senate. We can not circumscribe their action; we can not formulate their rules of action. The Senate put that provision on this bill. It is going to be enforced, if the House adopts it, either in this form or a modified form, by the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane. I happen to have known the Secretary of the Interior for many years. He is an honored citizen of my State. There is not a man, woman, or child within the confines of California that could for a moment think of Frank Lane doing a dishonorable thing. [Applause.]

I am willing for one, knowing the man as I do, to let him pass upon these claims. I know that justice will be done to the Government and also to those men who in good faith came to the assistance of the Government in furnishing these minerals that were so necessary to win the war.

As I said, there are only three minerals involved. They are pyrites, chrome, and manganese. They are found in a few sections of the country. We have not been able in recent years to mine these minerals profitably. The people abroad have produced them so much cheaper than they could be produced in this country that the market for these minerals in this country was practically destroyed. But the feeling that actuated the American people was that we must win the war at any cost. To win it we had to have these minerals. We could not get them from the foreign countries that have been hitherto sending them to our shores. Therefore we had to get the men in this country who have the properties on which these mines are located to produce for us the ore that we required. They went to work in good faith for the Government, and they are entitled to relief. I hope that the House will send this bill to further conference and instruct the conferees to include the principle of these provisions of section 7 in their final report.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired, and all time has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to further insist on the House disagreement on the Senate amendments and agree to the conference.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is it now in order to instruct the conferees?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House instruct the conferees on the part of the House to agree to section 7 of the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves that the House instruct the House conferees to agree to section 7 of the Senate amendment.

Mr. KAHN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KAHN. If that is adopted, would it bind the conferees to the express language of section 7 as it now stands?

The SPEAKER. Of course it does. They are instructed to agree to section 7 of the Senate amendment. They can not juggle around and bring in something equivalent.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were 56 ayes and 102 noes.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes the point of no quorum, and evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 71, nays 226, answered "present" 4, not voting 128, as follows:

So the motion to instruct the conferees was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. CANNON.

Mr. BANKHEAD with Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma.

Mr. BOOHER with Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi with Mr. COPLEY.

Mr. CLARK of Florida with Mr. EDMONDS.

Mr. DAVEY with Mr. ESSEN.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina with Mr. HEATON.

Mr. KITCHIN with Mr. FORDNEY.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE with Mr. BOWERS.

Mr. POU with Mr. MASON.

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. WINSLOW.

Mr. SEARS with Mr. NOLAN.

Mr. RUBEY with Mr. STEENERSON.

Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. SWITZER.

Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH with Mr. VARE.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY with Mr. WILSON of Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. The vote has already been announced. The gentleman may vote "present."

Mr. CANNON. Well, I shall vote "present," if I can not vote "no." I made arrangements to be sent for from the committee room.

The name of Mr. CANNON was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill. Pending that I would like to see if we can agree upon a limitation to general debate.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, what has the gentleman to suggest?

Mr. PADGETT. I was in hopes that we might conclude it this afternoon, between now and 5 o'clock.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I can not agree to that. I have requests for 2 hours and 10 minutes upon this side. I do not know what the gentleman from Tennessee has, but I told him that if he would take one hour to-morrow morning after the House goes into the Committee of the Whole House, I would be willing then that the general debate cease.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I was very anxious to conclude it this afternoon.

Mr. BROWNING. So was I; but the other business has taken up too much time.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may conclude in one hour after the House goes into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that sort of an arrangement always cuts some one off at the last minute who has been promised time, because various amounts of time are wasted, and the gentleman in charge of time can not tell under that arrangement how much he may yield. I suggest that the gentleman fix the time for general debate so that we may know exactly.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may close in two hours and three-quarters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill shall not run longer than two hours and three-quarters. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion, I also ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. IGOE in the chair temporarily in the absence of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, the American Congress is always ready to protect American rights in every land and on every sea with whatever arms and armaments are necessary, according to the judgment of the representatives of those who pay America's taxes, whenever the House has before it the facts that demand such consideration. The outstanding feature of this proposed legislation is an expenditure of $520,000,000 for 39 battleships and cruisers at a time when we have no enemy in the world, at a time when America already dominates the destinies of mankind. As a result of the great war, every American family now goes staggering down the halls of time burdened with a mortgage of $1,500, to which this bill would add $35. No necessity for such an appropriation is even suggested and no argument for its passage is even presented here. We are only told we should give the Navy $520,000,000, because some somber and mysterious message that can not be confided to the greatest parliamentary body the world ever saw, has come across the seas with gloomy and menacing prophecy of our future, at the very moment when our transports bring home the heroes whose gallant deeds have given our Republic the foremost place among all the military and conquering nations whose achievements are recorded on the pages of history. Mr. Chairman, as I stand here on the floor of the House of the people's representatives I can catch the murmur of a message as mysterious, but more menacing, more authoritative, which seems to whisper—as yet—"Look out, look out, that's my money you are spending."

At this very moment the United States has an Army of more than 4,000,000 of the very best soldiers who ever marched on a battle field, and our place among the countries is such that we could almost discharge them all, put every ship out of commission, and go to sleep in safety with open doors for the next 10 years. Under our present circumstances to invest $20,000,000 each in a dozen big iron pots that hardly dare venture outside harbor protection for fear they be sunk by tiny submarines as suddenly and as easily as a rattlesnake can strike down a champion athlete would seem to be as unnecessary, as defenseless, as futile as to appropriate the money for a wireless to Mars.

If the Paris conference will this day enter into an agreement that from now no State shall add another ship of war to its navy, that conference will do more good than has been accomplished by any body of men since the Cross of Christ was raised on the Mount of Calvary. Should Woodrow Wilson secure from the Paris conference treaties which arrange that the navies of the world ride just as they are without the spending of another dollar for more armed denizens of the waters that have long since been chased off the seven seas by little submarines, I would cheerfully and proudly vote to present to him and his heirs and assigns forever the cost of a battleship, and history would acclaim it a proper reward for a useful, honorable, and wonderful service. At the very moment when the clock of destiny strikes the auspicious hour for the beginning of the disarmament of mankind these naval and military experts come before the committees of the House seeking monstrous appropriations that would plant a soldier or sailor on every American taxpayer's back for a thousand years to come.

The greatest military system ever organized on the planet challenged modern civilization, and America responded with 4,000,000 men from its homes and $30,000,000,000, from its exchequer. Before the assaults of our quickly trained, disciplined Americans, nonprofessionally commanded by 90-day officers, the cohorts of professionals disappeared like chaff before the wind. The appearance of our armies on the battle fields of Europe marked the termination of the career of a tyrant who had Christendom by the throat. Eighteen months after we entered the struggle, unarmed, unequipped, undrilled, the professionals say, our troops brought it to an abrupt conclusion. Why did we destroy this military caste that ruled the German Empire and threatened the existence of modern society—to build another? The nations of the world stand at our door asking for justice and inspiration for the future. The Department of the Navy responds by demanding that we authorize them to expend $520,000,000 to crowd the sea with ships of war that would menace the rights of every small nation.

Before the terms of peace are finally signed our taxpayers will be paying more than a billion of dollars of interest per year. In order to reach the position at which we now stand you have placed upon the labors of every person in our country a charge of $10 per annum and upon every family a requisition for $50 each year to pay the interest alone upon your investment to bring peace to a half-wrecked world.

What have we accomplished? Where do we stand? What is the value of our victory? What benefit do we derive therefrom? Why, we get the splendid privilege of investing five hundred and twenty millions of borrowed money in floating steel castles to overawe a waiting world that earnestly seeks our friendship. Of what avail all this sacrifice, if the menace still exists, and if the demand upon our resources still continues? If this appropriation is actually necessary, then our enterprise was useless, our expenditures futile, and lost lives in vain. With this $30,000,000,000 we could have built 1,500 of these great battleships and rule the world without having lost a man, if the naval experts are correct in their views. We could have done this, saved every boy we lost, and been absolutely secure.

What danger awaits; what country threatens America? For a moment lay aside the British Empire. The fleets of America outrank the combined navies of France, Italy, and Japan. The armaments of the rest of the world are negligible at sea, and ours can match the combined sea power of all the rest of the world in battle except the British Empire, even if such a combination could be imagined. What difficulty will we have in keeping ahead of Japan? This bill is not designed for that purpose——

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. In just a moment. We should continue sufficient appropriations to maintain a lead over Japan and other possible opponents. That requires no such tax upon our revenues as is suggested, for many years to come, and probably never. Why this call upon the House by the naval department? They point out no enemy, they suggest no possibility of danger. This would appear to be nothing but the vain dreams of professional seamen obsessed with their own theories of the importance of their profession, who have no practical experience in collecting or conserving revenues, but simply think that they hold Aladdin's lamp in their hands and have but to rub it. Who is to provide all this money? Do they contribute?

Said Glendower, "I can call spirits from the vasty deep."

"Aye, so can I, and so can any man," said Hotspur; "but will they come; but will they come?"

Have they in mind to challenge the naval supremacy of the British Empire? The safety of our cousins' confederacy depends upon the safety of the British Isles, and that depends up n the capacity of their fleets to protect those isles. If Great Britain loses the possession of the Suez Canal her empire collapses, and before long England and Holland will be pointing to the glories of the past side by side. They have a decided lead in the strength of their navies, and it is idle to suggest even that they will allow us to build ships that will make us their equal on the seas. However feverishly we might endeavor to equal them, still more frantically will they labor to hold their lead.

What have we to fear from them? The minute war should be declared our coasts would be blanketed with mines and submarines, as was the coast of Germany during this war. Not once did any of that much vaunted master fleet approach the cities or the shores of Germany. On this floor a gentleman said yesterday that New York would be an immediate object of attack in case of such a war by that great fleet which never dared venture within sight of the outlines of the German coast.

We could have nothing to fear from England's imperial assembly of steel-clad monsters. Within 24 hours of the sound of the first gun our troops would be far into Canada, and in 10 days they would command every Province of the Dominion of Canada and its Provinces would be forever States of the Union from the time the treaty of peace should be made. England, Scotland, and Ireland could not go to war with a Republic which has no distant possessions of value upon which its existence depends as long as Britain's most charming daughter lives right at our door. For more than a hundred years these two sisters of the Anglo-Saxon race have lived side by side in amity and concord, with no gun mounted upon either frontier, with no fortress located on either border, and with no armed vessel on the Great Lakes between us.

When Dewey sailed into Manila and was threatened by the German admiral, it was the Britisher who notified the Kaiser's representative that he would come to America's aid if needed. Kitchener of Khartoum told me that when the British fleet advanced to the bombardment of Alexandria and the suppression of Arab massacre, the admiral ran up the signals warning the ships of other nations to withdraw, as they all did, the last to go being an American ship of war which skirted the entire English fleet drawn up in battle line, his flag signaling as he swept by, "I have a notion to go in with you anyway." Where is any man on this floor who will venture to even suggest we need further arm against England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, Australia, South Africa, and Canada? Why spend five hundred and twenty millions against them? There is no reason tendered, and yet we hear this eternal, hoarse cry for means to slay those who have no intention to fight us. "Give, give, said the horseleech's daughter."

Who are these men that come without rhyme or reason to make this demand upon the American Congress and the American taxpayers? What is their attitude toward the men who produce the revenue, and the legislative body that appropriates it? But a few days ago, the captain commandant at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station actually issued in his official bulletin an order that any man whose application for a discharge from the Navy was supported by facts presented by a Member of this Congress should be punished and penalized therefor. What wonder that such men feel that they can call upon us for anything and get it without proof or argument.

Almost yesterday that official bulletin denounced the crown princes of the Republic, the heirs of Abraham Lincoln in the Middle West, as liars and perjurers, so anxious to escape from the service in which they volunteered that they had invented enough dying grandmothers to indicate that an epidemic of bubonic plague or Persian pox must be sweeping the Middle West. When these men, so-called naval experts, have so little comprehension of the responsibilities of the American Congress, so little respect for the character of the American youth, why should we give an hour's serious consideration to demands which they present without any facts, without any reasons why they should be granted? Why should we trust our millions with men who can not respect our sons? What standing should they have in this court?

The principal development of sea warfare in the last four years has been the submarine, which has supplanted a battleship as certainly as the wireless has surpassed the mustang mail carrier of the plains. How does it happen that in all the data presented in these hearings they gave us no estimate of the comparative fighting value of the submarine and the battleship? Why was it that when I challenged the orator of the Committee on Naval Affairs to tell me, from all the information accumulated by that learned committee, of the relative value in war of the sea wasp and the sea elephant, he answered, "I don't know"?

Gentlemen, did the American people authorize us last November to spend $520,000,000 of their money before we have had any information at all as to whether the big ships have been junked by the submarine? Oh, when I asked the gentleman from Michigan about that yesterday I know the gallant tar from the raging Ohio informed us that as long as a $20,000,000 battleship could maintain a steady gait of 15 knots an hour no submarine could harm it. Does our ability to dominate the seas depend upon our capacity for outrunning our foes? Is this $500,000,000 navy they want us to furnish to seek safety in flight every time one of these little sea devils shows its periscope above old Neptune's kingdom? The eloquent gentleman from Michigan answered me yesterday that the submarine and the battleship were not comparable. Oh, that does not answer the question as to which would be the victor. Neither are the polecat and the lion comparable, but everybody knows which has the right of way when they meet.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio rose.

Mr. LITTLE. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman later. The lion and the battleship depend upon their speed for their safety. Shall the next John Paul Jones, when called upon to surrender, cry gallantly back, "Oh, I haven't begun to run yet; just watch my smoke." Should Lawrence have murmured as he fell, "Don't give up the ship as long as we can make 15 knots an hour"? What would you think of the American Navy if history recorded that when the Constitution met the Guerriere Capt. Isaac Hull had signaled to the Britisher, "We challenge you to a foot race. We can go 15 knots an hour, and fear you not"? Shall we discard all the splendid literature of seagoing warfare and strike battleship medals bearing the motto, "The bumblebee stepped on the elephant's toe and hurt the poor thing so he scarcely could go; the elephant said with great tears in his eyes, 'You coward, you, why don't you take one of your size'"? The mastery of the Roman Empire was lost because Mark Antony and Cleopatra could outsail Octavius Cæsar. Can anyone imagine old Farragut figuring on which ship should have the better pair of heels? The victory in sea battles in the future, as in the past, will depend upon the valor, the skill, and the equipment of him who stays to fight, not upon the speed of him that runs away. In every naval contest the only value of speed is the power it gives to circle and maneuver. The ancient hulk of Old Ironsides, as she lies in Boston Harbor, would decline in contempt to remain side by side by these lubbers of the sea that flee from the wasps of the ocean, and would put to sea in the greatest storm that ever broke upon a Yankee coast if the motto of our future $500,000,000 Navy is to be, "We can outrun any submarine that ever stuck its periscope above the waves."

This bill asks us to expend $15,000,000 in building 14 submarines, and to put $520,000,000 into 39 battleships and cruisers. For $520,000,000 we could build 500 high-grade submarines. A dozen of them at each end of the Panama Canal, a dozen of them in front of New York Harbor, a dozen at each of our great ports, with a properly situated line of mines, and our coast would be impregnable to attack. England had the greatest fleet in the world within a few miles of the German shores. Germany was prepared with mines and submarines, and the English sailors never ventured within gunshot of the German coast or dared invade the Baltic Sea with serious intent. The German fleet possessed the Baltic and never dared attack the Russian coast for fear of mines and submarines. The gentleman from Washington and others suggested that the big English Navy dominated the North Sea and the German Navy never dared come out. They did come out and fought the English major fleet on the high seas, and went home and announced a victory, and the English had to think it over a week before they had decided they won the fight. Both of them, scared stiff, scuttled home without reaching any decisive result, and that is all the good the big fleets did anywhere around the real zone of war. The fact is that the great navy of England never dared venture a hundred miles from the shores of the British Isles for fear a smaller German fleet would assail the English shores. The little fleet of Germany held the big fleet of England right at one place, and if the Germans had won the war, the fleet could have boasted that while they lay in the Kiel Canal they were winning the war just as well as the English could boast that their fleet did. The real fact is that none of them dared to venture far from land for fear of a submarine.

The disparity in cost between the submarine and the battleship is too great to permit the matching of a battleship against a submarine. Who will peril $20,000,000 worth of steel for the chance of sinking $1,000,000 worth of submarine. We can build 39 battleships and cruisers or 500 submarines with this $520,000,000. Is it possible that there is anybody so lacking in perception, even a naval expert, that he will tell us that 39 battleships is a better protection or a better weapon of assault than 500 submarines? I think not. The gentleman from Michigan inquired who controlled the surface of the sea. Is there any man in the world will tell us that 500 submarines would not chase 39 battleships off the ocean? Why, no ship of war could keep afloat anywhere in the world for 90 days out in the ocean if we had 500 submarines ranging the seas, and not a warship on the waters would venture across the ocean to attack a coast on which 100 submarines lay in wait. The men who advise such expenditures for these battleships, and only want $15,000,000 for 14 submarines, which is what this bill provides, absolutely have no comprehension of the development of modern war at sea.

During nearly all this war the greatest fleet the world ever saw was tied up in a Scotch harbor behind a blanket net for fear a little submarine would nose in and tie a can to the tail of a $20,000,000 ship and sink it to the bottom of the harbor. Those little vessels found their way across the Atlantic, into the Mediterranean, into the harbor of Constantinople, and haunted the dreams of sailors all over the world. Gentlemen, if you are intending to appropriate that money, let us spend it in the full light of intelligent comprehension of modern civilized warfare on the element where John Paul Jones, Stephen Decatur, Oliver Hazard Perry, and David Farragut floated our flag in triumph and glory. If you are to spend this money, spend it in a practical way; put something afloat that can take care of itself and guard the seas.

Mr. GORDON. Did the gentleman notice the dispatch from Paris yesterday to the effect that the peace conference has outlawed the submarine and was going to stop their use for all purposes?

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, yes; I saw that this was done by the advice of these naval experts who wanted the battleships. I know a submarine is no place for a well-dressed man. These fellows are all brave enough, but they like to fight in clean clothes, not down in some dirty semidungeon in oily trousers and greasy blouses. Besides, the submarine is no place in which to hold a reception.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. A few moments ago you stated the submarine controlled the seas——

Mr. LITTLE. Wherever they go.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. If that is the case, how do you account for the United States moving 1,900,000 troops to France?

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] explained it yesterday. The transports showed better pairs of heels than the submarines and outran them. Can you tell us of any battleship that lingered behind the transports to fight it out with the submarines? They tell us now that there never were more than 35 of these submarines in the Atlantic at one time. Why was it that the magnificent Navy of England could not be located through a third of the war? The two big fleets never met, except by mistake, fought without result, and flew for home, Germany sending out word that England was defeated, and we afterwards learned that England had won.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If that was so, why did not the German fleet leave its port and come out?

Mr. LITTLE. Because the English fleet was big enough to demolish it eventually, because they lay in port and held the English fleet in port.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And held them in.

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly. The English fleet never saw the coast of Germany during the war.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But they dominated the North Sea.

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, the submarines dominated the North Sea.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. If the English fleet kept the German fleet within the German zone, why do you accuse the British fleet of cowardice?

Mr. LITTLE. I never dreamed of such a thing. From the day of Drake and Blake till now nobody ever accused the English sailor of cowardice.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Of uselessness?

Mr. LITTLE. Why, no; they simply had the good sense to realize that they could not afford to pit a $20,000,000 ship against a million dollar submarine, when the probabilities were that the wasp would sting the elephant to death.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the gentleman does not mean to say that the English fleet did stay in?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; of course.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman is misinformed.

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, no; I am not. There never was a time when the Baltic Sea was not all tied up by the German fleet. Very infrequently even the North Sea had the pleasure of the English fleet's company. If they did go out, where did they go and what did they do? Why did they not attack the German coast or venture into the Baltic and fight the Germans there or aid the Russians? Do you mean to say the English fleet kept the German fleet in harbor?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Absolutely.

Mr. LITTLE. But the Germans came out and fought a big battle and advised the whole world they had won it and never lost control of the Baltic Sea.

If these naval men had any data that would be useful on the success or failure of the submarine, it should all go before the House. I asked for the information yesterday. Oh, I know that the submarine is no place in which to hold a social reception, but that does not interest me. What I want to know is why you do not spend this $520,000,000 for the best possible purpose, if it is to be spent at this stage of the proceeding, and why the submarine is not the better weapon, if they think that is the fact?

Oh, yes; I would like to see the submarine outlawed and abolished, but you might as well attempt to abolish the rifle. Every time a nation gets into serious trouble it will build and send to sea the best defense possible, and you can not stop it. When a man is fighting for his life he will hit below the belt or fight from any angle. This Banquo's ghost will never cease to rear its periscope, the lineal descendant of the sea serpent, and eye the distant horizon with glassy and menacing gaze. I wish that it were not so, that all wars might cease.

> Would that some sweet bird from the south
> Might build its nest in the cannon's mouth;
> Till the only sound from its rusty throat
> Were the wren's or the bluebird's silver note.

Of all countries America could most easily profit by the submarine. It is hardly imaginable that any nation will again violate the rules of war by sinking defenseless ships and women and children. But a flock of submarines along our coasts would make them free from the possibility of attack. America has less to gain and more to lose by their discontinuance than any other nation.

Before the last of these great ships is finished the first completed will be rendered of no value by some more modern development. Who are these men that demand our people's money? Last week they insulted the sons of the taxpayers and ordered the Congress of the United States to venture no suggestions to them. Who are they to pass upon the disposition of the people's revenues and the laws that Congress shall enact? America went into the war to break down militarism forever, and who are these that would steal the stakes from the table when we have won? What actual, intelligent evidence have they tendered that they have such knowledge as would warrant us in following their suggestions? Do you think 4,000,000 American mothers sent 4,000,000 of their sons to the rendezvous with death across the seas that some noncombatants here in Washington who never paused to consider whether this war had changed the rulers of the ocean could squander $520,000,000 of their fathers' hard-earned money on big steel coffins as obsolete as the mummy of Rameses?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman tell us what would have been the result of the war if England had not had that fleet?

Mr. LITTLE. The Germans would have bombarded the English coast and sunk the transports unless the English, French, and Americans had covered their coast lines with mines and sent flocks of submarines to sea to run the Germans back to the Kiel Canal as I now urge this Congress to spend what money we do appropriate. They would have otherwise attacked the English ports.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And won the war?

Mr. LITTLE. This war was won at Cantigny, Chateau-Thierry, Verdun, and the Argonne, where American soldiers, drilled for three months often, by 90-day trained officers, disdained the trenches, left the big guns behind, charged the machine guns, violated every rule of these experts, threw European methods to the wind, fought as their fathers fought from Concord to Guiguinto. They swept on the German ranks like the prairie fire, captured the trenches they had held for four years as if they were street barricades, and saw the military system that scientific noncombatant general staffs had been building for 50 years crumble into atoms as they struck it. They demonstrated forever the futility of technical professionalism as compared with the inspired soldiery of free men, as the French revolutionists, unclad, unshod, undisciplined, beat all Europe. They proved that 90 days makes a high-class officer for fighting purposes, and that good officers make good fighting soldiers in a few weeks, if need be, as I have told you many times on this floor could be done. They broke all their technical rules of war, turned the tide of war, saved Paris at the last gasp, saw the German military caste vanish before them like breath into the frosty morning air, and brought almost within our sight the golden day when the nations of the world can reduce the equipment of war to a minimum and enjoy the maximum of peace and harmony.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman think there is a possibility that the war would have been over before the soldiers got there if it had not been for the English fleet?

Mr. LITTLE. The English fleet was practically no protection for a transport against the submarine, against which it could scarce protect itself. The most it did was to keep the German fleet at home, as English submarines could just as well have done. If the English had 500 submarines for every 39 battleships, no German ship of war would have ever traveled a hundred and fifty miles from port, and the big fleet would never have been missed. We waited six months to get the first drafted man into camp, and but for these experts we would have had a million men under arms in 60 days, have borrowed the English transports, and begun to send them across in four months, and had a million there by last Christmas. The war was won by the valor of American soldiers fighting according to the methods of American fighters for a hundred and fifty years, and with sufficient submarines to convoy them they would have been without fear of any big ship's attack.

But, gentlemen of the House, did we destroy German militarism simply to transplant its theories to America? Are we to begin by adding $500,000,000 to our debts when our Nation has achieved the very pinnacle of victory and power? Let the Paris conference agree to limit military expenditures and discontinue these drains upon the prosperity of the nations. We entered this war, we said, to protect our sons, their homes, and our taxpayers. Let us now begin to reap the fruits of victory. The American soldier fought for the perpetual insurance of the rights of man, and the substitution of the cross of Jesus Christ for the crown of Julius Cæsar, as the standard of civilization.

This Congress owes it to the record it wishes to leave on the scrolls of time, to the shades of the mighty dead who founded and reared this great Republic and now hang over the battlements of heaven to see their sacrifices bring the achievement of their highest hopes, to the gallant lads who risked their lives in arms, and to the fathers and mothers on whose aching backs these billions will be borne for centuries to come, to not be now entrapped in the meshes of the military system they have destroyed, but to raise instead this standard of civilization which marks forever the termination of the reign of Julius Cæsar and the beginning of the dominion of Jesus Christ.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON].

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

A VISIT TO THE IMPORTANT MILITARY CAMPS IN THE VICINITY OF NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, on January 28 I made a trip to Newport News for the purpose of inspecting the military camps in that vicinity. At the boat landing at Old Point Comfort I found waiting a brand-new street car, No. 311, a car of the latest type, marked on the side:

Property of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Inside the car were numerous cards advertising private and commercial institutions and the statement:

White passengers leave by front door, colored passengers by rear door.

The Virginia "Jim Crow" law for the separation of white and colored people was operating in cars owned by the Government, for signs stated that colored people were to occupy the rear seats and white people the front seats.

These cars were being operated on street railway lines said to be owned and operated by a private corporation. There were a number of these cars on the Old Point Comfort line. Fifteen cents fare was charged from Old Point Comfort to Newport News. From Newport News the Government has extended this privately owned line to Morrison Aviation Field. The extension is between 2 and 3 miles long and is called the Virginia Avenue line.

The Government also built a cement highway from Thirty-fourth Street, Newport News, to the Morrison Schoolhouse, a distance of about 6 miles. It was commonly reported by the soldiers and civilians that arrangements had been made to complete this highway to Lee Hall and Yorktown. Negro soldiers were repairing the road in front of Headquarters 43, Motor Truck Division. Statements were frequently made that the soldiers had been detailed to repair this highway.

It is common rumor that the Government is to build a concrete road from Old Point Comfort to Yorktown via Newport News, and there is every indication that this is true, because I saw soldiers working on this road. This highway runs through country that is largely flat and swampy.

The Morrison Aviation Field was located on low ground and had to be abandoned because it was unsuited for aviation purposes. Numerous buildings remain upon the field, vacant and unused. Two steel water tanks on high steel towers were erected on these grounds.

Along the extended street railway, Virginia Avenue line, and the new cement highway is found the town of Hilton, about 2½ miles from Newport News. It is in a low, swampy place, with water standing in pools everywhere. The streets were impassable because of the mud and water.

In this town are about 500 cottages and buildings of the most modern construction. All of the houses have slate roofs and were built of first-class material, and had all modern conveniences. Nobody lives in these houses except a few workmen who are finishing some of the buildings.

It is stated that they were built by the Emergency Fleet Corporation. It was also stated that the intention was to fill in around these houses, fill the streets and pave them, and build 15 miles of sidewalk. Also, that arrangements were being made to build 800 more similar houses there. The location of Hilton is wholly unsuited for town purposes, the whole surrounding country being swampy.

Numerous large ditches are to be seen in this vicinity, built for the purpose of draining this locality. It is said that the colored soldiers stationed in this vicinity did work in the construction of these ditches. Between Hilton and the Government warehouse is found a malaria drainage ditch, said to be 14 feet deep, 21 feet wide at the top, and 4½ feet wide at the bottom. This is only one of many ditches constructed, or in the course of construction, in the territory between Newport News and Morrison Schoolhouse.

OPEN-AIR STORAGE.

About 1 mile out on the Virginia Avenue line in a low, swampy place is located what is locally known as the Old Stevedore Camp, now a part of Camp Alexander. It is now being used for open-air storage. Here are found numerous abandoned buildings, many of them approximately 20 by 133 feet in dimensions. They are low, one-story, rough, frame buildings, and officers told me they cost in the neighborhood of $2,660 each.

At this place are stored in the open air about 400 caterpillar tractors and 14 finished armored motor tanks, standard 6-ton tank, model 1917, fully equipped with machine guns and ammunition. Officers informed me these armored tanks, complete, cost $55,000 each.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Do I understand they are in storage there?

Mr. DILLON. Yes. Right in the mud; exposed to the rain and the sunshine.

Mr. FESS. What did they cost?

Mr. DILLON. Fifty-five thousand dollars apiece. For each of these tanks is a large canvas covering said to cost $75 each. Many of these canvas coverings had been pulled off and lay in the mud and water. In passing, people frequently walked on them. I had to do so myself in order to get through one place in that open-air storage camp.

There were also thousands of motor trucks, trailers, and ammunition trucks, some of them set up and some in crates. Hundreds of iron and steel wheels equipped with new 36 by 10 dual Firestone solid-rubber tires, said to have cost $250 each, were lying around in the mud and water. An officer said some of this material had been in open storage for six months. There were also hundreds of ammunition wagons and passenger automobiles packed in crates.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Was there any place where they could be stored?

Mr. DILLON. Yes. I will come to that in a moment and show that there were numerous warehouses and also empty buildings all around this open-air storage.

In this open-air, salt-air storage this equipment and material is in mud and water, exposed to the elements.

About a mile away are found 24 warehouses, approximately 150 by 250 feet in dimension, with fire walls and cement floors, and all said to be empty except one.

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. Are those warehouses now filled so that the material can not be stored?

Mr. DILLON. No. They are empty, so I am told.

On one side of the warehouses is the street railway and concrete highway, on the other side a railroad, and the warehouses have fine cement loading platforms. On the platform outside warehouse No. 20, which was said to be empty, stood a large number of crated automobiles.

Between these storage houses and the camp just mentioned are found corrals, operated by the animal embarkation division, Newport News, which contain several thousand horses and mules. It was reported that some of these animals had been there since August, 1918, and had cost the Government about $240 each. The horses were in mud several inches deep, and there was nothing but mud for them to lie in.

Along the paved highway and street railway is found a big concrete tank about 14 feet high and 30 to 40 feet in diameter, said to have been built by the Government at a cost of $220,000.

On the Boulevard street car line between Newport News and Hampton is a concentration camp, where they are now erecting some hospital buildings. These hospitals are being built on ground that is being filled in by use of a suction pipe. A centrifugal pump was operated on a dredge in the bay, and pipe carried in the sand and mud to fill in under some of these buildings.

At Old Point Comfort was being constructed a cantonment of several hundred buildings. Some of the buildings in this cantonment were located in the water, and a pumping plant was pumping sand to fill in around these buildings. Some of these buildings rested on cement piers, some 4 or 5 feet high, and standing in the water. A noncommissioned officer told me the buildings were occupied by 36 soldiers.

Fifteen carloads of Gramm motor trucks from Lima, Ohio, were standing on the track at Fortress Monroe. At Old Point Comfort were several hundred ammunition trucks and tractors stored in the open, exposed to the salt air and the elements. These were brand new and from some the covering had not been removed.

At this point I want to state that 40 Garford 3½-ton trucks left Akron, Ohio, under their own power for Baltimore last Saturday. At 3 p. m. Saturday 40 International 5½-ton trucks arrived in Baltimore.

Everyone knows that salt air will cause rust and corrosion on all metal parts, and all the machines so stored in the open will be absolutely ruined in a short time.

In Newport News, on Thirty-fifth Street, between West and Virginia Avenues, are six apartment houses built by the War Department. They contain eight apartments of four rooms each and are used by the officer clerks of the port authorities and by employees of the Shipping Board. They are said to be built on land owned by the Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. They are stucco buildings with slate roofs, and have all modern improvements. On West Avenue, at the foot of Thirty-fourth Street, are four buildings of similar character and similarly occupied.

The president of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. is Homer L. Ferguson. He is a brother of Gen. Frank K. Ferguson, the commanding officer of the territory in that Army district. Lieut. Col. H. Clay M. Supplee is chief of staff. Col. W. B. Scales is executive officer. Capt. L. G. Thom is assistant to executive officer and is in charge of labor department.

It will thus be seen that this family controls practically the commercial and governmental activities at Newport News, and also the military activities in that entire Army district. Thus they cooperate among themselves and with various Government activities, and have mutual interests in the upbuilding of that community, including the phantom city, Hilton, in the swamp.

I have just received a letter from the Emergency Fleet Corporation, which reads:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION,
Philadelphia, Pa., February 4, 1919.

HON. CHARLES H. DILLON,
House of Representatives,
Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Answering your letter of February 1, 1919, relative to Hilton village, Warwick County, Va., I beg to submit the following information:

The land on which Hilton village is being constructed was purchased by the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. and sold to the Shipbuilding Realty Corporation, a subsidiary company, for stock of said realty company. We have not the record of the person or persons from whom said land was purchased.

It comprises 80.20 acres, more or less, and cost approximately $40,100. The project consists of 472 houses, 2 apartment buildings for 10 families, and 5 stores, which will accommodate 964 shipyard workers, or 2,410 persons.

It is estimated that the gross cost of this project will be $3,595,966.71, including all public utilities and street improvements. Loans in the total amount of $105,130 ($38,000 to Newport News & Hampton Railway, Gas & Electric Co. for electricity and $67,130 to Newport News Water Co. for water) are included in the gross estimated cost and will, when repaid, constitute a credit against the same.

The Emergency Fleet Corporation holds a first mortgage on this property and improvements to the amount of $3,550,000. The Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. has assigned all stock of the Shipbuilding Realty Corporation to the Emergency Fleet Corporation as collateral for its guaranty. By the terms of the mortgage the Emergency Fleet Corporation holds the right to approve not only the sale price of the houses but also the rental price. The mortgage carries interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum.

If any further information is desired we would be glad to procure same upon receipt of your further request.

Very truly, yours,

J. MILLISON SMITH,
Manager Passenger Transportation and Housing Division.

This 80.20 acres of land is said to have cost $40,100. So help me God, fellow Members, I would not pay $10 an acre for that land.

Mr. BUTLER. How much an acre did they pay?

Mr. DILLON. They paid $40,100 for 80.20 acres.

This Shipbuilding Realty Company is evidently a straw company. It does not appear to have any real holdings. I judge the Emergency Fleet Corporation's only security is the stock of this straw company for the loan of $3,550,000, which would also include the buildings on the premises.

In passing, let us hope that this phantom city, notwithstanding its unholy conception, will be governed in years to come by God-fearing officials, of whom it may be said:

In him none ever any baseness saw;
His rule was honor, and his word was law.

Is there anyone on this floor who can justify this wanton waste? Is the War Department acting like a prudent business man in thus caring for the property belonging to the Government? How long would any of you continue in your service an agent who would allow property worth many millions of dollars to remain from month to month in the open air, in mud, water, rain, and sun, when you have provided ample storage facilities? You would immediately discharge such an employee as grossly inefficient and unworthy of employment.

It is absolutely inexcusable that this property should be stored in the open in an abandoned camp, where it may be lost, stolen, or looted. Especially so when there are ample facilities for storing it in warehouses and thus give it protection from all destructive elements.

Is it prudent management to allow thousands of horses and mules to remain for months in the insanitary conditions in which they are cruelly kept? They are eating away their value while the water meter is daily recording the water taken from the water company's plant which the Government so generously helped to build.

Such wanton, criminal waste and carelessness tends to support the rumor that these war activities are operated in the interest of a few private individuals who seek to improve their own property at the expense of the Public Treasury.

It will not do to say that the Secretary of War and his assistants have no knowledge of these facts. It is his duty to know them, and if he is ignorant of the facts it is only further proof of the inefficiency of the War Department.

Since there is no assurance that these matters will be efficiently handled, it becomes the duty of Congress to appoint a committee on liquidation to see that the property of the Government is not wasted. Every Congressman should find time to visit some of these camps and storage places, and thus gain first-hand information about the reckless waste of Government property.

The American people want to know the facts, and they will justly hold the Congress responsible for a failure to make provision for the salvage and disposal of the billion of dollars' worth of war material now owned by the Government.

A letter from the Passenger Transportation and Housing Division of the Emergency Fleet Corporation states that the street railway passenger cars were furnished for Newport News and Hampton Railway, Gas & Electric Co. in order to furnish transportation service between Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co., at Newport News, and Hilton village housing project. Also that the cars cost $11,413.75 each, and were leased to the street railway company at 5 per cent per annum on the investment, and that after the termination of the war the railway company will purchase the cars at a price to be determined by three arbitrators, one to be selected by the railway company, one by the Fleet Corporation, and these two to select a third, and the decision of these three arbitrators shall be final and binding.

There is certainly no necessity for furnishing transportation service between Newport News and Hilton village housing project, because no shipyard workers live in Hilton and it is doubtful if any of them will ever live there.

These cars are used and operated from Old Point Comfort. These cars are operated under a lease until the termination of the war, which means the ratification of the peace treaty. Then the railway company is required to buy the cars, which will be sold as second-hand cars and sold at a time when material and labor are much cheaper. This means that this second-hand property will be sold at probably one-half price. This illustrates the business sagacity of the Government's representatives.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION,
Philadelphia, Pa., January 31, 1919.

HON. CHARLES H. DILLON,
Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of January 29, I would advise that the Emergency Fleet Corporation financed the purchase of 10 street railway passenger cars for Newport News & Hampton Railway, Gas & Electric Co., which is the company referred to in your letter.

These cars were provided in order to furnish transportation service between Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. at Newport News, Va., and Hilton village housing project constructed by the Emergency Fleet Corporation to house shipyard workers.

The operation of the cars is at the sole expense and risk of the railway, and the railway is under agreement to save the Fleet Corporation harmless from any liability of any kind and nature arising out of the operation of the cars.

These cars were purchased from the J. G. Brill Co., car builders, Philadelphia, and cost $11,413.75 each. They are leased to the street railway company, which pays interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on the investment of the Fleet Corporation in the cars.

The contract provides that after the termination of the war the railway company shall purchase the cars and the equipment thereof, the amount of the purchase price to be determined by a board of three arbitrators, one to be selected by the railway company, one by the Fleet Corporation, and these two to select a third, and that the decision of these three arbitrators shall be final and binding.

The purchase price determined by the board of arbitrators will be repaid in five equal annual installments, with interest at 5 per cent per annum. Until the purchase sum, together with all interest thereon, is fully repaid, title to the 10 cars remains in the Fleet Corporation.

Trusting that this will give you the desired information, I am,

Yours, very truly,

C. B. COOKE, Jr.,
Assistant Manager, Passenger Transportation and Housing Division.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. There is a little confusion of mind among some of our colleagues here. Did we understand the gentleman to say that the president of this company was the brother of the commanding officer down there?

Mr. DILLON. That is as I understand it.

Mr. BUTLER. One Ferguson is the president of the shipbuilding company and the other Ferguson, the general, is the military commandant of the district?

Mr. DILLON. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman know that Gen. Ferguson was relieved at that station a few days ago? Has that had any connection with what the gentleman is speaking about?

Mr. DILLON. I have no information as to why the change was made.

I print a letter received from the Division of Military Aeronautics, War Department, relative to the Morrison Aviation Field:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
DIVISION OF MILITARY AERONAUTICS.
February 1, 1919.

Hon. C. H. DILLON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DILLON: Permit me to acknowledge your inquiry of January 29 relative to the land on which is located the Morrison Aviation and Concentration Camp, in Warwick County, Va.

Our records show that this land has never been purchased by the Government, but is leased up to June 30, 1919, in sections, as follows:

	Acres.
Warwick on the James (Inc.)	189.62
Anna G. Hamm	55.73
H. O. Brown	9.12
J. P. Logan	14.5
Warwickshire Land Corporation	19.76
Mary Ham Barrow	6.01
Total	294.74

Total rental on this land is $1,762.60 per year, which averages about $6 per acre. All leases contain options as to yearly renewal of these leases up to June 30, 1921. The Government also holds an option to purchase this land at about $250 per acre. On this 294 acres of land the Government improvements have amounted to approximately $2,134,589.15

I trust that the information given above covers all questions on this subject, and I assure you that if further information is desired I will be glad to hear from you.

Very sincerely,

W. L. KENLY,
Major General.
By JOHN B. REYNOLDS,
Major, Air Service, Assistant Executive.

Here is an aviation field containing 294.74 acres rented for $1,762.62 per year, being about $6 per acre. This would seem an extravagant price for rental of land wholly unfit for aviation purposes. Upon this the Government has made improvements to the extent of approximately $2,134,589.15. As stated before, this aviation field, with all its improvements, had to be abandoned. It represents the reckless wanton expenditures of money in improving property that is wholly unfit for the purposes intended.

From all over the country come complaints that subordinate officers are not carrying out the instructions of the War Department to discharge enlisted men who have dependents and who have opportunities to secure their former employment. The charge is made that these officers are seeking to keep their names on the pay roll, and in order to do so it has become a common practice to reject the applications for discharge without any consideration.

The War Department claims that instructions have been given to the officers directing the discharge of enlisted men on their own application when they have dependents or when they are needed in civil employment. If the War Department is acting in good faith, why are not the officers compelled to carry out the orders? This is further evidence of the inefficiency of the department.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is the gentleman going to speak of the discharge of enlisted men?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question which he may be able to answer in this connection, in regard to what might be termed another "lost battalion," lost not on the battle fields of France, but apparently in darkest Africa, "somewhere in Virginia." I have information to the effect that at Newport News, or somewhere in that vicinity, is what is called a reserve labor battalion, made up of drafted colored troops. If my information is correct, these men are being worked as common laborers alongside of civilian laborers who receive more than $3 a day, and that the soldiers are denied the privilege of even making an application for discharge.

Information I have is also to the effect that when one of these men is permitted to ask for a discharge he is required to furnish affidavits which cost him from ten to fifteen dollars. Does the gentleman know anything about the existence of conditions such as I have described, or did he see any colored troops there?

Mr. DILLON. Oh, yes; there is a large number of them who have been marched out through the mud, and they were complaining about their treatment.

Mr. BUTLER. Did they find the "lost battalion," though?

Mr. DILLON. I do not know anything about the "lost battalion." Some of the men ran away, and they were driven back.

Mr. TILSON. Were they colored troops?

Mr. DILLON. They were colored troops.

Mr. TILSON. Were there any considerable number of them?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. The information I have is that the Four hundred and seventh Reserve Labor Battalion, made up of colored troops, are being kept there in what amounts to involuntary servitude, or slavery, because they are unable to get away; at any rate, that they are not given an equal opportunity with others to apply for discharges for industrial or family reasons.

Mr. DILLON. There were a great many claims made as to their compulsion in working under those circumstances.

Numerous cases have been brought to my notice by soldiers who could not get action on their applications, although they had followed the instructions given in the orders. Thousands of these soldiers are seeking relief since their services for military purposes are no longer required. If the Secretary of War and his assistants are unable to bring relief to these soldiers in the United States, steps should be taken by Congress to release them so that they may go home.

The following, taken from an official order issued January 15, 1919, indicates the number of officers in the Three hundred and fourth Stevedore Regiment, Corps of Engineers, and shows to what lengths they are going to find places for officers, so that their services may be continued.

I have here an official order, stamped with the official stamp upon it, showing the number of officers who are attached to each company:

Companies A, B, and C, Three hundred and fourth Stevedore Regiment, and Company A, Three hundred and fifty-fifth Labor Battalion; Companies A, B, C, and D, Four hundred and fourth Reserve Labor Battalion; Companies A, B, C, and D, Four hundred and fifth Reserve Labor Battalion; and Companies A, B, C, and D, Four hundred and thirtieth Reserve Labor Battalion, the 16 companies comprising the four battalions of the Three hundred and fourth Stevedore Regiment, Corps of Engineers, had, on January 25, 1919, 29 captains, 27 first lieutenants, and 29 second lieutenants. Besides these, each battalion had a commanding officer, one being a major and the other three captains. Then, also, there were regiment and headquarters officers, composed of 1 major, 10 captains, and 8 first lieutenants.

Taking some individual companies we find that Company A, Three hundred and fourth Stevedore Regiment, had 1 captain, 3 first lieutenants, and 2 second lieutenants; Company A, Three hundred and fifty-fifth Labor Battalion, had 2 captains, 4 first lieutenants, and 1 second lieutenant; Company A, Four hundred and fourth Reserve Labor Battalion, had 2 captains, 3 first lieutenants, and 1 second lieutenant; Company B, Four hundred and fourth Reserve Labor Battalion, had 2 captains, 2 first lieutenants, and 2 second lieutenants; Company A, Four hundred and thirtieth Reserve Labor Battalion, had 2 captains, 2 first lieutenants, and 2 second lieutenants.

These five companies have together 9 captains, 14 first lieutenants, and 8 second lieutenants.

History does not record such an array of captains and lieutenants. As the companies are being demobilized, places must be found for the officers, hence they must be transferred, and while the drilling of soldiers has largely ceased and the number of privates in each company decreased by demobilization, the quota of officers to each company is increased. While demobilization releases the privates so that they may go home, the officers go marching on cashing their monthly pay checks.

THE NEGRO SITUATION.

It was stated that there have been for some months past several thousand colored troops stationed in the vicinity of Newport News, designated as comprising various units of labor organizations; that these colored soldiers from time to time in varying numbers have been used as laborers on private, municipal, and county work, such as construction and repair of streets, roads, drainage ditches, and water works, throughout a large area of country around Newport News, as far north as Lee Hall, a distance of about 19 miles, and east as far as Old Point Comfort; and that most of this work has been performed under most distressing conditions, the colored soldiers often working in mud almost to their knees. Complaints were made by these colored soldiers concerning the character of work they were required to do, that their allotments had been withheld, and that they could not secure discharges.

Some of our bravest soldiers on the battle fields were colored men. They were ever ready to march against the common enemy in an effort to overthrow him, and our Nation owes to all our gallant soldiers, both white and black, an everlasting debt of gratitude. There is no justification for the treatment meted out to the colored soldiers in some of the camps.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does the gentleman know whether these colored men were drafted men?

Mr. DILLON. They were drafted.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Was this work which these soldiers were required to do on the public utilities for the benefit of the Army or was it for the benefit of these private municipal corporations?

Mr. DILLON. The information came to me that it was possibly both. The Army used the highways, but they were putting in cement highways and making various improvements which were largely beneficial to these private beneficiaries.

Mr. CRISP. But the only reason the Government did it was for the benefit that the management of the Army got out of it.

Mr. DILLON. Yes. Complaints were made by these colored soldiers concerning the character of the work they were required to do.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. We understood from the gentleman's statement that there were many more captains there than there were companies?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Has the gentleman made any analysis of that to show how many captains were attached to any particular company?

Mr. DILLON. Yes; I will have all in my extension of remarks.

Mr. FESS. Three or four or five?

Mr. DILLON. Yes; sometimes five officers to a company.

Mr. FESS. That was stated to me. Now, another question: Did the gentleman make any inquiries as to the commutation of heat, light, and quarters, whether these captains in addition to their regular salaries had four rooms, some of them, and also so much for heat and light in addition, and living in these houses built by the Government?

Mr. DILLON. That is true, but I did not specially investigate it. I understood it to be so.

Mr. FESS. It was stated to me that it amounted to $304.

Mr. DILLON. The following is a résumé of the report covering those members of Companies A, B, C, and D, Four hundred and fifth Reserve Labor Battalion, who reported on January 7 and 8 that the persons to whom they had made allotments were not receiving the money due. The number in each of these companies so reporting is as follows: Company A, 77; Company B, 56; Company C, 75; Company D, 78. The total number reporting is 286. Of this number 119 reported that the persons to whom they had made allotments had received nothing, although allotments had been made from 5 to 13 months previous to January 8, 1919, and that during that time the amount of the allotment had always been deducted from their pay.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Deducted from their pay?

Mr. DILLON. Deducted from their pay. Of the remaining 167 about one-half reported that the persons to whom they had made allotments have received payments of from $5 to $90 during a period of time extending from four months to one year, while the balance reported allotments due for one to four months.

As examples, I cite the following individual reports, which represent neither extreme:

Dawson, Hit. No. 2992628. Dawson, Hannah (sister), Ashland, Ky. Allotment, $15. Allottee has never received any payments. Allotment made out in the month of March, 1918. Enlisted March, 1918. Allotment is still being deducted from soldier's pay.

Donalson, James. No. 2859630. Donalson, Bell Maggie (sister), Kee, Ark. Allotment, $15. Allottee has never received any payments. Allotment made out May, 1918. Allotment is still being deducted from soldier's pay.

Ivory, Marshall. No. 2811766. Ivory, Obie (brother), Pittsburg, Tex. Allotment, $15. Allottee has only received the amount of $30. Allotment made out in April, 1918. Enlisted March 29, 1918. Allotment is still being deducted from soldier's pay.

That this treatment of the colored soldiers was not confined to this particular camp is evidenced by a statement made to me by a former officer who was stationed at Camp Johnston, Jacksonville, Fla., in command of a labor company of colored soldiers.

This company consisted of 200 drafted colored men, and the ages ran from 21 to 40 years even at the time when 31 years was the draft limit. Twenty or twenty-two of them received no pay on pay day, the reason stated being that they had been brought in as deserters and $50 paid to some officer who had brought them in. This payment had been charged against the soldier, which left him indebted to the Government.

None of these alleged deserters could understand why that charge was placed against them, all claiming that they had in no way evaded service, that they had continued in their customary work, continued to reside in the same place, had not changed their names, and had at all times held themselves in readiness to answer the summons of the local board when they should be called to the service.

This charge of desertion was not for any action committed after they were mustered into the military service, but because they were said to have been delinquent in not reporting for service within the time or date required by the notice sent them by the local board. As a matter of fact, they all claimed that no notice had ever been received by any of them, although the local board knew of their whereabouts.

One of these colored soldiers said that he had come to the camp of his own free will as soon as he learned of his order to report. When asked if no one had come with him to the camp at Johnston, he replied that the postmaster's brother had come with him, but that he had paid his own fare as well as the fare of his companion, who told him that he was going to Jacksonville anyway, and as an accommodation would go to the camp with him and show him who to report to. Nevertheless, the charge of desertion was placed against him, and the $50 paid to the man who brought him in and charged up to the soldier to be taken out of his pay.

Another, who lived in Georgia, stated that he registered in June, 1917, and then learning that there was need of labor in the shipyards at Jacksonville had gone there and secured employment. After arriving in Jacksonville he notified his local board of his change of address by letter and told them to mail his notice to him there. He worked a few weeks in the shipyards and then got employment with the Government in the post exchange at the camp. While he was thus employed by the Government, within the military camp and under his proper name, a policeman came out from town and arrested him as a deserter and, escorting him about two blocks to camp headquarters, collected $50.

This payment was accordingly charged against the soldier and deducted from his pay in spite of the fact that he had conducted himself in accordance with the draft regulations, and that this was the first knowledge he had of any notice calling him into the military service.

These are merely two cases illustrative of the whole number of alleged desertion cases in this one company of colored soldiers, none of whom had received, through the mail or otherwise, the customary notice sent by the local boards advising them that they had been called into the military service.

Why was there no investigation of this practice of bringing in these men as deserters when they had received no notice calling them into the military service? It was because certain influential men and their friends were making considerable money by bringing these men in and collecting $50 for each. One of these is said to have collected as much as $800 in this questionable manner.

How was this done? It was done in this way. These colored men got nothing through the mail in the form of a notice calling them into the military service. That was the method used by the local boards in giving notice, and since these cards giving notice were not returned to the local boards as undeliverable the draftees would be listed as deserters if they did not appear on the date set at the place specified in the notice.

The notices were sent out by the local boards but the postmaster did not deliver them as addressed, but held out certain ones and kept them until the draftee was one day delinquent. Then he would hand them to a marshal or policeman, who would go out and make arrests and collect $50 for each one apprehended.

In spite of this unjust and unlawful practice the charge of desertion remains against them and can not be removed until they complete paying the $50 charge. Neither can they be discharged as long as they owe the Government money, but must remain in the service until the indebtedness is canceled.

Mr. Chairman, while the war was going on we could not expect that every dollar spent in our war activities would be well invested. We expected that many mistakes would be made in conducting the war. The sole purpose controlling the heart of the American people was to win the war in the shortest possible time. Yet the American people did not expect the officials to be guilty of wanton and criminal waste.

But now that the war is over and demobilization is going on the people do insist that all officials and public servants should be held to a strict accountability. They must be efficient; they must be honest. It is the duty of Congress to guard and protect the rights and interests of the people who pay the taxes and support the Government.

Every day that passes brings stories of the privations and sufferings of our brave soldiers fighting in Russia, that foreign land of ice and snow. Thousands of American mothers are in deep sorrow, asking themselves how long this Nation will require their sons to lay down their lives fighting a nation against which we have not declared war.

There is no justification for sending these 15,000 brave soldiers to fight, bleed, and die in that far-away land. These boys should be brought home immediately. It is a cruel wrong to keep them there.

Every soldier in the foreign service except those in the army of occupation should be immediately returned to their homes amidst the applause of a grateful people. When the peace treaty is signed every soldier on foreign soil should be allowed to come home. We should have nothing to do with the intrigues, the quarrels, the jealousies, and the ambitions of the countries of the Old World, nor should we be required to police these countries. Let them employ their own policemen for their own protection, while we turn our attention to the welfare of our own people.

Every enlisted soldier in the United States should at the earliest possible date be released from the service. They have performed every duty required of them. They have helped carry the flag on to a successful victory, and a grateful Nation can bestow no greater blessing upon them than to send them home to their loved ones.

Let our unconquerable Army bring back our flag. It represents our longings and is the symbol of our liberty and equal rights. The poor and the rich, the weak and the strong, will ever sustain it; our willing feet will ever follow it; our strong hands will defend it; our hearts will ever cherish it; and our dying lips will bless it.

May God speed the day when the people of the world may lay down their weapons of war and follow the Prince, the Prince of Peace, that they may abide in that perfect love that knows no evil. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Where did the gentleman get all of this information?

Mr. DILLON. I went down to Newport News and looked up these matters for myself.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman appears to have had a very good time and to have obtained a great deal of information.

Mr. DILLON. I wish some more of you would go down there and investigate for yourselves.

The official order making the assignment of officers referred to above is as follows:

Fourth Provisional Battalion: Companies A, B, C, and D, Four hundred and thirtieth Reserve Labor Battalion.

2. With the exception of the Third Provisional Battalion and Companies A and C, Four hundred and fourth Reserve Labor Battalion, and Companies C and D, Four hundred and thirtieth Reserve Labor Battalion, now on detached service, all companies of the stevedore and labor organizations will in future render ration returns, requisitions for clothing, supplies, etc., through regimental headquarters instead of through battalion headquarters, as heretofore.

3. All property now held by battalion headquarters will be turned in to camp supply officer, and present battalion supply officers will obtain clearance therefor.

By order of Maj. Bridges.

L. D. HARVEY,
Captain, Quartermaster Corps, Camp Adjutant.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, a number of letters have reached me relative to the treatment accorded our soldiers in court-martial proceedings and in the military prisons. I have not made any personal investigation of these alleged abuses, but information comes from so many sources that there must be some foundation for the charges. I append a statement just received through the mail entitled "Examples of brutalities, tortures, and deaths to political prisoners under military régime":

To Congressman DENT,
Chairman House Committee on Military Affairs,
Washington.

HONORABLE SIR: At your request I beg to submit a résumé of inhuman treatment of military and political prisoners, which I respectfully recommend for your kind and immediate consideration and action, as some are already dead, others dying by inches, while all are more or less in constant jeopardy of life or health:

1. Jacob Wipf and the three Hofer brothers, religious objectors, with families, served one year in Arizona prison for failure to register. Transferred to Spanish dungeon of Alcatraz, San Francisco Bay. Stripped to underwear. "Strung up" for 36 hours. Five days without food; 1 glass of water every 24 hours. Slept on cold, damp floor in the stench of their own excrements, beaten, and otherwise manhandled. Contracted scurvy. Sent to Fort Leavenworth, from a temperate to a cold climate; put in solitary on bread and water; "strung up" nine hours per day seven days per week; slept on the bare floor with cold drafts passing over their emaciated bodies; two contracted pneumonia and died; one was sent home with the bodies. Jacob Wipf is on a hospital cot when telling this story. These men were all married and have one or more children, therefore should not have been drafted at all. (Report carried to Theo. H. Lunde, president American Industrial Co., of Chicago, by an Army officer.)

2. Clark Getts, Chicago attorney, graduate of Wisconsin University, conscientious objector, was given two periods, two weeks each, in solitary confinement on bread and water at Fort Leavenworth for smuggling to the outside world information of the cruelties practiced upon him and his confreres, after which he was put in the ward for the violently insane by Capt. Chambers; in constant jeopardy of life and mind, as the inmates are not confined in cells but mingle promiscuously. Writer's son, who with others (including officer who carried the information) vouch for Getts's mental condition, in defiance of Capt. Chambers, implores me to do something for this unfortunate man. Writer in person brought the case under the personal notice of Secretary Baker, who promised to investigate it, but whose general attitude did not impart any hope of results. The chains of the solitary are humane as compared with the physical danger and torture of a sound mind in such environments.

3. Howard Moore, conscientious objector, an efficiency expert, winner of the Carnegie medal for bravery and $500 for saving a girl from drowning; in solitary at Fort Leavenworth after much suffering at Fort Riley.

4. David Eichel, conscientious objector, statistician, formerly with prominent life-insurance company, in solitary at Fort Leavenworth. Went through 10 days' reign of terror at Camp Funston.

5. Francis X. Hennessy, Hyman Block, Stein, Haugan, all conscientious objectors, put in the insane ward at Fort Leavenworth, which can only be interpreted as camouflage for the benefit of inspector from Washington, being that none are insane, and that if Hennessy is possibly a little affected it is the result of the brutalities accorded him and the others at Fort Riley, where he was "strung up" and given the "water cure," and at Camp Funston, where he went through the "10-day reign of terror," under Capt. Gustave Taussig.

6. Seventh Day Adventists have been put in solitary for refusing to work on Saturday, their Sabbath.

7. Mennonites have been put in solitary because their religion forbade them to put on uniforms or prison clothes.

8. Fischer was beaten so severely that he became a raving maniac.

9. John A. Burch, No. 12358, of Wolfrun, Ohio, not a conscientious objector, enlisted July 28, 1917, and was sent to Camp Gettysburg Pa., having failed to claim exemption though he had a wife, and four children under 8. Having been refused by Capt. Hardman to see his dying mother, he took "French leave," was picked up by detectives, was refused to go home for his papers and railroad ticket which he had bought to go back to camp, was forcibly filled up on whisky, turned over to sheriff of Steubenville County, where he was kept 60 days; sent to Columbus Barracks for 30 days then to Camp Green, Charlotte, N. C. (whither his battalion had moved); taken before a court-martial which held the entire enforced detention against him, and gave him a sentence of 10 years at Fort Leavenworth. While there, his wife and two children died, and, though he offered to pay the fare of a guard to go with him, Commandant Rice refused his request for leave to see his dear ones before they were laid away.

Told by a Regular prisoner, railroaded to the detention barracks at Fort Leavenworth.

10. Peters, No. 14589, Mennonite, from Fort Oglethorpe, Ga. Lieut. Masey, when reading sentence, told him he was no longer a citizen, and therefore not entitled to hold his religious belief. Ordered to work at the point and prodding of the bayonet. Put in solitary under roof in barn, with only a small, square window for air, under a blazing August sun, on bread and water. Refusing to eat for five days, he fainted, was revived, and put back. Later taken to hospital totally demented and a wreck of a former splendid physique. Pneumonia, influenza, heart trouble, and a general breakdown. Finally discharged as mentally deficient.

Davis, No. 15582, was also a witness to this treatment.

Peters, mentioned above, saw the two following instances:

11. Detention camp, Fort Oglethorpe. Captain ordered soldiers to put C. O. waist deep in feces of latrine pit, splash him all over with the filth, sergeant in charge leaving him to be pulled out by his fellow C. O's.

12. Same captain, same time, ordered C. O. Schwargengraben taken by the heels and dipped to his eyes in the feces of latrine pit. Sergeant proceeded to put him "away in." Peters warned him of danger of killing by suffocation before filth could be removed from mouth and nostrils.

13. Polish drafted deserter brought to Fort Oglethorpe during August. Had yellow jaundice. No food or medical attention for two days. Provost sergeant ordered him out to work under curses and oaths. Too sick to work. Sergeant ordered him to stand up, tried, but fell back on bunk. Sergeant grabbed and beat him; too exhausted. Sergeant called prison officer, Lieut. Masey, who grabbed and shook him viciously and ordered guard with fixed bayonet to force him out. Pole, leaning against wall for support, was jabbed 4 times in back with bayonet, until exhausted, he fainted away. Taken to guardhouse and left on bunk for 2 days, until chaplain, Father Shear, came to call the mail. Duncan called the rev. father's attention to Pole's condition; he was horrified; said Lieut. Masey should be court-martialed, and threatened to prefer charges. He only "bawled him out," preferring no charges.

The Pole later died in the hospital as a direct result of cruel treatment.

Duncan saw most of this, as did Davis.

14. Case of supposed spinal meningitis in this hospital. Doctor took too large culture from spine; patient now a raving maniac in barred room across hall from me, probably mentally unfit for life. Attendant who saw operation and has medical knowledge said it should have been taken in two portions.

15. Erling H. Lunde, Chicago, graduate with honors from the University of Chicago; three years engineering at Armour Institute of Technology; was refused deferred classification on accusation of having married to evade draft. Was appointed inspector of materials on the Santa Fe, but was refused furlough and sent to camp. Application withdrawn when motive questioned. Did voluntary work at Fort Leavenworth; earned good will of Capt. Laird for establishing harmony between officers and conscientious objectors. Resented coercive measures and intolerable conditions at Fort Riley, put in solitary, court-martialed at Camp Funston, sent to Fort Leavenworth for life, commuted to 25 years in disciplinary barracks, conditions of which are so dangerous and intolerable as to cause a yearning for solitary again. Now in hospital convalescing from scarlet fever. Was declared a sincere conscientious objector by Judge Mack's commission. Author of Defense of Conscientious Objectors to war.

16. Harold Gray, son of President Gray, of the Detroit Red Cross. Took Red Cross post in England, but soon found he belonged among the conscientious objectors; returned to America and joined the others in suffering and solitary.

17. Evan Thomas, a minister, and brother of Dr. Norman Thomas, of New York, cosufferer with the above, whose sufferings in solitary were much accentuated due to his height, which compelled a stooping position when chained to the bars of the double-decked solitary cell.

18. Charles P. Larsen, artist, at Fort Leavenworth. Suffered with others the intolerable conditions at Fort Riley. Underrationed, food attacked by flies from near-by latrine used by venerally diseased soldiers. Protest punished by imprisonment in guardhouse cell in basement, dark, air foul, deprived of toilet articles, breathing sweepings, etc. Protest brought solitary confinement. Later taken to Camp Funston and was a cosufferer during 10-day reign of terror.

19. Abraham Gelerter, vegetable dealer, orthodox Jew, Camp Upton to Fort Jay, April 11. Is greatly surprised and thanks his God for having survived the terrible punishments received for merely objecting to murder. The brutal sentries beat him until he was unable to recognize himself and encouraged the other prisoners to do the same. Commandant declared that all conscientious objectors deserved to be killed. September 15 I arrived at Fort Leavenworth, and, being a vegetarian, had to go twice on hunger strike to get proper food, though far from adequate. Two periods of two weeks in solitary, handcuffed to cell nine hours per day. Compelled to bathe and shave on Saturday, my Sabbath. Dragged to the bath, knocked down, forcibly undressed, held under shower, and scrubbed with coarse soap. The brutalities of the soldiers made me scream with pain. I was taken out of the hole to the hospital November 22 for observation.

20. J. E. Haugen, sheet-metal worker, Lutheran, conscientious objector, shared the intolerable conditions at Fort Riley. Guardhouse, court-martial, transfer to Fort Leavenworth, with solitary and accompanying cruelties.

21. The so-called "mutiny" at Fort Leavenworth: The "crusher gang," composed of physically unfit, were ordered to do twice as much work as formerly. Refusing, the "punishment gang" was sent over; but, seeing how matters stood, they also refused.

All were ordered into solitary, and Acting Warden Fletcher started after them with a bat. A prisoner, Stratton, shouted, "Don't do that," for which he was beaten into unconsciousness lasting 50 hours. When Stratton spoke, the warden drew a pistol, tried to fire at him, but cartridge failed to explode. Stratton raised a stool to protect himself, and, in fear of his life, threw it at the warden.

Floyd Ramp received a double compound fracture of the skull.

After being locked in solitary, two big brutes—Wingfield and "Mack," the former with a bat and the latter with a piece of pipe—were set to task of beating them. Ray and Axuara were beaten unmercifully, and two besides Stratton were unconscious for a long time. Many were handcuffed to doors, feet barely touching the floor. Hodges, Baskett, and Plahn were sick, and prison doctor ordered mattresses, which warden later removed. On the third day they were taken down so the prison inspector should not see them.

UNJUST AND UNFAIR COURTS-MARTIAL.

No. 12135 overdrew his bank account a couple of dollars on a $40 check, but reimbursed bank. Still, court-martial gave him six years at the disciplinary barracks.

No. 13055 took $4,000 from canteen and food; admitted guilt and was sentenced to one year at disciplinary barracks. He has the money still.

No. 13054, a friend of the above, was convicted of having helped 13055 spend the money and having been his accomplice, although 13055 testified on the stand that 13054 knew nothing about the steal at all. He got one year at the disciplinary barracks.

No. ———, in sixth wing, got 25 years for being late 25 minutes on a 48-hour pass. W. McLeod (No. 14694) knows him.

A captain stole $100,000 from Q. M. fund; got six months at the D. B. and a dishonorable discharge.

A captain grafted $500,000 in an Army contract; was given a light sentence here and after one month was put in a battalion for restoration to duty.

The son of a colonel at Fort Oglethorpe, who took $10,000 from soldiers' mess fund when he was mess sergeant of his outfit; tried and found guilty by court-martial and given 10 years. Through influence of his father was reduced to 6 months. After spending 90 days in the guardhouse, son was set free.

No. 14112. Sentenced to 20 years for 9 days' absence without leave; another, 18 months for almost 5 months' absence without leave.

No. 14149. Train delayed by storm; got one year. Capt. Waggoner, of Fort Riley, "had it in for him."

A lieutenant who became intoxicated at a colonel's party got out by mistake and "tore up the town." At trial the same colonel had to make an example of him and sent him to Fort Leavenworth under a heavy sentence.

Many of these young men I have met and spoken with in camp and hospital, and I pronounce them as fine and noble human material as a Government has ever exposed to abuse and destruction.

Respectfully and urgently submitted.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 6, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. BROWN: In reply to your letter of January 3, I have to tell you that we have been informed that Clark Getts is no longer in the ward for mental cases at the disciplinary barracks at Fort Leavenworth. I hope you understand that he had been assigned there on the recommendation of the psychiatrist for observation and not as arbitrarily as your letter makes it appear. Thank you for your suggestions on general conditions in the barracks.

Very truly, yours,

(Signed) F. P. KEPPEL,
Third Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ALBERT PAUL BROWN,

Mr. F. P. KEPPEL,
Assistant Secretary of War,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I thank you for your kind acknowledgment of my letter of the 3d instant, and am glad to note its contents that the authorities at the United States Disciplinary Barracks, Fort Leavenworth, are able to report the remedying of the conditions surrounding Clark Getts. As to what those conditions were, I still have every confidence that I reported them correctly. The authorities had a number of C. O.'s under "observation," and I have seen the room in which they were confined, while they were there, several times. I know that Getts was not confined there. If all that was desired was to place him under observation, there would have been no object in placing him in a ward with insane men.

I know that Getts sent out the appeal for help, as I told you. The other conscientious objectors held under observation had nothing to complain of except lack of reading matter. Again I ask, if "observation" was all that the authorities aimed at, why should Getts be differently treated? Personally, I should feel inclined to substitute "intimidation" for "observation."

I understood at the time that it was due to the orders of the psychiatrist that Getts was confined with the insane, and it struck me then as a rather strange method of "healing the mind."

From this and other incidents it becomes evident that the authorities can cover almost any kind of treatment by a camouflaging phrase, even as Mr. Taussig now says that the conscientious objectors at Funston were given several showers a day "as a disciplinary measure" and made to sleep without beds "as a sanitary precaution"; and I do not doubt, sir, that the officials at Fort Leavenworth reported to you that Getts had been confined in the ward for mental cases as a "mental precaution." Only when the light of public opinion can reach these cases can the truth be assured. Trusting that I have helped contribute to that end, I am,

Yours, respectfully,

A. P. BROWN,
Officer in Charge of Bureau of Designing and Drafting,
United States Engineering Corps, at Disciplinary Barracks.

JANUARY 17, 1919.

My Chicago office just informs me that one of our returned employees, drafted and stationed at Fort Oglethorpe, confirms brutalities committed against the conscientious objectors there.

THEO. H. LUNDE.

Mr. BROWNING. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCCULLOCH].

Mr. MCCULLOCH. Mr. Chairman, if the House will indulge me, I desire to read a letter I received yesterday from one of my constituents; and as this letter contains some very startling statements and charges, I believe I ought to explain to the House who sent me the letter and what kind of a man he is. It is from a young lawyer in my district who is entirely reliable, and who would not make any statement, if he knew it, that is not within the facts. I see by the papers that he is at this moment engaged in the trial of a lawsuit as counsel for the defense involving over $1,000,000. He is in the habit of examining testimony and evidence, and drawing conclusions from statements of fact, and he would not be taken off his feet by any charge that might be made that was not well founded. This letter to me is dated January 3, 1919. He says:

CANTON, OHIO,
January 3, 1919.

Hon. ROSCOE C. MCCULLOCH, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MCCULLOCH: The writer has had so many complaints relative to the treatment received by soldiers in Company H, Second Battalion, Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry, now stationed at Cattaro, Dalmatia, Austria, that he felt it his duty to bring it to your attention. Briefly the complaints are that the soldiers are being fed upon Italian rations and are not receiving sufficient food; in fact, several soldiers, writing to their parents, and who are personally known to the writer, and whose honor, honesty, and integrity could not be questioned stated that the food was so scarce that it was necessary for them to steal food in order to exist. They also complained that they have received no clothes of any kind since early last fall, and that they have mended and patched their clothing until it will hardly hold together. One soldier stated that the only suit of underwear he had was the suit he was wearing and that it couldn't be washed because it wouldn't hold together. Another complaint is that all the commissioned officers located at this point, with the exception of one lieutenant are drinking to excess and are drunk practically all the time, and that their actions are so disgusting and disgraceful that the officers of the English, French, and Italian Armies look down upon them with disgust.

Another complaint is that the soldiers have not received any pay for a number of months. These complaints are from letters which I have read, and it is incomprehensible that our boys must be fed upon horse meat, spaghetti, and macaroni, without sufficient clothing, and officered by drunkards. This is a matter that should not be delayed by a red-tape investigation but should be relieved at once, and because of your activity and the elegant results you obtain for the people of your district, I believe that you will make things hum to obtain the necessary relief.

Yours, very truly,

HOMER E. BLACK.

That letter is signed by Homer E. Black, an able, honest, truthful young lawyer in my home town. I showed this letter yesterday to a newspaper man. He evidently sent out an item about it, because I received a telegram a few moments ago, brought to me on the floor of the House, on the same subject. It was sent from Warren, Ohio, a town outside of my district, to-day at 1.30 p. m. It is as follows:

Letter received from son in Second Battalion, Three hundred and thirty-second Regiment, says shoes worn out, seat of pants out, underwear worn out. Push investigation. Will mail copy of letter.

I have been deeply interested in the perfect case that has been made out by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] through the complaints he has submitted day by day, contained in letters he has received from his constituents and others in regard to misconduct—and I use that word advisedly, because it is misconduct—upon the part of the War Department relative to important and vital matters affecting our soldiers and their dependents and the American people.

I was interested the other day in the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], in which he eloquently portrayed the condition of the soldiers from his home town, but I was particularly interested in his statement that if something was not done by the leaders of this House soon in this matter, he himself would try to get some action. That was about two weeks ago, but still nothing has been done. When I received this letter and read the startling statements it contains, my first thought was to introduce a resolution calling for an investigation. I sent my clerk to the folding room, and she came back with 15 resolutions that had been introduced in the House and Senate during the last two months calling for investigations of the various phases of this very subject. They were all referred to the appropriate committee, ordered printed, and there they slumber the sleep that knows no waking.

Out of curiosity last night I looked over the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to get some idea of the number of speeches made by the Members of this House dealing with this particular subject. calling attention to complaints detailing conditions that would bring tears to the eyes of any person who had a heart, and I estimate that over a hundred speeches have been made upon this one subject; and, with all these hundred or more speeches, no action has been taken, and not a thing has been done by this House.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCULLOCH. When I have finished my statement. Have we no power? Of course we have power. The fathers of our country, in their great wisdom, placed in the hands of the Representatives of the people—and that means this body—the most powerful weapon that was ever exercised by any body of men, legislative or otherwise, anywhere by any Government in all the world. But we do not function. That is the trouble. We talk and do nothing. That is what is wrong. It would seem that this House has developed into a mere debating society, and I want to say that if you continue to do nothing but talk, and do not exercise the power you have, you have failed in your duty and you can not explain it in the light of the case made by the gentleman from Illinois on the complaints he put into the RECORD and the evidence he submitted.

What is this power we have? The framers of the Constitution in their wisdom—and we have had no wiser men in recent years than they, for their works have stood the test of time—the framers of the Constitution placed in the Representatives of the people, and particularly in this body, the power to exact from the people by taxation money, and by that same Constitution they gave us the power to distribute that money by appropriation to the executive branches of the Government to be expended for Government needs. Now, do you suppose they would place upon us that responsibility, great as it is, and not give us the power to check up that branch of the Government to which we give this money and the power to punish misconduct on the part of officers of the Government? Of course not. They placed in our hands the right to invoke the power of impeachment for misconduct. Now, I have a suggestion to make. It may be a very impracticable one, but I am perhaps impracticable enough as a Member of this House to want at least to be practical and to be able, when complaints come to me from my people, to act, or else I do not want to have the responsibility.

Now, as I say, I have a suggestion to make: This House should immediately send to France and to Belgium and to Italy, and everywhere that American soldiers are or have been located, a committee made up of the representatives of the people to make an investigation and make a report to this House. This should be done at once. If I had my way, a committee would start to-night. Their report should enable us to reach the men who are responsible for the acts of omission or commission which, in my judgment, are acts of misconduct. If they are acts of misconduct we can and should invoke the power of impeachment.

It has been decided time and time again, as I recollect it, although I am not prepared now to make a legal argument upon the subject—it has been decided time and time again that we can invoke the power of impeachment for misconduct. The provisions in regard to impeachment do not mean that the officer must be guilty of a felony or misdemeanor to be punished, but only of misconduct. If a committee should go abroad and get the facts and bring them back and report them to us recommending the dismissal of a dozen officers—brigadier generals, majors, and colonels—and the Secretary of War should refuse to dismiss them, I have got the nerve, to use a homely but effective word, to rise in my place on this floor and, exercising my constitutional right, make the necessary motion and present the necessary articles of impeachment, if need be, calling for the impeachment of the Secretary of War.

This Congress appropriated $100,000,000 the other day for Herbert Hoover to spend as he sees fit to feed the starving peoples of Europe—peoples we know nothing about and really care less, a lot of them; peoples who do not speak our language; peoples who are not in accord with our views on anything and have not our moral perspective; peoples whose real necessities we do not know about and never will know about; peoples who, perhaps through their ignorance, know nothing at all about us and care nothing about us except what they can get from us. And our own soldiers, our own boys, are permitted to go half naked and are being fed on horse meat. What Member of this House can ever justify inaction in the face of such testimony as the gentleman from Illinois has put into this RECORD and in the face of such charges as are contained in this letter? The trouble is that the American people do not know that the American Congress is sitting here idle, doing nothing but talk, when it has a weapon in its hand and the power to force this executive department to do its duty or turn the job over to some one else.

The Congress should be something more than a debating society. The Congress should do something more than talk. I say that it is our duty to investigate these cases, to investigate these complaints, and then let the report be made. If it exonerates the War Department, well and good; if there are conditions over there which are beyond control, or if there has been no negligence, if the charges are not well founded, then let the War Department be exonerated; but if they are guilty of misconduct then it is our duty to act, since we have the power to act, and see that those who are guilty are punished.

Ours is a representative form of government. One of the purposes of the framers of the Constitution was that the people should be in close touch with the Government through their representatives. The people have no place to turn to secure effective results except to their Representatives in Congress and their Senators. It is well known that the executive departments pay little or no attention to complaints that are made to them by the people. They seldom, if ever, answer a letter unless a Member of Congress intervenes. Therefore, the people look to us to remedy conditions and to secure for them justice. As I have said, the framers of the Constitution placed in our hands the power to punish misconduct upon the part of the officers of the executive branch of the Government. If the representatives of the people turn a deaf ear to the appeals that are made to them by those who have been mistreated and injured by the executive branches of the Government, the people are powerless. That situation makes our duty doubly great. During this war, and in fact for some time prior to the war, the executive branch of the Government has been encroaching upon the perogatives of the legislative branch. It has become common talk throughout the country that Congress jumps when the Executive cracks the whip. If we are honest with ourselves, we know that that is true. It was true during the war because the Members did not want to be in the attitude of doing anything or refusing any request that might lessen in the slightest degree our chances for winning the war. The attitude of the Members of Congress in that regard should be highly commended, but the war is over and, in my humble judgment, it is time for the Congress of the United States to assume its proper functions which it was contemplated by the Constitution that it should exercise and force the executive branch of the Government to do its duty and to punish any misconduct by the officials of this Government. It would only be necessary for the Congress to invoke once the power of impeachment in order to compel a proper respect not only for the Members of the Congress, but for the people they represent, which is much more important.

Why, it is a well-known fact that if a Member of Congress wrote a letter recommending a soldier whom he knew for promotion or asking a furlough that he might go to the bedside of a dying relative or for any other preferment, that that soldier was likely to be disciplined, simply because he asked the assistance of his Member of Congress in his difficulties. It has been the policy of the Military Department of the Government to instill into the minds of the officers a contempt for the representatives of the people, which, in fact, means instilling into their minds contempt for the people themselves. If one-third of the facts set out in the complaints that have been submitted by the gentleman from Illinois are true and the Members of this House pass these complaints by without notice, without any action, and without even an investigation, their action is, to say the least, inexcusable, and should meet with the prompt punishment that only the people in their power can administer at the ballot box, because, when all is said and done, this is a government of the people, for the people, and by the people.

Feeling keenly as I do and as I have upon this important subject, I have discussed it with the leaders and with many Members of the House. Some have said that by giving publicity to the charges the executive branch of the Government may be stirred up to a realization of its duty. I have not any faith in our ability to build a fire under any department of the Government with burning words. Too much talk without action breeds contempt, and properly so. Results, after all, are what count, and you will only get real results by invoking all the power that the Constitution has placed in your hands.

I do not care to encumber the RECORD by submitting the hundreds of letters I have received from my constituents complaining that the soldiers were not paid; that the allotments were not paid; that the Government had taken from the pay of soldiers the amount they had allotted for the support of their dependents and the money was held by the department for months while the dependents of the soldier were the objects of charity; complaints about the transmission of mail to and from the soldiers abroad; complaints about the transmission of information in regard to casualties, where soldiers who have given their lives in action under the Stars and Stripes were apparently forgotten, and this great Government did not even take the trouble to notify their parents and their friends that they were dead; but I desire to include in connection with my remarks and to have printed in the RECORD a letter which I wrote to the Secretary of War on December 22, 1918, and I also desire to submit a letter that I have received from a constituent pleading with me to secure information in regard to their boy, whom they had not heard from since he embarked for France in September, 1918, they having learned from a comrade in January, 1919, that he had died on a transport in October, 1918, had been buried, and the parents were never notified. Think of it! The parents of a soldier of the Republic who had given his life to the cause for which we were fighting had to learn from a comrade months after he was buried that their boy was dead. Such conduct is a shame and a disgrace.

In conclusion I want to say that the patriotism of the American people in this war has no parallel in the history of the world. Their response to every call for money and assistance, their silent acceptance of the burdens of taxation, their willingness to meet every demand has given this Nation, from the altruistic view, a place among the nations of the earth that has no equal. The Congress of the United States has given to the executive department without question—and in many instances without the presentation of sufficient information as to the necessities—billions of dollars to spend in this war as the executive department saw fit. The people have done their part, the Congress has done its part, the time for an accounting by the executive department has come, and the sooner the Congress gets busy, exercises its prerogative, and demands that accounting the sooner they will have discharged their obligation to the country.

DECEMBER 22, 1918.

Hon. NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have been receiving complaints constantly from the parents of soldiers and their friends in regard to the transmission of information about the condition of wounded soldiers and the delay in the notification of parents when soldiers have been killed in action or have died from wounds or disease in hospitals.

Recognizing the difficulties that confront your department in the handling of these matters, I have refrained from entering any formal protest, other than to call your attention to individual cases up to this time. But I feel, because of the facts in a number of cases which are now before me, that there must be something radically wrong with the system that has been followed by your department in the handling of these most important matters. And my purpose in writing you now is to protest on behalf of my constituents who have suffered as a result of what appears to me to be nothing more nor less than incompetency or negligence upon the part of responsible officers in your department in handling and transmitting this information.

WORD IS DELAYED.

I need but refer to one case of the many which have been brought to my attention. Notice was received on October 3 stating that a certain soldier "was severely wounded in action August 13. Department has no further information." On November 11 a notice was received that this soldier was "reported under date of October 23, 1918, in Evacuation Hospital No. 4, American Expeditionary Forces, under treatment for severe gunshot wound in both thighs." On the request of the mother of this soldier my office on November 29 was informed that he had received "a slight gunshot wound in both thighs while in action. His condition reported fair." Efforts made at a later date by my office to secure information were to the effect that no further word had been received in regard to the soldier's condition. On December 15 the mother received the first word from your department, advising her of the death of her son, which telegram says: "Your son died October 16 from wounds received in action."

This soldier, who was in a hospital under the control of the Government, died on October 16, and it took two months, or until December 15, for your department to advise this mother of the death of her boy. Your department can not offer the excuse in this case that the delay was caused by lack of facilities for identification or because the soldier was in action, for the reason that this boy was in a hospital, identified, under the care of physicians, and your department had been notified months before that he was wounded in August; and yet it takes two months for your department to advise his family of his death.

WANTS INVESTIGATION.

I believe that every patriotic citizen is willing to concede to your department every valid excuse which might cause delay in the transmission of information. The patriotism of the American people in this crisis has no parallel in the history of the world; but it seems to me that your department should make an effort to reduce to the minimum the anguish and the suffering of parents who have given their sons as the supreme sacrifice in this war.

While I am on the subject, I want to call your attention to another situation which, to my way of thinking, is little less than criminal. The delay in mail to and from soldiers abroad will constitute a black page in the history of our war activities; and those who are responsible for these delays should be brought promptly to account, and it shall be my purpose to assist in every way possible in the bringing about of an investigation that will fix the responsibility for the delay in the transmission of mail to and from the soldiers in France. It is as little as this great Government can do to relieve the minds of the boys at the front and the minds of their parents and their friends at home to the extent that is possible by seeing to it that their letters are promptly transmitted.

Everyone recognizes that men who are on the firing line, moving from place to place, can not receive mail as promptly as they would be able to do otherwise, but the complaints have been so general and the cases have evidenced so often an utter lack of interest and effort upon the part of the Government to take care of this most important matter of the transmission of the mail that I have become convinced that somebody is negligent, and, therefore, responsible for the conditions that have existed.

I have had complaints where parents have written as many as 50 letters to soldier sons in France, and not one of the letters have been delivered. I have cases before me where parents have not received word from their boys since they left for France, covering a period of as many as three and four months. In some cases the letters were returned without any notation—just sent back. In other cases the soldiers write, pleading to hear from home, when letters by the dozens have been written and mailed but never reached the soldiers. The parents of some have died and the soldier was the only one who did not get the information as to the death, because the letters sent were not delivered. In one instance a soldier died gallantly in action, feeling that he had been forgotten, as his last letter to his mother showed, although his mother had written him twice a week, but her letters never reached him.

CASES ARE NUMEROUS.

If these cases were not numerous I would think that the delay might be due to the particular circumstances of the individual case, but the complaints have been so numerous that it amounts to almost a general complaint upon the part of parents and friends in regard to the mail service.

I am sure that everyone in this country would approve of the sending of special transports, if necessary, in order that the boys who have borne the burden of the battle might have their mail and that the parents at home who have given them to the cause might hear from them.

Two resolutions are now pending in the House for an investigation, and while I shall do everything in my power to bring the investigation about, yet I trust your department will even at this late date take some action that will relieve the situation.

I am transmitting all of the data and information in regard to the case I have referred to in this letter. Also, a memoranda in regard to other cases, the circumstances of which will sustain the statements I have made in this communication.

Sincerely, yours,

ROSCOE C. MCCULLOCH.

WOOSTER, OHIO, January 12, 1919.

Representative ROSCOE C. MCCULLOCH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am writing you concerning my nephew, Pvt. Donald Orr, whom we have never heard from since he sailed for France on or about the 18th or 19th of September, except from a returned wounded soldier whose name is Carl Murray, Orrville, Ohio, who said he saw him die on the boat on the way over. He said he died October 2. His mother receives her allotment each month as if he were alive. They have written the Red Cross and War Department, and they can as yet find no trace of him. His address is as follows: Pvt. Donald Orr, Three hundred and ninth Ammunition Train, Eighty-fourth Division, American Expeditionary Forces. Serial No. 2476447. Captain's name is Jay Shaffer.

He left Camp Mills, N. Y., by railway, on the 16th or 17th of September for Hoboken, N. J., from where he sailed by way of Nova Scotia on the ship Nester. Now, who is the fault of us not being notified of his death, or of our finding no trace of him since his death, and where is the rest of his allotment going to? Three months after a soldier's death and not being notified is a long time.

Anything you can do, or advise us to do, toward getting some definite information from him will be deeply appreciated.

Yours, very truly,

JEFFERSON P. CARSON.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have all of my life been in favor of a large Navy. I have always believed that it is the part of wisdom for this people to have a Navy sufficiently large to protect its extended seacoast at any time against any enemy on either side. I still am of the same opinion. I think that the program proposed by the bill is not extraordinarily large; is not too large, perhaps, for the safety of this people in the future. While I have always believed in a large Navy, I have never believed in a large Army, and do not now believe in a large Army. I think an Army in time of peace should be an organization of volunteers, sufficiently constituted so that in time of war, by conscription methods, we may raise sufficient military forces to protect the Government. I do not believe this is true with respect to the Navy, however. I have not believed it for years, and I do not believe it now. I say to you freely and frankly that I do not place enough confidence in the rumors that we may disarm to justify me in believing that we ought to relax our efforts along this line. The time may come when the nations of the world will be willing to take their ships and sink them in the seas, but I do not believe that time has yet arrived. Recently, while talking with many men upon the other side of the water who were interested in British affairs, I became quite thoroughly convinced that the British mind, so far as I was able to weigh it, was along the same line. Therefore, I can consistently and shall vote for the naval increase provided for in this bill. But, Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of humiliation to me personally that in doing so I may appear to be animated by the whip and spur that is being administered by the President of the United States to this Congress to-day, the spur that we feel in our side. In my advocacy of a large Navy, I advocate it because I believe in it, but I do not believe that those who are presenting this program to this House do actually believe in the program as it is advanced. If I had anything to say about it, I would cut out the proviso in the section which gives to the President of the United States the right to say whether we shall or shall not have this Navy, and I shall vote for that if the opportunity occurs. It has been a matter of extreme humiliation to me, believing as I do about these matters, to see coming into our councils here this covert threat which has been sent to us by the President of the United States, under which I believe a majority of this House to-day is acting and under which it will act.

When the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs was on the floor I interrogated him, as did many others of the House, and he said that a message that had come from the President of the United States had come to the Secretary of the Navy, that it had been by the Secretary whispered to him, Mr. PADGETT, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that he, Mr. PADGETT, had whispered it to the members of that committee, and that whispered information thus conveyed from across the seas had induced this committee to make a unanimous decision to bring in a unanimous report. That is what he said. Believing and confiding in the truthfulness of Mr. PADGETT, which I have never had cause to question, I believe that is the situation, and similar information has come to me from other members of the committee. That being true, we have before us a report that was induced by some threat or statement or information sent by the President which you and I, as representatives of the people of this country, can not have the advantage of, but which we must act under or be perhaps put under the ban of being against the administration in the carrying out of this policy. It is an unfair advantage to take of this House; it is an unfair advantage to take of the country and one that is not justifiable in the light of the President's stand. When he delivered his address here upon the so-called 14 terms of peace he used language to which I wish to direct your attention. He spoke of "open covenants of peace openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind, but diplomacy shall proceed always frankly and in the public view." That is, that the cards shall be on the table and that anyone can see at any time how they stand anywhere along the line and know what is going on, and most of the American people perhaps approved of that. I know that I did in my simplicity of mind. Before he went to Europe he said this, as called to our attention yesterday by the gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]:

I shall be in close touch with you and with affairs on this side of the water and you will know all that I do.

Yet the only information we have is a little communique that comes to us once a day that tells us what somebody has done somewhere, that conveys no information, and nothing more do we know, and even the information upon which we are called upon to pass is whispered by the Secretary of War to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and in turn whispered by him to the members of his committee, and you and I are expected to sit here like bumps on a log and vote without knowing what we are voting for.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well——

Mr. GARNER. Just for a question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, just for a short question.

Mr. GARNER. I agree with the gentleman. I want a large Navy and a small Army, and if we can accomplish that by getting this secret information, ought the gentleman and I to complain?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Here is the point about that sort of thing. I say that the position of the President is manifestly inconsistent, and he has no right to put the Congress of the United States in the position of possibly doing something under this whip and spur when he does not think us of sufficient importance that he can tell us what the reasons are. I have only a little while and I can not yield further; the President has evidently changed his mind on this theory. He went to Europe stating everything is going to be open and above board. He has changed his mind. Long back through the years of Woodrow Wilson's life, before and ever since he was President of the United States, he has been a mind changer. If he ever advocated any single principle that he did not change his mind on I have yet to find it out, until it has induced in my mind the belief that President Wilson has been right on more subjects than any public man I ever saw in my life, because he has been on both sides of all questions. He believed, perhaps, in open diplomacy when he went across, but if he does believe it now, he does not practice it. My attention is called in this connection to what happened some years ago when he first was elected President of the United States, and when the Democratic Party was pledged to a certain program as regards Panama Canal tolls. I was not here at the time, but some of you gentlemen were, and when this thing had been pledged by your great party in its platform and when you were individually in honor pledged, he came to Congress and he said to you these words on the 5th of March, 1914, in the special message which he delivered to the Congress:

I ask this of you in support of the foreign policy of the administration. I shall not know how to deal with other matters of even greater delicacy and nearer consequences if you do not grant it to me in ungrudging measure.

And the Congress granted it to him in ungrudging measure. And what was the mysterious reason that made that necessary? What was it, can anybody tell? I have heard rumors and I have heard things said in the lobbies and other places about the supposed reasons for it, but nobody knows, not even the leaders of the Democratic Party, what the President had in his mind when he came here and asked you to repudiate your pledges and give him this thing in ungrudging measure. And to-day we have the same thing again.

The President evidently considers this war as a personal war and the peace he is making as a personal peace, in which no one else is intimately concerned except himself. The Constitution authorizes him to make treaties "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." Yet in his peace commission he fails to appoint any Member of the Senate to consider the draft of the treaty with him. The other members of the peace commission take their orders readily from the President. When he went to England on December 26 last, when welcomed at Dover, he displayed fully his ideas of his mission in Europe:

It is therefore with emotions of peculiar gratification that I find myself here. It affords me the opportunity to match my mind with the minds of those who, with a like intention, are purposing to do the best that can be done in the great settlements of the struggle.

There is here no sense of appreciation that he goes to Europe as the representative only of our people, but a statement that he is matching his mind against some other minds.

Along the same personal lines is the purported language of the telegram that came to the committee, as published in the press, where he says that unless Congress passes this bill it will be "fatal to my negotiations."

It is evident that he considers this peacemaking as personal to himself and a matter regarding which Congress need not be informed.

And it is in furtherance of his general ideas that this is his personal matter that he cables Congress to pass the bill and will not tell them any reason why except that he wants it so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs outlining the policy that, if carried out, may place the United States very near the level of Great Britain in naval power, which might suggest that it is the policy ultimately to become her equal or her superior, leads me to call the attention of members of the committee to just a few facts with reference to the evolution of the nations to the first rank. It might be quite a surprising announcement to Members who have not refreshed their memory on the history of the nations' development to know that when Christopher Columbus found America that the greatest naval power, the greatest maritime power on earth, was Portugal. It is quite difficult for us, viewing Portugal to-day as we do, to realize that at that time she was the primate of all the maritime powers of the world. Portugal came into a tremendous conflict with Spain in the ambition for colonies, so prominently carried on when these two countries were vying with each other in developing new worlds.

This contest went on for years, until Portugal lost the supremacy of the sea to Spain, which took such a large place in colonizing America and extending her power on the sea until she became a sea power and, under the régime, as many of you will recall, of the Duke of Alva, overran the Netherlands and overcame the tremendous growing power of the Dutch Republic as they were entering with increasing commercial significance upon the sea. The struggle was not confined to Portugal and Spain, but extended itself to the Dutch Republic on the north. However, Spain became the great leader finally, whose argosies were found on every sea, and whose leaders were quoted and feared in every land, and not until the Spanish armada met her fate in the English Channel, which is a very historic fact of the evolution of national superiority, did Spain's primacy go down. That conflict, as you will recall, was between Spain and Britain. It was the climax of a growing rivalry which was decided on the sea. That does not put Great Britain in the lead because another country, vigorous and wondrously aggressive, the country that Guizot said in that wonderful history of his, which held that almost every original idea of modern civilization had found birth within its borders—I refer to France, of course—was rapidly contending with Britain. One of the most remarkable facts of history to me is that the period of 127 years beginning with 1688, at the time of the famous English revolution, when modern England began to be, up to 1815, when Napoleon Bonaparte was defeated and banished—a period of 127 years, there were 12 wars fought between Great Britain and France to establish the primacy of the sea. Some of those wars were as long as 12 years in duration; 64 of the 127 years were spent in actual warfare. This struggle, comprising a series of wars covering over 100 years, is looked back upon as one of the titanic contests between two nations striving for the first place on the sea. In the evolution of England, or rather Britain, as the mighty sea power, so wonderfully displayed in this world war, no period of her history is more suggestive than the one which gave her the position she now holds, which began at the fall of Napoleon.

Among these wars was the famous French and Indian War, in which we as a young country, not yet born as a Republic, were greatly interested. It is known in Europe as "The Seven Years' War." We call it here "The French and Indian War," because of the prominence taken in it by our own colonies. And while we speak of that war as of interest to us, it was primarily a fight between France and Britain, and is one of the series of the 12 wars to indicate which of the two countries, or, better yet, which system of government, would come to be the ruler of the sea, because that war really was a struggle between two systems of government. One was rather Anglo-Saxon, and leading toward democracy; the other was Latin, and at that time was not leading toward democracy but to an ecclesiasticism, as all of you are well aware. And after the French and Indian War, which virtually decided that France must cease to be an American force and must give up her American colonies, Great Britain, having won in that war, invited some new problems. It was the Frenchman who said, "This war has given to Britain the first promise of a great contest in the new world by a new nation which in time will rival the old." The statesmen of France resented the provisions of the treaty of Paris and declared it to be the foundation of a new nation that would ultimately test the power of the mother country. That was as late as 1763. Already events were rapidly tending toward trouble with England.

From 1761, when the "Writs of Assistance" so deeply offended the colonies, relations became strained, until we got into a difference with the mother country, which reached open and armed resistance in what the world remembers as the famous American Revolution. Our revolution, although known in history as a very important war from any angle viewed, was not a conflict of rivalry of nations like there had been between France and England, or between the other nations which had contended for the sea supremacy, but it was a fight for certain principles. We say it was a fight against taxation without representation, or legislation without representation. The real fact is that our contention was much deeper than that expressed in that phrase; we wanted to cut out of this modern, growing, constitutional government of Britain certain effete ideas or governmental policies, one of which was the feudal system; another was life tenure in office; another was the hereditary system, by which men came to office by birth rather than fitness; another was the primogeniture system; and still another was the entailed-estate system. Those were all fastened upon European governments, especially the Anglo-Saxon, and we here had planted a young country, in only two of the States of which we had the primogeniture system and entailed-estate system, but which we desired to eliminate, and which we ultimately cut out by the sword.

So this American Revolution, which was a contest of the young country with the mother country, was to cut out of the old system certain elements that we could not permit to be planted here. And while that was not one of the 12 wars which marked the contest of sea power, it probably was the greatest war the mother country ever fought. Notwithstanding the fact that it went against her and lost to her her colonies, yet the English statesmen to-day refer to the American Revolution as the one instance in English history that they have all agreed to mention just as infrequently as it is possible to do. Since that day the British Empire has grown apace until it has reached its proud position in the world.

Now this is why I rose to speak. I desired to refresh your minds of this evolution of sea power. First it was Portugal, then it was Spain. For a little while it looked like Holland. And then the conflict came and raged between Britain and France, and for 127 years, as I have reminded you, during which 12 wars were waged, the struggle finally ended in Britain's favor, as you will recall, in the banishment of Napoleon Bonaparte. While the "Mistress of the Sea" increased, the young Republic also grew.

From 1815 up to the present time, this young Republic, growing apace in friendship with the mother country, alike in blood, alike in language, alike in law, alike in religion, alike in customs, and yet different in some ways, different in certain principles, this Government has come along until in 1878, I think it was, Gladstone in substance made the statement—although I am not sure that the date is right, but that is not important—that as the British constitution was the most subtle instrument that had ever been given to mankind, so the American Constitution is the most wonderful instrument ever stricken off by the brain and purpose of man at any one time.

Here is a nation of 110,000,000 people. Cosmopolitan in birth, but rapidly becoming a unit in all that makes for nationality, a population greater, not than the British Empire, but greater by double the population speaking the English language under the British Empire. And we have a wealth that is easily double the wealth of Great Britain. Indeed, it has been estimated that our annual income is almost half of the total wealth of Great Britain.

And I simply want to make this suggestion: For the first time since before the Civil War we see America going on the sea, a tremendous power in a merchant marine, which alone points to the position of a competitor of the mother country; and we see her building a Navy that promises also to rival that of the mother country. May we say to take care of the merchant marine? We may have a problem in front of us as to the superiority of nations. I simply propound this question in the light of history as a possible interpretation of the naval program. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, students of the psychology of history have frequently remarked the occurrence of a period of levity following one of extreme and unusual national stress such as is occasioned by great pestilence or a fierce and devastating war—a period marked by curious and extraordinary, and sometimes grotesque, evidence of the reaction from the tremendous worry and strain of a period of calamity and heroic sacrifice. Any student of history will recall periods of that character. It is entirely unnecessary for me to particularize them.

Certain occurrences of the more or less recent past have furnished striking evidence that this tendency and disposition of mankind is to be a part of our experience as we emerge from the gloom and horror of the great war. In the limited time at my disposal I shall not be able to furnish all of the various illustrations that occur to me of this disposition and tendency, which is perhaps to be welcomed as a part of the reaction from the worry and anxiety of the recent past—a pleasing evidence of the swinging of the pendulum which betokens a reasonably early return to a normal spirit of optimism and hopefulness.

My purpose on this occasion is simply to call attention to perhaps the most striking evidence which has been presented to us of the introduction of the playful spirit of levity into the most serious and sober affairs of life, into the very body and substance of perhaps the most sober and solemn thing next to a declaration of holy writ, a legislative enactment. I refer to the provision contained in this bill which starts out with a declaration of national purpose of expansion touching the Navy, which would do credit to Falstaff himself, and ends up with a cooing assurance that this bold and bristling front is mere stage play, worthy of Bottom the Weaver in his best moments.

It is no doubt true that the American people as a whole have not as yet become so thoroughly imbued with that light-hearted, care-free, jocund spirit to which I have referred as to thoroughly appreciate at first blush this bit of comedy intended to add to the gayety of the Nation and liven the dull, drab pages of the naval bill. Furthermore, the personality of the honorable and distinguished gentlemen responsible for this introduction of the spirit of a Pinafore stage navy into the legislative provisions for a real navy is not such as to lend itself to the prompt and immediate recognition of the farce-comedy character of the provision.

That such ordinarily dignified, not to say solemn, gentlemen should incline themselves and turn their attention to these little touches of farce, subtly intended to lighten the strain of legislative cares, comes as a refreshing evidence that the saving sense of humor, though little suspected, may still have its abiding place in the minds and hearts of the ordinarily most sober and solemn of men. [Applause.]

It is true that whatever other qualities and attributes may have been charged to or claimed for the honorable Secretary of the Navy, he has not heretofore been generally considered a "joker." Therefore it requires a little adjustment of one's preconceived notions to clearly recognize this quality in that distinguished gentleman.

Our esteemed friend and colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, has heretofore been rather more distinguished for his honest earnestness than for a light and blithesome spirit of persiflage. It comes as a welcome discovery to his friends and well-wishers that a vein of genuine humor, hitherto unsuspected, occurs among his splendid endowments of heart and mind.

Then there is our dear President. There is no end to the encomiums that have been heaped upon him, along with other expressions of opinion. He has been endowed by his friends with every virtue of the mind that is the heritage of man. But I think no one has up to this time claimed for the President a disposition to deal in the spirit of light and frothy pleasantry with the serious affairs of statecraft. However, as we have understood the President enjoys the light and frisky embellishments of the drama, it is not perhaps to be wondered at that we have discovered in him this vein of subtle humor. This light touch of farce comedy may be likened to the enlivening and cheerful activities of the ballet in the intervals of a serious and heavy drama.

It is true that we have not altogether lacked evidences of presidential humor in dealings and communications of the past, though, in the main, they have been so naïvely expressed and so subtly stated as, for the time, to generally escape public appreciation of their Pickwickian character. [Laughter.] I have in mind, for instance, the presidential pleasantry which resulted in Congress reversing itself on the subject of the Panama tolls. I know it was taken seriously at the time, owing to the lack of the proper sense of humor in Congress, but as no one has ever been enlightened as to what the "matters of greater delicacy and nearer consequence" were, and in view of the fact that if they related to anything tangible the President's passion for "open covenants" and "pitiless publicity" would long since have resulted in a disclosure of their meaning, it now becomes clear that this was a mere persuasive pleasantry of Executive intercourse with Congress.

There has been much interest evidenced as to a certain alleged presidential cablegram, or aerogram, which is said to have found its way into the secret and sacred precincts of the Committee on Naval Affairs, influencing those earnest and faithful gentlemen to play their part in the little one-act farce interlarding the otherwise heavy passages of the drama of the naval bill.

For myself, I have bridled whatever curiosity I might have with regard to that matter, realizing that too much realism is fatal to the enjoyment of any enlivening and diverting pastime on or off the stage.

Let us assume that our enjoyment of this brief respite from the daily grind of serious and sober things may be unalloyed; that there was a message; that it contained this, that, or the other thing, depending upon the kind and character of a message which our varying fancy may deem most appropriate to fit into and round out the mirth-provoking scenes and incidents of the play.

Some folks have called this provision in the naval bill a "bluff." No such mistaken notion will be harbored for a moment by anyone who has enjoyed the suppressed excitement that surrounds the launching of a "bluff" in that educating pastime in which the "bluff" is so frequently a thrilling part of the procedure. Whether or not the President is familiar with the game in which the "bluff" is so essential a part of the entertainment I do not know, but undoubtedly sufficiently so to enable him to realize that a bluff accompanied by a stage whisper which reveals its real character and purpose to all who are sitting in the game ceases to be a "bluff" and becomes a "joke." [Laughter.]

Of course, there is such a thing as carrying a joke too far. The inclination and disposition not to do so distinguishes the intelligent and discerning from the bumpkin and the yokel. This being so, we assume our dear friends, the Secretary, the chairman, and the President, having, with the assistance and the playful and good-natured cooperation of the committee, had their little fling of pleasantry, will before the curtain rings down on the drama of the naval bill, after the approved fashion of farce comedies, drop the lion's skin and roar and imitating what was, until this present performance, the most delightful farce comedy on the boards, remind us that this is but a midwinter night's dream, and present themselves and their bill entirely divested of the evidences of their humorous interlude.

I know that there are some very seriously minded folks who are perturbed because they fear that some people may be inclined to take this little performance seriously. They say that having declared in the person of our distinguished spokesman, now officiating on his own appointment as our representative at the peace table, that we are a peace-loving folk, opposed to great armaments and pledged to their reduction, and having but yesterday, according to the dispatches, through this same distinguished spokesman, given our assent and approval to such reductions, our action in seeming to propose the greatest naval establishment ever conceived or projected may be misunderstood.

I hasten to reassure such trembling and timid souls. It is true that our English cousins sometimes require to have a joke labeled and diagramed. Evidently the authors of this little comedy had that weakness of humorous perception in mind, for between the little skit itself and the very illuminating inquiries that have been centered upon it the diagram and explanation is complete. "Ba jove," "Deuced clevah," "Dontcha know!" [laughter] may be as far as English appreciation may find favorable expression, but how our French friends, who have a fine sense of humor, will enjoy it. As for the folks at home, once recovered from the shock of discovering real humor in the executive departments and Congress, their enjoyment of the episode will be limitless; possibly I am justified in saying hilarious. The balance of the world will view this serious attempt at legislative farce comedy according to their various capacities for the enjoyment of a funny situation; but, at any rate, I think we may safely say that it will add to the gayety of the nations.

Of course, it is true that a humorous situation may be pressed too far. The humorist who spreads banana peels, rocks the boat, or snaps a supposedly unloaded blunderbuss at a near and dear friend may come to grief. Such things have happened. There have been folks rude enough to suggest that people who trifle with matters that may lead to serious consequences ought to be incarcerated or have meted out to them the condign punishment that is due to him who thoughtlessly, possibly cunningly, lays schemes that may breed disaster.

But, of course, our friends of the Naval Committee are going to do nothing of that sort. Of course, we do not want them to so reveal the genesis of the plot of their little game or the real character of the crude costuming under which they present this front of Jove, with all of his thunderbolts, as to dull the edge of our keen relish of their little byplay.

At the proper time, toward the close of the consideration of the bill, this little farce-comedy provision having served its jocund purpose, the committee will, of course, strike it from an otherwise most excellent piece of legislation and give us an opportunity to vote for the bill without having the people imagine that we do not know a joke when we see it. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15539) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DEMOBILIZATION IN THE NAVY.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, the question has been asked time and again about the methods and what the department was doing and what the orders and procedure are about demobilizing the Navy. I have a letter from Admiral Blue giving full particulars and details, and I wish to have it published in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD a letter from Admiral Blue. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF NAVIGATION,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1919.

Hon. LEMUEL P. PADGETT,
Chairman House Naval Affairs Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PADGETT: With reference to your telephone communication of to-day, the situation in regard to the demobilization of men is as follows:

The department has up to date directed the release of 40 per cent of the reserves, 40 per cent of the men who enlisted for the war only, and 20 per cent of the regular four-year men who enlisted since the beginning of the war.

In making these releases, commanding officers of ships and stations were directed to give preference, first, to men who have families dependent upon them, and, second, to young men desiring to complete their education. In case of there being more applicants than can be released under the authorized percentages, those to be released will be decided by lot. Naturally the demobilization must be handled by the commanding officers on general orders from the bureau, as it would be impossible for the bureau to handle the individual cases.

In addition to this, orders have gone out during the last few days to release all the Naval Reserve men and men enlisted for the war only who are now undergoing training at the training stations and at trade schools, if they so request.

We have also ordered the release of 20,000 men of the Naval Reserve and men enlisted for the war who are performing shore duties at the various naval districts.

The bureau is very desirous of completing the demobilization as soon as possible, but it is confronted with the proposition of placing in commission some 38 to 40 large vessels to be used as transports in bringing home troops from France. A number of cargo ships belonging to the Shipping Board are also being manned. As you can readily understand, the present activities of the Navy, as well as those in prospect, have to be carefully provided for, otherwise they would have to cease.

It is hoped that by the 20th of February we will have demobilized at least half of the remaining personnel on shore after the releases above described have taken place. From February 20 to March 1 we will obtain detailed statements from all stations in regard to the number of men remaining available. This we shall have to do in order to ascertain where we stand in regard to personnel.

In the meantime we are recruiting men as fast as our facilities will permit. They seem to be coming in now at the rate of about 1,600 a week. This will of course help us out in the matter of demobilization, but naturally we will not really feel the effect of this for several months, for the reason that the new men coming in are recruits and must be trained before being sent to the ships.

Trusting that this information will enable you to understand the situation, I am,

Very sincerely, yours, VICTOR BLUE.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House, pursuant to the order previously made, adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 6, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast given to us a voice in the council of the nations. We come before Thee that we may have the grace to justify the position in which Thou hast placed us in Thy providence. We pray that every thought may be subjected to the will of God; that every purpose that we have as a Nation may take in the divine program; that we may labor together with God for the establishment of that order which Thou hast ordained shall come into the earth. Bless us this day in the discharge of the sacred and holy duties of this office. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have been made in the manner required by law, agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DENT, Mr. FIELDS, and Mr. KAHN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I present a joint resolution adopted by the Wisconsin Legislature, which I ask to have read.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Joint resolution 14.

A joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to cooperate with the Dominion of Canada in the enlarged canalization of the St. Lawrence River for the passage of ocean-going vessels into the Great Lakes.

Whereas the Dominion of Canada has provided for the improvement of the Welland Canal, connecting Lake Ontario and Lake Erie, so that such canal will accommodate ships of 25-foot draft, 800-foot length, and 80-foot width, work on which improvement was suspended during the war and is now again being taken up and will be completed in the near future;

Whereas the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Lake Ontario can not be used by vessels of over 14-foot draft and 270-foot length; and

Whereas it is deemed to be a matter of great and vital importance to the United States that the St. Lawrence River be so improved that larger vessels may be accommodated and may move between the Great Lakes and the ocean: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That we earnestly and urgently petition the Congress of the United States to take such steps as may be deemed best and most expeditious looking to the early improvement of the St. Lawrence River by joint arrangement with the Dominion of Canada.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution, duly attested by the signatures of the presiding officers and chief clerks of the two houses, shall be transmitted to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

RILEY S. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
EDWARD F. DITTMAR,
President of the Senate.
D. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. NEW. I send to the desk and ask that there be printed in the RECORD a series of resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Indianapolis Branch of the American Protective League. The resolutions discuss the future treatment of all alien enemies now in prison in this country and restrictive legislation as to future immigration.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the Indianapolis Branch of the American Protective League (numbering about 1,000 citizens of this community who have served the United States Government throughout the war through the Department of Justice), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby earnestly urged to take such steps as lay within its power to cause all alien enemies who have been interned during the war just ended to be deported to the respective countries from which they came at the earliest practicable time; and

Resolved further, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby earnestly urged to enact such restrictive legislation as to future immigration as will make it certain that should the misfortune of another foreign war come upon the country its citizenship shall not be honeycombed with disloyal enemy propagandists, as it has been during this war; and

Resolved further, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted to the junior Senator from Indiana and to the Representative in Congress from this congressional district, with the request that they be spread upon the records of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

The resolution of which the foregoing is a true copy was passed at a meeting of the Indianapolis branch of the American Protective League held February 1, 1919.

SAMUEL D. MILLER,
Chairman of the Executive Committee.

FEBRUARY 3, 1919.

Mr. GRONNA. I send to the desk a brief letter with resolutions from the Board of Agriculture of the State of Pennsylvania, which I ask to have read.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read, as follows:

FEBRUARY 4, 1919.

Hon. ASLE J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am inclosing herewith copy of resolution adopted by the Pennsylvania State Board of Agriculture at their annual meeting held in this city on January 22 last.

Yours, very truly,

FRED RASMUSSEN,
Secretary of Agriculture.

Report of committee on resolutions.

Whereas many of the destitute people of Europe are suffering for want of food and are looking to America for sustenance until their 1919 crops mature; and

Whereas many of our farms have not produced maximum crops because of the lack of sufficient experienced farm laborers, and as the same condition will prevail the coming year unless it is definitely known within a short time when the farm laborers serving in the United States Army will return, so that proper arrangements and plans can be made for the coming year's crops: Therefore be it

Resolved by the State board of agriculture, in session at Harrisburg, Pa., this 22d day of January, A. D. 1919, That the authorities at Washington be informed of the seriousness of the situation, so that legislation or regulations be adopted placing farm laborers in the most essential class and steps taken for their immediate discharge of all such men serving in the Army at home and abroad.

Whereas in the great readjustment that will take place shortly in the economic conditions of all classes of life it is important that the labor standards and prices of commodities be kept at a parity so that the farmer's portion thereof be just and equitable: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we are opposed to any of the proposed schemes of land grants and Government-aided farmers, because we believe there is a grave danger of the same disastrous results which took place after the War of the Rebellion, when the Government stimulated increased farms and would-be farmers caused such an overproduction of farm products that prices of farm crops were below cost of production, corn becoming cheaper than coal was used for fuel, this violation of the unchangeable laws of supply and demand causing deprivation, misery, and the failure which overwhelmed the farmers of the East and West, and in addition causing the depletion of the soil fertility to much land throughout the great West that is beyond redemption.

Whereas the results of our war activities have shown that much of the waste of time, treasure, and life has been caused by our unpreparedness and our mistaken sense of security through our supposed isolation and material prosperity: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we are in favor of a system of universal military training similar to that known as the Swiss.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I send to the desk and ask to have read a resolution adopted by the House and Senate of the Michigan Legislature with reference to good roads, which I ask to have read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

MICHIGAN STATE SENATE,
Lansing, February 4, 1919.

Hon. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to advise you that the Senate and House of Representatives of Michigan have adopted the following concurrent resolution:

Indorsing pending legislation in Congress providing for appropriations for Federal aid in highway building.

Whereas the Committee on Post Roads and Post Offices of the United States Senate has reported favorably on the so-called Bankhead bill, carrying an appropriation of $200,000,000 for Federal aid in highway building, to be apportioned among the several States; and

Whereas said appropriation would aid Michigan to the extent of nearly $5,500,000 in the building of highways: Therefore

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the United States Senators and Representatives from Michigan be, and are hereby, requested to give this measure their hearty support; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this State.

Yours, truly,

DENIS E. ALWARD,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I also send to the desk and ask to have read a resolution adopted by the senate of the Legislature of Michigan relative to the suffrage amendment, which I ask to have read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

SENATE, STATE OF MICHIGAN,
Lansing, Mich., January 2, 1919.

Hon. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a resolution this day adopted by the senate of the State of Michigan, as follows:

"Senate resolution No. 17.

"Whereas an amendment to the Federal Constitution providing that 'the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged in the United States or any State on account of sex' has passed the House of Representatives and is now pending in the Senate; and

"Whereas during the war, in recognition of the value of woman's war service the Parliaments of Great Britain and Canada enfranchised the women of those countries, and those of France and Italy have virtually promised the same act of political justice; and

"Whereas immediately after signing of armistice autocratic Germany and Hungary gave women the ballot; and

"Whereas in our own country women vote on same terms as men in 15 States and have some voting rights in 20 others, laboriously acquired during a struggle of 40 years; and

"Whereas the electors of Michigan defeated woman suffrage five years ago by 96,000 votes; two months ago it carried by nearly 35,000 votes, an indication of the great change in sentiment throughout the State; and

"Whereas the leaders of all political parties, major and minor, have demanded the passage of this amendment and the national committees of the major political parties have earnestly indorsed it: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we the members of the Michigan senate, in recognition of the justice of women's demands and of their contribution to society in war and in peace, hereby call upon the Senate of the United States to pass the woman suffrage amendment and give the States opportunity to ratify the same."

Very respectfully,

DENNIS E. ALWARD,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Waterville, Me., praying for Government ownership of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BORAH. I present a joint memorial from the Legislature of the State of Idaho with reference to the so-called Susan B. Anthony suffrage amendment to the Constitution. I understand that my colleague [Mr. NUGENT] on yesterday had a similar memorial read to the Senate, so it is unnecesary for me to read this one. I ask, however, that it be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the memorial will be so referred.

Mr. CURTIS. I have here a telegram from the governor of Kansas, showing the action of the Kansas Legislature in regard to the pending proposal for the Government to aid in the construction of highways, which I desire to have read.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., January 29, 1919.

Senator CHARLES CURTIS,
Washington, D. C.:

Kansas Legislature to-day adopted resolution requesting Congress to pass bill granting additional Federal aid for construction of highways. This is vital to the plans for immediate employment of returning soldiers.

HENRY J. ALLEN, Governor.

TAX ON FRUIT AND BERRY JUICES.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I understand the conference report on the revenue bill has not yet been presented. I do not know whether it has been agreed upon or not; but I have a resolution from the legislature of my State with reference to one question involved in that bill, which is among the questions being considered by the conference committee. Being a memorial from the legislature, I ask that it may be read. I do not understand that there is any way of referring matters of this kind to the conference committee, but in this way I can bring it to their attention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 13.

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States an act "to provide revenue, and for other purposes," commonly known as the 1918 revenue bill; that section 68 of this bill as passed by the House of Representatives contained a provision in section 628 thereof authorizing the collection of a tax of 20 per cent of the selling price on all fruit and berry juices produced in the United States, according to a ruling of the Treasury Department of the United States in construing a similar provision in the revenue act of October 4, 1917; and

Whereas said provision of the bill was amended by the Senate of the United States so as to exempt from the operation thereof fruit and berry juices, and afterwards passed by said body as amended; and

Whereas a conference committee appointed by each House of Congress is now considering the amendment as adopted by the United States Senate, and according to information received by the manufacturers of grape, loganberry, and apple juices in this State intends to submit a report to each House of Congress recommending that the bill be amended so as to impose a tax of 10 per cent of the selling price of such fruit and berry juices; and

Whereas the imposition of such a tax would render valueless great manufacturing industries which have been built up in the States of Oregon, Washington, and elsewhere at a cost of vast sums of money; and

Whereas a large portion of the most fertile agricultural land in the Northwest is now devoted to the growth and culture of grapes, loganberries, and apples, which are manufactured into grape, loganberry, and apple juices, thereby giving permanent employment to thousands of our citizens, which could not continue under the burdens of such tax; and

Whereas the taxation of the grape, loganberry, and apple juices as contemplated by said revenue bill, and the consequent destruction of our manufacturing and agricultural industries, would deprive this State of giving employment to the returning soldiers, sailors, and marines now in the service of their country; and

Whereas grape, loganberry, and apple juices as manufactured in the Northwest are food products rather than beverages and thereby should not be classified with synthetic concoctions, such as root beer, ginger ale, pop, etc., as is proposed by said pending bill: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That the Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, memorialized and requested to use their utmost endeavors to procure the passage of said revenue bill with the elimination of grape, loganberry, and apple juices from taxation therein as passed by the Senate of the United States; that copies of this concurrent resolution be forthwith forwarded to each member of the conference committee of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress, and also copies to the Senators and Representatives from the States of Oregon and Washington.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5559) to authorize a preference right of entry by certain Carey Act entrymen, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 686) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7236) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, approved May 11, 1898, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 687) thereon.

Mr. SAULSBURY, from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, to which was referred the bill (S. 5343) to authorize the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii to ratify the agreements of certain persons made with the commissioner of public lands of the Territory of Hawaii, and to issue land patents to those eligible under the terms of said agreements, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 685) thereon.

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 5516) to amend an act approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment.

FRANCIS STEWART.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands, I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 4743) for the relief of Francis Stewart, and I submit a report (No. 689) thereon.

This bill was introduced by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], and is one of the bills validating title to a homestead where there was some technical flaw. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. In this particular case the claimant lived near the Mexican line and was not able to live on her homestead claim all the time the law required because she was driven away by Mexican marauders and invaders. Quite a number of bills of a similar character have passed the Senate, and they are now in the House. Very shortly there is to be an omnibus bill in the House, combining all bills of this character, and, if this bill is passed now, it will stand some show of being made an amendment to that omnibus bill. If not, it will never see the light of day in the House. I promised that, in the absence of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], I would give it some attention. So with this statement I ask that the bill be read, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. No doubt it is a good bill; but it will lead to other requests of the same character.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; I ask unanimous consent, and I have one more bill for which I am going to make a similar request.

Mr. ASHURST. I will not object to the consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent to Francis Stewart for the southwest quarter of section 33, township 28 south, range 7 west, New Mexico meridian.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question or two in regard to the bill. I am not a member of the Committee on Public Lands, as the Senator knows, but I have had considerable experience with public-land affairs, and I wish to ask the Senator if there were any adverse claims in this particular case?

Mr. MYERS. None whatever. If there had been, I would not have favored the bill and would not now be asking unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; it is.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. MYERS. I have no personal interest in it; I am simply asking for its passage on behalf of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEADS FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 13353) to extend the provisions of the homestead laws touching credit for period of enlistment to the soldiers, nurses, and officers of the Army and the seamen, marines, nurses, and officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States who have served or will have served with the Mexican border operations or during the war between the United States and Germany and her allies, and I submit a report (No. 688) thereon.

This bill was introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. FRENCH, of Idaho, and gives to the soldiers and sailors who fought in the war with Germany and those who were on the Mexican border during the Mexican troubles the same rights in connection with taking up homesteads that are given by existing law to the soldiers of the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and the Philippine insurrection.

I introduced in this body and had favorably reported from the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate a bill which is substantially identical with this; but this being a House bill, I ask its passage by the Senate, and if it is passed I will move to indefinitely postpone the Senate bill. That is all there is to this bill; it is to give the soldiers and sailors of this war and those who served on the Mexican border the same rights in connection with the homestead laws as have heretofore been accorded to the veterans of the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and the Philippine insurrection. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think the bill ought to be read. I should like to have the bill read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill does not seem to be with the report.

Mr. MYERS. There ought to be a bill with the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is; but it is all stricken out. It is the House Calendar bill, and the entire bill is stricken out. All there is is the title to a bill.

Mr. MYERS. I think there must be a bill accompanying the report. However, I ask leave to withdraw the report. I thought there was a copy of the bill with it. I ask to be allowed to withdraw the report. I do not care to make it at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report is withdrawn.

Mr. MYERS subsequently said: Mr. President, I now renew my request in regard to House bill 13353, which I again report from the Public Lands Committee, with the explanation I made a while ago. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. The report is now accompanied by a copy of the bill. I ask that the bill be read.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to the conditions therein expressed as to length of service and honorable discharge, the provisions of sections 2304 and 2305, Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be applicable in all cases of military and naval service rendered in connection with the Mexican-border operations or during the war with Germany and its allies as defined by public resolution No. 32, approved August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. L., p. 671), and the act approved July 28, 1917 (40 Stat. L., p. 248).

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the bill (S. 5071) extending the benefits of sections 2304, 2305, and 2309, Revised Statutes of the United States, to those who rendered military or naval service during the Mexican-border troubles and the war with Germany and its allies, being Order of Business 617, and of which I am the author, be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 5552) providing that the United States may be made a party defendant in the same manner as a private person in certain legal processes dealing with real property; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

TRANSPORTATION FOR AGRICULTURAL LABORERS.

Mr. GRONNA. I introduce a bill which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD. It is very short. I have prepared a short statement to go with it, giving the reasons why the bill should be passed, and I also ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 5551) providing for a reduced rate for the transportation of laborers when traveling on the railroads of the United States under the direction and control of the United States Employment Service of the Department of Labor was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Railroad Administration is hereby authorized and directed to inaugurate and establish a special rate of 1 cent per mile for the transportation of agricultural laborers engaged in the planting, cultivating, and harvesting of farm crops and the care of live stock when such agricultural laborers are traveling under the direction and control of the United States Employment Service of the Department of Labor.

The United States Railroad Administration and the United States Department of Labor are directed jointly to prepare and promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to make effective the provisions of this act.

An emergency existing, this act shall become effective immediately following its enactment into law.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the statement I have referred to be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

REASONS FOR REDUCED RATE ON RAILROADS FOR AGRICULTURAL LABORERS.

To restore peace in the world we must provide the people with food and we must provide employment for labor at reasonable wages.

Many towns and cities of this country are reporting large and increasing numbers of unemployed.

An unquestioned shortage of farm labor for 1919 will prevent farmers from producing normal crops of all foodstuffs.

The farm-labor needs for this year are so serious that the farms of this country can furnish homes and employment for at least 2,000,000 men during the days of business reconstruction.

At present prices of crops on the farms and present excessive cost of railroad transportation farmers can not compete for labor, and transient farm labor can not profitably travel to the sections where most needed.

Many reports show that the men engaged in harvesting the wheat crop of 1918 will not return to assist in the harvesting of the 1919 crop, because of the fact that the cost of transportation consumed practically all of their earnings.

The experience of railroads in years past shows that the apparent loss on passenger earnings will be more than offset by the freight earnings as a result of increased crops.

The 1-cent railroad rate prevails in Canada, and is a material inducement in attracting labor to the farms, and has resulted in drawing thousands of skilled American farm laborers to the Canadian fields.

This is not class legislation, because of the two fundamental purposes: First, relieving the towns and cities of an increasing number of unemployed; and, second, the production and harvesting of increased crops which must result in benefits to all concerned.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. WALSH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 441), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and that expenses contracted hereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ADDRESS BY HON. FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, almost daily we have in this body discussions of international questions, particularly discussions of a world league of nations. I believe in a reasonable discussion of those subjects. I believe on the subject of a world league of nations the sentiment of this country should be crystallized. I myself like to hear discussions of that important subject from different viewpoints; for while, with certain restrictions and under certain conditions, I favor a world league of nations, I have not entirely determined in my own mind as to all of the details of which should be incorporated into an agreement for such a league. I feel that I need enlightenment.

I have here a very able and interesting address, of moderate length, which was delivered on the subject of a league of nations in New York recently by Hon. Franklin K. Lane, the very able and distinguished Secretary of the Interior. With much of it I agree; all of it is illuminating, and I ask unanimous consent that the address be printed in the RECORD. It will be well worth anyone's reading.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in talking upon this subject the temptation would be to paint a picture of what Europe is, but I know that your heartstrings have been touched to the limit and that it is not necessary for me to present to you any reason why war should be made to cease or why war should be made less likely to happen.

"The President of the United States is in Paris not by your order but to carry out your wish. For the business men of the United States have by a referendum vote declared what their desire is. They do not wish merely a peace, the settlement of the immediate problem, but they wish something more lasting, something more fundamental, something that has been entitled 'A League of Nations'—something that really is, in essence, nothing more than international cooperation. And in this time, when that man stands before the world preeminently as the representative of this great people, he is entitled to the support of every American because he is the President of all of us.

"He is there, to be sure, as the representative of an ideal, but it is an ideal that is not his own ideal alone; it is the ideal of the chambers of commerce of the United States, the ideal of the statesmen of this time and of statesmen for many centuries.

"The business man wants peace because war is expensive. When this war came to an end we were spending $50,000,000 per day. Not only is it expensive but it is unreasonable. I do not say that all wars are unreasonable, or that all wars have no justification. But war is unreasonable, certainly in 99 per cent of the cases, for the reason that it gets nowhere. It will not stand the pragmatic test; it does not work; it does not solve the difficulty in the end. But there is a greater reason why you gentlemen are for some plan by which mutual guaranties can be given, and that is because you believe in a greater America, and we can not spend our time nor our boys' time in thinking of war when we have other things to think of that are much greater than the destruction of life.

"We have a continent that we have still to master. We have resources that we have still to bring forth. Our days of pioneering have largely passed. They passed, I believe, with the beginning of this century, but now we have come to a time of intensive development—a new America in the abundance and variety of its resources, physical, intellectual, spiritual.

"The question arises in every mind, Is such a plan practicable? And there are men who will say that it can not be made to work.

"America my friends is not the product of a philosophy of despair; America is the creature of optimism and confidence.

"At present we are in an eddy; the great stream is flowing on, but in the United States we are in a bit of back current. You feel it, I feel it, the country expresses it.

"In a certain sense the war came to an end too soon, because we, in our minds, had prepared for a war that would last until next summer, and then great things would be done, and the enemy forced to surrender. But you know just what happened. Far off on the eastern end, where the war had begun, there suddenly came a drive through Macedonia, and then there came the magnificent effort on the west front, and before we knew it Bulgaria had surrendered, Austria had put in her plea, Germany had thrown up her hands in surrender, and the armistice had come.

"But in a time such as this, when we are naturally feeling a reaction from the stress, strain, struggle, and sacrifice of heroic effort for two years and more, you can not judge of the American mind. A league of nations is demanded by the peoples of the world, and something in that order will result, because it is expressive of a great impulse, a great desire, a real world demand.

"Why should anyone say that such a league can not be? The man who wrote the greatest study of America is Mr. Bryce. He stands for it stanchly. The man who brought England into this war for an ideal as well as for self-protective reasons, Lord Grey, is for it. The man who stands at the head of the British Government and who has recently been almost unanimously indorsed and commended by his people, who has carried this war on in behalf of his country to a successful conclusion, Lloyd George, believes in it. You and I agitated for it before the war came upon us. We knew that something in the way of international cooperation must be evolved or else the world would be doomed to live in a state of unending fear. Men of imagination all over the world have been writing books about it until it has come to be that people have thought that it was merely a dream, a utopian vision, something by which in a strange and magical way the millennium was to be brought about. Why should international cooperation be impossible? What is the growth of society except the growth of cooperation?

STANDS FOR COOPERATION.

"What is this association that I am addressing and the thousand associations like it in the United States—what are they but cooperative effort? What is this city in which you club together for the purpose of getting sewerage and water systems and streets? And the State and the Nation—what are these but expressions of cooperative effort? The distinctive movement of our day is away from an intense individualism in business and toward gathering together, seeing eye to eye, sitting across the table and talking out difficulties, exchange of thought, of method, of purpose. So that those who stand against international cooperation are standing against the very trend of business life, the trend of labor organizations, the trend of scientific effort, the trend of the centuries. Why, gentlemen, there were 135 international conferences held the year before the war. We have in existence already machinery of one kind and another which directly touches international effort, such as the Postal Union, a union that spreads throughout the whole world.

"No one can say, therefore, that this thing is a mere vision; that it is a dream that can not be made true. It is, of course, possible to believe that the thing that we want is a thing that can not be perfected at once; that it can not spring full-fledged out of the mind of any statesman.

"Political machinery, like all other machinery, is a dream first and then passes through phases of valueless crudeness to phases of perfecting utility—and perhaps never becomes perfect. And who are we to say that in a day when men are drawing nitrogen out of the air by electric process, in a day when you can talk to a man 5,000 feet above you by wireless telephone, the inventive mind of man has stopped. Why, the Constitution of the United States itself was the first invention along practical lines of politics in a thousand years.

"International law is filmy, founded upon unrelated precedents, without certainty, precision, or definiteness. We should know the law between nations as we know the law within nations. Some day it must be drafted and by some one. Why not now at the Paris conference? Some body of men must meet and out of the experiences of the nations find those rules of international conduct which have been generally accepted by the most advanced of the nations and crystallize them into form and give them sanction. An international code commission is needed to declare the accepted law (if it can be said that there is any accepted international law) and to present to the nations for their ratification such new laws as may be needed both in the promotion of intercourse, commerce, and peace, and in the conduct of war. This would be the foundation of a league of nations.

"Here would be an agreement, between those who chose to make it, that they would accept definite rules by which they would be governed as between each other. Such a commission would not be an international or supernational legislature. All that it did would be referred for approval and adoption to the nations; those who joined in its drafting and those which had not done so. A code so formed would grow as all law has grown, from a simple presentation of a few rules or principles into a more complex and elaborate body as time went on. This surely would not be revolutionary; it would not offend national pride or set at naught national sovereignty. We could cover such matters as we wished, and only such matters as we wished, in such a code.

"But in that code there should be incorporated one agreement, binding on all who signed it, that it must be the law between the nations, and if controversies arose as to the matters dealt with in the code that they would be submitted to a judicial tribunal formed by the nations for the interpretation and application of the law and would abide by the decision of that court.

"That agreement would call for a surrender—a surrender on the part of all the members of the league—of the right to go to war over a matter which they had agreed should be a matter for decision by a court. Such agreements are not uncommon among business men. There is hardly a contract of consequence drawn to-day that does not contain such a provision. And the history of nations each year grows richer with the record of cases where differences between nations as to specific matters are relegated to just such tribunals. Sir Frederick Pollock has gathered the fact that since the year 1815 there have been more than 150 cases arising out of international conflict of interest which have been submitted to the decision of chosen arbitrators, and in no case has war resulted from the decision rendered.

"This most pregnant fact must be regarded here that in the code itself there would be eliminated from controversy a great volume of matters over which disputes might arise. For instance, the parties to the league would definitely state and agree upon the territorial boundaries of the countries affected. There would be a settlement, clear and distinct, of this most prolific cause of trouble. There might well be a setting forth of the rights of nationals in foreign lands, another abundant source of difficulty. And the rights of nations to enforce the claims of private individuals for loans made to foreign governments might be dealt with in such manner as to make clear and unequivocal the nature of the remedy that the individual making the loan would have. In a word, the code itself would eliminate from the field of uncertainty a not inconsiderable percentage, perhaps an overwhelming majority, of the causes of international trouble and make a resort to the court unnecessary.

"If, however, there developed a controversy which one or both of the parties would not submit to the court, or after a court decision one or both would not accept it, what method of enforcement could there be?

"The league could have a weapon which the world has never tried but which, I do believe, would prove more coercive than any plan that has been devised, as cruel in some ways as war itself, and devoid of any of those meretricious calls which make war so often popular. In harsh, undiplomatic language this process would be called international boycott—the severance of every tie that connected the nations of the league with the offending nation. Cut the railroads at the border, the telegraphs, telephones, postal service, steamboat lines, all communication; allow no one to have ingress or egress; allow no bank to deal with any bank in that country; no cattle, no coal, no steel, no food, no letters; cut off all life; let the nation be as one that did not exist to the rest of the world. It is hardly thinkable that any nation would refuse to submit a controversy to a court's decision if it knew of such a possible punishment. But if it still was obdurate war must follow. An international police force would, however, not be a necessity, for nations have learned to cooperate under a unified command in the past year and national forces might again be united to carry out a common pledge.

"This does not seem to me an impossible, impracticable, unreliable plan. It does not prevent war; it makes it unlikely, most improbable. Of course, if such a plan were inaugurated and by its means the world was brought through difficulties the plan would gradually prove the lessening need for great armaments and disarmament would slowly come about.

"There are difficulties to be overcome in instituting any such plan. Who are to constitute the league? I should answer those whose territories are clearly defined, who have a settled form of constitutional government under which they are living in peace, and who are so behaving themselves as to be worthy of a place at the table of the family of nations.

"Would it not imperil the interests of the greater powers if they had to be subject to the will of the smaller? It has never been proposed that all nations should have an equal vote in the league. The one stable tribunal organized by The Hague conference was the international prize court, in which the United States had 20 votes as against a single vote for most of the smaller nations. This was arrived at by considering population, wealth, ships at sea, volume and value of sea traffic, and other elements. It was arrived at by a process known to you as the weighted average.

"Would not the Monroe doctrine be surrendered by the formation of such a league? The answer to this is that the Monroe doctrine is a declaration that the territorial integrity and national independence of the nations on this hemisphere shall not be invaded by any European power. That doctrine might well be written into the code to which the nations would subscribe, and it has so long been accepted that I doubt if the right to have it made a part of the code would be challenged. In fact, the very first of the proposals made by the President for such a league is the declaration of this very doctrine. Here are his words:

"A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guarantees of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small nations alike.

"But the right to enforce this doctrine might be taken from the United States. True, that burden might not remain exclusively our own. And yet there is no reason why in the formation of the league there could not be a recognition that certain principles and doctrines would be within the care of certain subordinate groups—a pan-American league, if you please, as to matters of all American concern and perhaps a district sub-organization for Europe and another for Asia.

"Thought—sympathetic thought—will solve many problems. If we wish international cooperation to stop wars and to make more free and sure the intercourse of the peoples of the world, we can find the machinery by which it can be brought about. The whole difficulty now rests in prejudice and fear and suspicion. Why not in our fine American way rather say that the thing that should be done can be done. The engineers of our Army have adopted as a motto these words: 'It can't be done. Here it is.' We may find, gentlemen, that this motto is that of the peace conferees in Paris. They may return saying to all doubting Thomases, 'It can't be done. Here it is.'

"My appeal is that you then give to those who represent you the strength of your support and believe that the inventive mind of man has not ceased functioning. Let us believe that something will come out of the dreams that you and others have had.

"I can visualize President Wilson in his entrance to Paris as he goes down the Champs de Elysees with the cheering crowds and, crossing the bridge to Napoleon's tomb, he looks down upon the sarcophagus that holds the body of the greatest warrior of the world, who spread his power across Europe and dared to think of spreading it across the whole of the world between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

"The President goes out the door of that church down the boulevard until he comes to another monument, a monument that more nearly represents the spirit of our new day, the monument to Pasteur.

"Pasteur is sitting above, looking down. On three sides of the base are figures representing what he did for France, a boy with sheep and a man with oxen, a girl with grapes, indicating his cure of the phylloxera. Then in front is the main group, a girl wan, weak, exhausted, emaciated, has risen from her couch and is leaning against her mother, who is looking up into the eyes of Pasteur above with a look of ineffable gratitude as a figure of death slinks around the opposite side.

"Woodrow Wilson goes to Europe not as a conqueror. He goes for the healing of nations; he goes to add greater glory to the name of America."

SHIP WORKERS' STRIKE.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on yesterday the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] inserted into the RECORD two documents bearing the signature of Mr. Charles Piez, Director General of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, and referring to a strike at Seattle which, I think the Senator said, might be by this morning State wide in its operation.

I received a telegram this morning from one Morris D. Leehey from Seattle, a very long telegram, which I shall not read in its entirety, but which I shall hereafter ask to insert in the RECORD, that in some respects is the most remarkable document I have ever received.

This telegram, which probably has been duplicated to other Members of this body, embodies a statement published in a Seattle paper yesterday morning which informs me among other things that those now engaged in the strike at Seattle will feed the people; that they have 12 great kitchens which have been offered and from them food will be distributed by the provision trade at low cost to all; also that labor will care for the babies of the State; that milk-wagon drivers and laundry drivers are arranging plans for supplying milk to the babies, invalids, and so forth; and that the washing of hospital linen will be permitted; also that the stopping of cars will keep some people at home; also that the strike committee is arranging for guards; and while a few hot-headed enthusiasts complain that the strikers only should be fed and the general public left to endure severe discomfort, that is too inhumanitarian to be considered. Then follows a very strong and caustic criticism of the order of Mr. Piez, and the telegram concludes with the following warning:

> If the strike continues labor may feel led to avoid public suffering by reopening more and more activities under its own management; and that is why we say that we are starting on a road that leads no one knows where.

Mr. President, the announcement of Mr. Piez informs us that between the Government and these men are existing agreements and boards which have been recognized for the settlement of all further disputes which may arise during the operation of the shipyards. It also informs us, what people perhaps know generally, that the rates of wages paid at these yards are greater than have ever been paid before and fully commensurate with all the requirements due to the advanced cost of living, and so forth.

Mr. President, if I interpret this telegram correctly, it means that certain private organizations have taken over the governmental functions of the city of Seattle, and that they will administer them so that there will be as little suffering as possible consequent upon this very much-disturbed condition.

I imagine that if the packers of Chicago should for the purpose of advancing their prices announce that none of their supplies would be served to the public until their demands for advanced prices were recognized and conceded, and in the meantime they would feed the babies and take care of invalids and exercise general police regulations of the great city of Chicago, everyone would recognize in it the assumption by that great combination of governmental powers for the purpose of enforcing a private demand, and the indignation and protests of American citizens would be universal. I see no difference, Mr. President, between such conduct by such an organization and that which, if this telegram is interpreted correctly, is now prevailing in the city of Seattle.

If this strike is to become State wide, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] fears, I think it is safe to assume that State governmental functions will also be assumed, and for similar reasons. There, then, will not be an imperium in imperio, but a usurpation of governmental authority.

I think, therefore, that it is easy for any reflecting man to conclude where all this leads to. It leads either to the overthrow of established government in that section of the country, or it will tend to bring it into deserved disrespect and disrepute. It means, Mr. President, the experiment of bolshevism upon the northwest coast of America, and is preceded by a disregard of solemn agreements, which indicates that the binding force of compromise is not recognized in that section of the country.

Mr. President, I am by nature pessimistic and may take a gloomier view of conditions like this than the facts warrant; but they are another indication, to my mind, of the extremely sinister features of the social and industrial conditions in America, particularly in the great community centers of this country, and that it is the symptom or early manifestation of a situation the gravity of which we do not fully appreciate.

I have denounced, and I shall continue to denounce and to criticize all invasion of governmental prerogative and individual right by combinations of capital and finance. I recognize fully that the work of these combinations has caused, and are causing much of the resentment which finds expression in this manner; and I assert that the duty of the Government is to control and to curb the one, just as much as it is its duty to control and curb the other; but its duty in each direction is manifest. In this country, Mr. President, there is no need that any person or association of persons complaining of or suffering from abuses should resort to violence or lawlessness for the purpose of righting his or their complaint. This is a Government of the people. It furnishes ample machinery for the enforcement of right and for the redress of wrong through the agencies that machinery provides.

I believe that these immediate manifestations of coming trouble require that they be met with a promptitude and efficiency by the authorities charged with the duty of asserting the Government's power to safeguard life and property, and, as well, recognize and enforce the rights and remedy the wrongs of all.

A soup line or a bread line is, in any event, a deplorable thing in a country like this—we have had too many of them—but a soup line or a bread line provided by those who are engaged in disregarding or overriding the established authority and for those who are helpless because the Government will not perform its functions and take care that the laws are properly enforced is an anomaly in civilization everywhere, yet that seems to be the situation in Seattle. Mr. President, I have no doubt, at least, I hope, that the authorities of that great municipality and the executive of the State will be sufficiently appreciative of their duties at this time to vindicate the requirements and the majesty of republican government in that city and in the State if further developments require it.

Mr. President, America must be for Americans. By that term I do not mean those who are native born, but every man who believes that the institutions of his country are worth preserving and respects the reign of law and order must do his bit toward their preservation. The time has come, indeed it has been apparent to me for some time, when little, petty, partisan differences, the struggles for party advantage, must be subordinated to the supreme duty of vindicating the majesty of the laws and the Constitution of the United States and of the States. This Seattle affair is an object lesson of our disregard of that supreme duty, of our indifference to the welfare of the country, and of our proneness to fall back upon that old system of laissez faire which trusts to luck, with an indifference that will lead us to the precipice and which assumes that things will right themselves as they go along.

The time has come, it is here, Mr. President, when every man and woman in the United States who believes that this country is worth preserving and the best and freest in the world, and who feels that the war which we have just won is only a step in the right direction, should by their acts manifest their faith and stand by the country's institutions now, be the sacrifice what it may, when domestic insurrection is raising its head and threatening them more seriously than it has in the past.

I ask that the telegram from which I have read may be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., February 5, 1919.

Senator CHARLES H. THOMAS.
2300 Sixteenth Street, Washington, D. C.:

The following appeared on the first page of the Seattle Daily Union Record under date of Tuesday, February 4, 1919: "On Thursday at 10 a. m. there will be many cheering, and there will be some who fear; both these emotions are useful, but not too much of either. We are undertaking the most tremendous move ever made by labor in this country, a move which will lead no one knows where. We do not need hysteria; we need the iron march of labor. Labor will feed the people. Twelve great kitchens have been offered, and from them food will be distributed by the provision trades at low cost to all. Labor will care for the babies and the sick. The milk-wagon drivers and the laundry drivers are arranging plans for supplying milk to babies, invalids, and hospitals and taking care of the cleaning of linen for hospitals. Labor will preserve order. The strike committee is arranging for guards, and it is expected that the stopping of the cars will keep people at home. A few hot-headed enthusiasts have complained that strikers only should be fed and the general public left to endure severe discomfort. Aside from the inhumanitarian character of such suggestions, let them get this straight: Not the withdrawal of labor power but the power of the workers to manage will win this strike. What does Mr. Piez, of the Shipping Board care about the closing down of Seattle's shipyards, or even of all the industries of the Southwest? Will it not merely strengthen the yards at Hog Island, in which he is more interested? When the shipyard owners of Seattle were on the point of agreeing with the workers it was Mr. Piez who wired them that if they so agreed he would not let them have steel. Whether this is camouflage we have no means of knowing, but we do know that the great eastern combinations of capitalists could afford to offer privately to Mr. Skinner, Mr. Ames, and Mr. Duthie a few millions apiece in eastern shipyard stock rather than let the workers win the closing down of Seattle's industries, as a mere shutdown will not affect these eastern gentlemen much. They could let the whole Northwest go to pieces as far as money alone is concerned, but the closing down of the capitalistically controlled industries of Seattle while the workers organize to feed the people, to care for the babies and the sick, to preserve order—this will move them, for this looks too much like the taking over of power by the workers. Labor will not only shut down the industries, but labor will reopen under the management of the appropriate trades such activities as are needed to preserve public health and public peace. If the strike continues, labor may feel led to avoid public suffering by reopening more and more activities under its own management, and that is why we say that we are starting on a road that leads no one knows where."

MORRIS D. LEEHEY.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I shall not attempt to add to what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has so well said. He has expressed my sentiments much better than I could express them myself. I wish I could present a statement showing that conditions are not so bad in Seattle as the information which we have had would indicate; but I can not do so. I have not gathered the force of the telegram, from which the Senator from Colorado has read; but I know the gentleman who signed it. He is one of the leading attorneys of Seattle. I have a telegram, however, from which I desire to read a line or two, which I received this morning from Seattle, from a gentleman whom I know there, as follows:

Conservative opinion regards strike situation presents serious possibilities. Strikers openly advised to take what they want, and robbery becoming frequent. Believe Government should prepare to furnish troops without moment's delay, if requested.

I am not advised as to what steps the local or State authorities have taken. I believe they will act promptly and effectively to protect life and property and to see that peace and order are maintained. On yesterday, in presenting the statement of Mr. Piez, I stated that possibly by that time the strike had become State wide. I was mistaken as to the time. The time fixed for a State-wide strike was this morning at 10 o'clock. It may be that it has now been consummated. I wish I had full information to give to the Senate; but this is all that I have.

I have here two additional statements made by Mr. Piez. I do not believe that they add very much to the facts contained in the statements which I presented yesterday, but they do present some additional facts; and I think it well that we should have the full statements available.

Probably there may be another side to this question. If so, I shall be glad to present the same to the Senate. This is a statement, however, by the representative of the Government. The statement gives the agreement made by the men and the treatment that has been accorded by the Government to them. This controversy is really between them and the Government and not between the men and the shipyard owners. Mr. Piez points this out. I think, Mr. President, that I shall ask that these two statements may also be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statements are as follows:

Second statement by Charles Piez, Director General Emergency Fleet Corporation, Philadelphia, published as an advertisement in the Pacific coast newspapers.

The future of the shipbuilding industry lies with the men and the management. It is as much the problem of the one side as of the other. Increased output and lower costs can be secured by more intelligent direction and effort without sacrifice to either side.

But it can be done only by sympathetic and intelligent cooperation between the ship workers and the yard owners; never by strike and strife.

The strike is not only a breach of an agreement with the Government, but, with the future of the industry hanging in the balance, it is a colossal business mistake.

Congress authorized the President of the United States to spend $5,500,000,000 for the construction of ships, and the President selected the Emergency Fleet Corporation as his agent to carry out this program. The German submarine was at that time sinking vessels from four to five times as fast as English and American yards were producing them.

It was America's job to beat the submarine. Old shipyards were expanded and new yards were built on both the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts.

Contracts were placed for wood ships, composite ships, concrete ships, and steel ships—for any ship that would float, propel itself, and serve any kind of a useful purpose—because we were building a fleet for an emergency.

Wages were increased. Overtime and Sunday work were ordered. Carloads of necessary material were sent by express. Three hundred thousand men were added to the 50,000 ship workers, and the Government bore the expense of transporting them and training them. The Government paid these beginners high wages while they were acquiring skill and experience, for the Nation needed ships and was willing to pay the price.

The yards of the Pacific coast and the Great Lakes responded nobly, for they had been longer in the game and had a larger number of experienced ship workers to draw from. Even the new yards created since the war was declared began deliveries.

Then the armistice was declared and the shipbuilding situation was changed overnight. The Nation began figuring the costs.

And the Emergency Fleet Corporation was asked, "If you were building a lot of ships for an emergency, why don't you quit now that the emergency is over?

"Ships are costing the Government from two and a half to three times what they cost three years ago, and 50 per cent more than they can be bought in England at the present time. So quit building till the costs go down to where we can compete."

The Emergency Fleet Corporation thereupon took account of stock. It found that it was building more wood ships than it could use or sell, and so it canceled those that hadn't been begun.

It found that a merchant marine was something more than an aggregation of ships. It had to be a well-balanced fleet, that provided a certain proportion of fast passenger ships, of slower-going passenger and cargo carriers, and of many ships built especially for certain lines of trade.

And upon review of the numbers and types of vessels building under the emergency program, the Emergency Fleet Corporation decided to suspend work on a portion of it so, in case Congress decided to permit us to spend the money authorized, it could substitute more desirable and necessary types of ships for those suspended.

It is impossible to build a perfect "ready to use" merchant marine. Parts of it, at least, must be built to suit the needs of business that will develop through the effort and enterprise of the future.

It is necessary, therefore, to proceed more slowly than heretofore in the completion of the present program. Overtime and Sunday work and other expenses due to speed have therefore been cut out.

And we are calling on the managements and the ship workers to cooperate in such a way as to make high wages and low labor costs possible in the shipyards as it has been made possible in the automobile industry.

Let me cite three examples of how high wages and reduced output per man have increased the labor costs of vessels. One of the best producing yards on the Pacific coast shows that the average output per man is 70 per cent of that of two years ago, and the average rate of pay 70 per cent higher. This means a labor cost two and four-tenths times greater than two years ago.

Three Atlantic coast yards show labor costs from two and a half to three times higher than two years ago.

We can look for more output per man as the new men in the yards grow in experience, but in the meantime the future of the industry is in the balance.

Foreign orders can not be secured until costs go down, and even the Government can not continue shipbuilding indefinitely if every ship shows a heavy loss.

I am presenting the facts as they are before the United States Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and my advice to the men is: Go back to work and get together with the owners to see what can be done to put the shipyards in shape to compete for the world's business in shipbuilding.

CHARLES PIEZ,
Director General United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.

PHILADELPHIA, February 3, 1919.

Interview sent out for Pacific coast newspapers for publication Tuesday morning, February 4.

Charles Piez, Director General of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, to-day authorized the following statement in regard to the strike of the ship workers on the Pacific coast:

"In all fairness the men who have broken their obligations, under the Macy award, and walked out, demanding higher wages, should consider the economic menace imposed upon the Nation by their action.

"They should give consideration to the fact that the war is over and that the emergency to meet which the United States Government entered upon its great shipbuilding program is a thing of the past. Our shipbuilding enterprise was started and carried to this point under very unusual circumstances. Congress appropriated $3,500,000,000 to build a fleet of merchant vessels with which to meet the emergency of war, and the President designated the Emergency Fleet Corporation as his agent to carry out this construction program. At the time this enterprise was started the rate of sinkings by German submarines indicated that 13,000,000 tons of shipping would be sunk during the year 1917. This rate was not maintained, but, nevertheless, 9,000,000 tons of shipping actually were sunk during that year.

"America's job was to beat the German submarines by new construction. No money was spared. Every means for expanding the shipbuilding facilities of the country was utilized. The existing yards were expanded to the very limit of their capacities and vast new yards were constructed.

"We started out to build ships of all types. Steel, wood, composite, and concrete vessels were ordered constructed at the highest possible speed. We needed ships, and were not particular what type was constructed, so long as we got vessels that would float. Anything within reason to help meet the emergency was undertaken.

"To quicken completion of this gigantic task the Government met every demand for increased pay that was consistent with the rising cost of living, and gave the shipyard workers opportunity for additional earnings by encouraging overtime and Sunday work at increased rates. Speed, not economy, was the goal. When ship construction was delayed by lack of materials, we even resorted to the costly expedient of sending steel by express to the yards.

"In the extremity which the Nation faced we called for and obtained the services of 300,000 new men to bolster the force of 50,000 employed in the shipyards when this enterprise was started. The Government transported these men to their jobs at its own expense and undertook to train them in the crafts of shipbuilding. Not only that, but it paid them high wages while they were learning their trades.

"In the emergency of war all this expenditure, which would rightly be called extravagance in peace time, was not only justified but was absolutely imperative. It was just as much to the interest of the shipbuilder that the emergency fleet be constructed on time as to the interest of the Government at Washington. It was the Nation's effort, and every man, woman, and child in the country was benefited by our victory over the submarine.

"Remember, at the time of which I am speaking we were not building ships primarily for trade purposes but to meet a dreadful danger that was daily becoming more threatening. The lives of millions of soldiers were at stake and the outcome of the war largely depended upon our success in this emergency shipbuilding program.

"Now the conditions are changed. The war is over and we must turn our attention to the economic needs of the Nation. The necessities of war-time construction brought the labor cost per ship to such a high figure that to-day it represents a large part of the total cost of a steel vessel. This is not all due to the increases in rates of pay. It is due largely to a decline in labor efficiency, due to dilution. We are getting less to-day in return for the high wages paid to shipbuilders than we got at the comparatively low pay which obtained in the shipyards two years ago.

"In the most efficient shipyard in the Seattle district the average pay is 70 per cent more than it was two years ago and the output about 70 per cent of what it was two years ago. Wages have increased from 50 to 100 per cent in the shipyards of America, but there has not been a corresponding increase in output. This situation to-day threatens to throttle the shipbuilding industry. It must be corrected if the industry is to live.

"High wages are not at all inconsistent with low costs, and American labor always has been able to compete with the lower-paid foreign labor by making up through efficiency and quantity output the difference between the respective rates of pay. I have no doubt that American shipyard labor to-day can continue to compete with foreign shipworkers on the same basis. But to increase the wage scale before increased experience and improved output have been attained is sheer folly. It would result simply in forcing America out of the shipbuilding industry.

"Now that we have peace we must have assurance that the profits earned by a ship will pay for the cost of the ship. Otherwise, our merchant-marine project is doomed in advance to failure.

"The time has come to build larger and faster steamers for trade purposes. That is the problem of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. There rests upon the shipyard workers an obligation equally as important as that which the Emergency Fleet Corporation faces. It is the duty of these men—a duty they owe to themselves, to their communities, and to the Nation—to increase their average output and justify their present high wages by efficient work. To demand pay without such justification is wrong in principle and impossible in practice.

"I do not believe the present situation is hopeless, although the economic aspects of our program are most discouraging at this time. An extreme case may be cited in three Atlantic coast yards which show a labor cost from two and one-half to three times higher than two years ago. Now, the output of these yards will be greater when the new men become experienced. I have an unshakable faith in the ability of American labor to make good on this test provided they refuse to listen to radical counsel and abide by their own agreements. Meanwhile, frankly, the future of the whole industry is in the balance.

"To-day England, with lower labor cost and higher efficiency, can build ships much cheaper than we. We can not hope to obtain foreign orders until our costs go down.

"The future lies with the men and the managements. They must get together and cooperate for more intelligent direction and effort. This can be done without sacrifice to either side. I believe that sympathetic and intelligent cooperation between the yard workers and the yard owners will solve the problem, but it can not be solved by strikes and strife.

"The strike not only was a breach of faith with the Government, but in the light of present conditions in the shipbuilding industry was a colossal business blunder.

"CHARLES PIEZ."

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Washington how many of these men are on strike?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand that some thirty or forty thousand went on strike a short time ago.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is the strike confined to the shipbuilders?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; it has been spreading. The Central Labor Council of Seattle, I understand, has indorsed the strike, which I suppose would be termed a sympathetic strike; and several of the labor organizations have indorsed it. I am advised by a telegram which I received day before yesterday from a point outside of Seattle, as I construe the telegram, that a State-wide strike would be inaugurated this morning at 10 o'clock in sympathy, of course, with the shipyard strike.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That includes all the labor organizations, I presume?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I apprehend that it goes very far. I do not know, however, as I say, how far it goes. I have not received, I am sorry to say, very much detailed information from the State. In fact, about all I have had is what I read from the telegram this morning, except the telegrams which I received the other day, which simply stated that the situation was serious and that probably a State-wide strike would be inaugurated this morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

AMERICAN TROOPS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I desire to call up Senate resolution 411, introduced by me on January 13, 1919, and I ask the Chair to lay it before the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. I was not able to hear what the resolution is about.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It is Senate resolution 411, introduced on the 13th day of January, 1919, and reads as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the soldiers of the United States as soon as practicable should be withdrawn from Russia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That resolution is on the calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No, sir; I beg the pardon of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is on the table; I see. Is there any objection?

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry, if you please. May not a resolution of this sort that lies on the table be called up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent it may be taken up on the first day following, upon the request of the Senator who introduces it. If it lies here for a month or two, it can be taken up by unanimous consent, or, if unanimous consent is not granted, it can be taken up on motion.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then, Mr. President, I move that this particular resolution be taken up by the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator withhold that motion?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], is absent on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GAY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is detained on official business.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] on official business.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I wish to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is absent on official business. I wish also to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] are detained by illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. Is there further morning business?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I renew the motion that was made a brief period ago, that Senate resolution 411 be laid before the Senate and be taken up at present.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if the Senator desires to press that motion at this time, I shall have to ask for the yeas and nays upon the vote. At this particular time it would displace important matters which it was already arranged should be taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that the Senator from Utah objected.

Mr. KING. I did.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ruling that as soon as the hour of 1 o'clock shall have arrived——

Mr. LEWIS. Two o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is saying 1 o'clock—that until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived only by unanimous consent can anything other than the usual morning business be transacted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in the confusion I could not catch the ruling of the Chair. I understand the ruling of the Chair to be, however, that until 1 o'clock the motion is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Or until the morning business has been concluded. That is the plain rule. The Chair will refer to it, if desired. It is Rule VII, section 3:

> Until the morning business shall have been concluded and so announced from the chair, or until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, etc., shall be entertained.

It is only five minutes. We will get through by that time, I guess. Are there other bills or joint resolutions?

BRITISH EMBARGO ON IMPORTS.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration Senate resolution 438, which was under consideration when the morning hour closed on yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any further morning business? There being no further morning business, the Chair, understanding that the resolution went over yesterday without prejudice——

Mr. LODGE. It did.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is therefore laid before the Senate.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 438, introduced by Mr. WEEKS on the 4th instant, as follows:

> Whereas during the war with the Imperial German Government Great Britain placed prohibitions on the importation of certain American products; and
> Whereas the British Government has recently placed a prohibition on the importation of additional American products to take effect on and after March 1, 1919, which is detrimental to the employment at their full capacity of our manufacturing industries; and
> Whereas this action of the British Government is in direct conflict with point numbered 3 of the 14 points of peace proposed in the message of the President of the United States to the Congress of January 8, 1918: Therefore be it
> Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, what steps, if any, have been taken by the Department of State to request the British Government to modify or suspend such prohibition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. KING. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the third whereas in the preamble, which reads as follows:

> Whereas this action of the British Government is in direct conflict with point numbered 3 of the 14 points of peace proposed in the message of the President of the United States to the Congress of January 8, 1918.

Mr. WEEKS. While I may not object to striking out those words, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if he does not think that is a correct statement?

Mr. KING. No; I do not; quite the contrary. I do not think the action alleged to have been taken by Great Britain is at all in contravention of any of the points stated by President Wilson.

Mr. WEEKS. I am in direct disagreement with the Senator on that point. I thought it added to the force of the resolution, but I really do not care whether it goes out or stays in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the preamble proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just one word concerning the resolution. I express no opinion in regard to the criticisms made yesterday of Great Britain and the economic policy which it is alleged she is now pursuing. Neither do I express any opinion as to the wisdom or lack of wisdom in laying embargoes upon imports under the circumstances in which nations now find themselves. I am, though, somewhat surprised at the attitude taken by the Senator from Massachusetts. He belongs to that school of political thought which teaches that high tariffs and embargoes are the panacea for all our industrial and economic ills. He belongs to the party that has advocated for so many years not only a restrictive tariff, but too often a tariff alleged to be a protective tariff but which in practice was a prohibitive tariff; a party that has exhibited a vast amount of solicitude for rich manufacturers who were the beneficiaries of the protective system and who profited by exploiting labor and overcharging the American consumer.

If it be a fact that Great Britain has imposed an embargo upon certain products, she is merely giving to the world a practical illustration of the doctrine which forms the corner stone of Republicanism, and the application of which should prove a source of joy to the Senator from Massachusetts. Indeed, it is a sort of apothesis of the protective system. It constitutes a Chinese wall which restricts trade and commerce, but it is a wall around a country with which we seek commercial relations. Where is the "home market," then, which has served as the battle cry for so many years of the Republican Party? The Senator from Massachusetts is now crying out for the markets of Great Britain. His position shows the fallacy of Republican protectionism.

But, Mr. President, I do not care to be led into a discussion of that question at this time. My information is that Great Britain, like our own country, has, as the result of the war, an accumulation of products purchased or made for war purposes and which must be disposed of quickly in order to prevent immense losses to the Governments holding the same. These accumulations, it is believed, can be absorbed within a very short time by the domestic trade, and Great Britain, France, and other belligerent nations are desirous of having a short "breathing space," if I may employ this term, to absorb these products. Our Government is in the same situation, but not to the same extent as Great Britain or France.

But we have hundreds of millions of pounds of wool, as well as other products, raw and manufactured, which we would be glad to absorb.

Let me call attention to a question familiar to all Senators which should be considered when we are impliedly criticizing Great Britain for her temporary policy of laying embargoes.

A few months before the armistice there was considerable anxiety over the scarcity of potash, chrome, manganese, pyrites, and other metals. The people of the West were importuned by the officials of the War and Interior Departments, as well as the War Industries Board, to develop mines and produce these metals, so imperatively needed for war purposes. In various parts of the country the patriotic people responded to these pleas, and at great expense and confronted with almost insurmountable obstacles they succeeded in producing great quantities of these metals.

The Government purchased but a fraction of the same, and the producers now have on hand these accumulations. When the armistice was declared the Government ceased purchasing. Spain produces pyrites much cheaper than we mined them during the war. She is anxious to ship her surplus pyrites to the United States. Brazil has great quantities of manganese, and desires this market for her surplus.

The same situation prevails with respect to long-staple cotton, to which the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] referred a few days ago, and in a modified form the wool presents a similar condition. Last year the wool men of the West were importuned not to dispose of their lambs or their ewes but to carry them over until this year, notwithstanding the high prices which they could have obtained for the same. The reason given was that we must have wool in order to supply our soldiers and sailors with needed supplies. The wool men patriotically kept their flocks and herds, and purchased corn and cottonseed meal and hay at very high prices in order to keep the sheep during the winter. Moreover, they employed labor at high prices, and entered upon the winter campaign of caring for their sheep under the war-price standards.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. To add to the examples that the Senator from Utah has given I might mention the case of magnetite. In the State of Washington a great deposit of magnetite has been discovered, and in view of the representations of the administration and the purpose as a war industry large investments were made in the development of it. The people who made those investments are now prepared to furnish all the magnetite this country can consume. It is a material that is used in making fire-proof crucibles and linings of steel furnaces. The only competitor that they have is in the enemy country. The only other large deposit of magnetite which is capable of competing substantially with this industry in the State of Washington is a deposit in Austria.

Under all these circumstances, in view of the low wages paid in Austria compared with the high wages in the United States and the situation in which our investors find themselves, I am in favor of continuing in effect for a reasonable length of time, in order to enable this industry to get on its feet, the embargo which is now in effect against the importation of magnetite from foreign countries.

Mr. KING. The example which the Senator has just given could be multiplied almost without limit. Potash furnishes another familiar illustration of conditions existing here, which find some parallel to the situation in Great Britain. Before the war we imported large quantities of potash from Germany. We needed it badly, and a number of loyal Americans made heavy expenditures at the earnest request—indeed, I might say the command—of various agencies and instrumentalities of the Government and have produced a very large supply. Now other countries seek to export their potash to the United States and sell at prices which would be ruinous to American producers.

Mr. President, the question arises, Shall we undertake in some way to offer some temporary relief to the Government and to those who have thus responded to the Nation's call? Shall we do as it is claimed England is doing—lay a temporary embargo upon those articles which were produced under the conditions, or similar ones, just referred to—in order that the holders of the products, whether the Government or private individuals, shall have an opportunity to dispose of the same in the domestic market? There would seem to be some justice in this course, otherwise the Government might be called upon to meet the loans, though there is perhaps only a moral obligation upon its part to pay the same, charging them as a part of the war costs. However, I am not pressing that question now and am not expressing a settled view as to the course to be pursued.

Many petitions have been addressed to the War Trade Board, the War Industries Board, the War Department, and other agencies of the Government praying for relief from the burdens which those who patriotically served the Nation in the manner above referred to now resting upon them. The War Trade Board has been literally besieged and demands have been made that an embargo for a limited period be placed upon the products which I have mentioned as well as many more, in order that an opportunity might be afforded for the domestic market to absorb these accumulated supplies. During the war we placed embargoes upon many articles and established a licensing system which greatly interrupted free commerce. After the armistice the embargo was continued for some time, and even now, I am told, it is continued to cover a considerable number of articles, or at least there are such impediments to exports and imports that as to some products it can be said there is an embargo.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not also believe that it will be necessary for us to maintain an embargo against Canadian grains being sold upon our market that we may be able to uphold the price which we have guaranteed for our grains, and can we make any complaint against another nation for doing exactly what we are bound to do?

Mr. KING. Obviously that is true, unless the Government is willing to lose hundreds of millions of dollars.

So, Mr. President, there are many of our own citizens asking our own Government to do just what the Senator from Massachusetts complains that England, in a modified form, has done or has suggested should be done. England has stated that it is not a permanent policy with her; that her present restrictive policy is not permanent, but only to enable her to absorb the accumulated stocks. Now, it is to be noted that the embargo is general. It even extends to the dominions under the British flag. There is no discrimination against this or any nation.

England could not maintain as a permanent policy the one now temporarily employed. Her position forbids it. The United States is in a much better position than is England to resort to embargoes and trade restrictions. Her manufacturing plants would soon starve and want and ruin would come to the people of Great Britain if she erected tariff walls against imports, particularly certain raw materials and agricultural products. We are in a better position, industrially and otherwise, to maintain embargoes and high tariffs than Great Britain. Please keep in view the point that I am not urging embargoes and high tariffs nor any trade policy or the economic fallacies of prohibitive tariffs. I am only calling attention to the facts which have influenced England's transient policy, and also to the fact that we are pursuing a similar course.

If the War Trade Board refuses to continue this policy, Congress may feel constrained to aid, by embargoes similar to those employed by England, those who have accumulated the surplus products mentioned.

If we pass this resolution, it will be construed by some as a criticism of England for doing just what we have done and are imploring our Government to continue to do. It seems to me it would be imprudent and unwise, in view of our situation, in view of the attitude which our Government is taking, for us to pass the resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KING. I yield the floor. I do not want to take further time this morning.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have read the resolution, and I fail to find in it any criticism of the British Government. Will the Senator point out to me what language in the resolution he thinks is tantamount to a criticism of the British Government?

Mr. KING. When we ask our Department of State to request the British Government to modify or suspend such prohibition I think it might at this time be regarded as a complaint against England's policy, and an unwarranted interference with her domestic affairs. Of course, if conditions were normal, if we were not linked together as allies in a great war—and Senators will remember that technically we are still at war—a wholly different situation would then be presented. The State Department often takes up with foreign nations trade questions and seeks amelioration from trade conditions conceived to be harsh and oppressive to American manufacturers—exporters and importers.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Well——

Mr. KING. I am sure, if the Senator will pardon me, there are some among us who would regard it as an impertinence if in the Parliament of Great Britain there should be introduced a resolution of similar character inquiring of the Secretary of State or the Secretary of Commerce what steps had been taken with a view to ascertaining the policy of the American Government in respect to embargoes which had been placed upon the importation of articles into the United States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact—and I believe it is a fact—that last winter a department conducting international relations did request one nation to take up with another a question which concerns that nation, to see if it could not secure a modification of some contemplated action?

Mr. KING. I do not recall the matter; but the abnormal situation now, it seems to me, renders inapplicable the general rule to which the Senator has referred. We know that England is doing this only for a temporary purpose, as we are for a temporary purpose maintaining an embargo on a number of articles. It must be remembered that we laid an embargo first and are still continuing it in effect, to a limited extent at least, and I feel confident that insistent demands will be made by Americans for a more extensive application of the embargo until the present precarious industrial and economic condition has passed away.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to ask him how does he know that is true? Why not get this information? I do not understand that we express condemnation of what Great Britain is doing. We are simply seeking information.

Mr. KING. I know it, I think, from the same source the Senator from Massachusetts obtained his information—the public press—and that has stated very clearly, notably the New York Times, the purpose for which this was done and the limited object which it had in view.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator a question, if he will allow me, because it is just in line with what he has said. The resolution asks the Secretary of State to inform the Senate "what steps, if any, have been taken by the Department of State to request the British Government to modify or suspend such prohibition." If that means anything, it means that we ought to ask Great Britain to suspend such prohibition. It is an invitation, at least, to do it. I think the Senator is absolutely right when he says that it is a matter of impertinence, and we would regard it as such if Great Britain should so speak of any tariff levy that we might make.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it is not so much the expression of views in the resolution that might be claimed to be disagreeable, not to say offensive, but the implication is unfortunate, in my judgment, and the discussion that has taken place on the resolution has been still more unfortunate. The Senator from Utah referred to an editorial in the New York Times. I do not know whether he mentioned it in detail or not.

Mr. KING. No; I did not.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have before me an editorial in the New York Times of February 3 which seems to be quite pertinent, and especially the portion of it which I will read:

The guardians of American interests who discover enmity in the embargo placed on our exports at the week end are under equal necessity to remark the friendship shown in the removal of that embargo in November. The fire eaters in the commercial war should remark that the embargo placed on our goods was also placed on Canadian goods, and for the same reason. England must have time to arrange payments for the goods dumped upon her under her liberality toward trade; it is troublesome to maintain the rate of exchange at the figure which is desirable in the interest of all.

I think we must recognize conditions over there as well as here.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I do not know that I am not willing to recognize conditions in Great Britain. I do not know enough about this matter to state whether I do or not. I did not obtain my information from the public press about it, but I obtained it from those whose industries were being affected by it. While I knew there were some people in this country who were not giving any attention to our own domestic affairs or the reasonable promotion of our interests, or the interests of our people, I am surprised to see Senators rise in their places on this floor and urge that we give no attention to our industries; that we make no provision for the employment of our idle labor; or that we in every way neglect those matters which we are in Washington to represent.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WEEKS. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. KING. I want to ask the Senator if in the criticism which he has just made he was leveling those remarks at anything submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] or myself, because the question of idle labor was not suggested, and the question of failing to look after our domestic interests was certainly not suggested. On the contrary, I was insisting that we were looking after our domestic interests, and the policy of the Senator from Massachusetts was a negation of that policy.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the question of idle labor was not mentioned, but the question of idle labor is involved. If we are to have an embargo placed upon the products of our manufacturing industries, it is going to lessen to that extent the amount of work our people can do in this country, and Senators will find that there will be a demand, and a positive demand, in my judgment, from the industries in their own States that they be not impaired by any such action.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator take the position that if the Government of Great Britain, in the management of its own affairs, tries to place an embargo upon importations into that country, and that embargo applies to all the world alike, and there is no discrimination against the United States——

Mr. WEEKS. I know it. I so stated yesterday.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator feel that it is proper for the Government of the United States to question the action of Great Britain in that regard?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I think it proper for the State Department to inform the Senate what information it has on that subject, and whether it has contemplated taking any action which will modify this condition.

Mr. President, I want to say one word further in reference to a comment made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. He said the Senator from Massachusetts is a member of a party which advocates embargoes and prohibitive tariffs, and all that sort of thing. I wish to say that I never voted for or advocated an embargo or never voted for or advocated a prohibitive tariff; but I want to hold out this warning signal to the Senator from Utah and all other Senators. Under the conditions which prevail in this country the probabilities are that every patriotic man will find it necessary, in order to protect our labor, to vote for a higher tariff than the Republican Party has ever advocated. It is in sight, and the time has come when we have got to protect our domestic interests; and, unless we do, we are going to have a continuance of matters that are brought to the attention of the Senate every morning—of men out of work, of strikes, and disorders of various kinds. We have got to give that matter our first attention, and one of the actions which may properly be taken is to obtain this information from the State Department.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts. The resolution he asks us to pass does not criticize the action of Great Britain. It does not condemn it. It is a resolution which seeks information.

Now, a most important interference with our commerce has taken place by the embargo placed upon us by Great Britain. It may be all right; when we hear the facts we may conclude that it is in line with action we ourselves will take to protect some of our industries; but so important an act, reaching to such an extent against our industries, ought not to pass unstudied; it ought not to pass without official consideration. It may be that we will place an embargo on Canadian wheat. Does anyone doubt, if we do so, that Great Britain would inquire about it? No important act takes place here affecting the commerce of Great Britain that is not very carefully considered by her Government.

Mr. President, I like the idea of our watching the business interests of our country. I believe it is our duty to study not only our industries resulting from manufacture but the products of our soil; I believe it is our duty to watch our foreign markets; and I am glad to join the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] in supporting a resolution indicating the duty on the part of the Senate at least to ask for information with reference to the serious interference with our foreign markets. There are markets that I am interested in, or in which my immediate constituents are interested, which are closed. My views upon that subject are not limited to my immediate constituents, although I may know more about their interests than I do of those of New England. I readily support a resolution looking to an inquiry with reference to the industries of New England as to those of any other part of the country. I believe we should realize that, if our foreign commerce is to be properly guarded, it must require from us and from the administration thoughtful and constant attention.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if I fancied from the reading of the resolution now before the Senate that it could even be considered by the Government of Great Britain as a criticism of this Government upon its purely internal policy, or a criticism by the Senate upon an act of Great Britain without even investigation, however much it might be presumed to be against our interests, I would move to lay the resolution on the table and would do all I could to see that success followed my motion.

But, Mr. President, I am impelled to the view that what the eminent Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has said and what the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has said will either be justified completely or to their own minds disclosed to be without foundation when they have heard from the Secretary of State, in response to the resolution, just what are the facts.

I take it, sir, that the resolution has no other purpose than to ask of our own Secretary of State as to any steps taken by that department as to the two things, either the modification or the suspension of any part of the embargo. If nothing has been done, that is the response; if anything has been done, then a description of it; that is the response.

Mr. President, I wish for myself to say that I trust that in these discussions no national prejudices shall ever cloud the fair presentation of an economic question. Britain has a right to her economic policy, and no ancient prejudices or, indeed, present political grievances, if such existed, should be urged in this body to wrongly color or to influence wrongful accusation against her. She has a right to whatever policy she wishes to undertake. We have a right to whatever policy we shall undertake. So, as the resolution merely inquires of our Secretary of State for information for the benefit of the body, I am unable to see that the strictures of the eminent Senators are appropriate. It is only because it is an inquiry addressed to our own Government for information that I give it my support.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just a word. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] yesterday regarded the action of Great Britain in laying a temporary embargo as of great importance; indeed, as I understood him, he felt that perhaps this was the beginning of a trade war, and in the closing sentence of the Senator's speech he practically told Great Britain to beware of the War of 1812. He evidently regarded the conduct of Great Britain as provocative of criticism, and possibly as the beginning of an economic war and fierce rivalry between the two nations; and possibly, because of the warning note that he sounded, he regarded the action of Great Britain in laying this embargo as a grievance that might result in either trade wars or possibly in a more serious controversy. Certainly if England so intends this policy, then she might regard our questioning her policy as a criticism, in view of the fact that we began the practice and are not yet free from it. However, I have no such idea concerning England's attitude toward the United States. She wants the most cordial and friendly relations with this Government and with the American people. She expects to be and will continue to be our most valued foreign purchaser.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] adjures us to look after our business interests and domestic affairs. In his earnest appeal we all join. It is important that every possible course be adopted to increase our trade and commerce. Our Nation can not live only for herself. Important as is our home market, we must find in the world around us markets for billions of dollars of products annually. Our prosperity depends upon this.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if this resolution only inquired for information, as seems to be assumed by those who have supported it, possibly there would be no serious objection to it; but the resolution goes much further than that. It reads:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, what steps, if any, have been taken by the Department of State to request the British Government to modify or suspend such prohibition.

That is not a request for information as to the facts, as to the conditions upon which this embargo was based, but it is a request for information as to what action has been taken by the Secretary of State to carry out a policy in opposition to the policy which has been decreed by Great Britain in this matter.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Washington that if no action has been taken the reply would be to that effect, and if some action has been taken it would outline the course which the State Department had followed in the matter. It does not commit the Senate to anything, but it merely asks for information as to what the State Department has done, if anything, with relation to the embargo which is being placed upon American and other products.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I think it would be much more dignified, if I may use that word, for the Senate to announce some policy of its own in a matter of this kind, instead of merely seeking to ascertain whether the Secretary of State has undertaken to mark out a policy for the American Government in opposition to the deliberate action of the Government of Great Britain in a matter so important as an embargo undoubtedly is.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that it would be a difficult matter for us to adopt a policy which Congress should follow until we have all the facts relating to the case? Presumably we may get some facts from the State Department on which we can base a policy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. As I understand, the resolution contains an implication that the Secretary of State ought to have taken some action of this kind. That necessarily would be implied.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. Does the Senator wish to imply that there would be any impropriety in the Secretary of State taking such action or making an inquiry of the British Government to that effect?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is a matter of opinion, a matter of policy. In answer to the Senator I will say that my own personal opinion is that it would be a mistaken policy for the Secretary of State to make such inquiries, unless he is in possession of information that has not been presented to the Senate as to the nature of the embargo. The mere fact that Great Britain has laid an embargo upon certain importations certainly is not sufficient ground for the Government of the United States to put itself in opposition to that policy and to take official action to oppose a policy which Great Britain has a perfect right to adopt, and which she has applied to all the world without discrimination.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if that is so, then the unbroken policy of the State Department has been improper and groundless, because it has been the continuous policy of the State Department, as I know from personal experience, to keep watch over all governmental action of the kind here described, and to instruct our diplomatic representatives in the various foreign capitals to take immediate steps in protestation against governmental action which may be detrimental to the extension of our foreign trade. I happen to have passed through some episodes of that kind myself, where, by the interposition of the State Department, I was instructed not only to make representations at the foreign office, but to use minatory language toward the government to which I was accredited in cases exactly like this. The archives of the State Department and the archives of every diplomatic commission of the United States in foreign countries are full of instances of that kind, and the unbroken policy of the State Department has been certainly to take immediate action in such cases. The resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts simply asks what has been done under the policy which we know to have existed for a long time in the State Department.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I thought the Senator rose merely to ask a question. I might comment on the fact that the case which he has in mind, if I am correctly informed, where the Senator, at that time occupying a diplomatic position under the Government, was instructed to use minatory language, was the case of a small, weak country.

The Senator was never instructed to use minatory language toward a great power such as Great Britain. That has been quite a marked line of demarcation in the foreign policy, I may say in the recent years, during the present administration, of the Government of the United States. We pursue quite a different policy toward Costa Rica and Haiti from the policy we followed upon the sinking of the Lusitania by the German Empire. There is quite a marked distinction; because when the Senator who now graces a seat in this body from the State of New Hampshire was minister to Greece he was instructed to use minatory language on account of some action which Greece had taken—which I presume it was entirely within the rights of Greece to take—I am somewhat surprised to note the suggestion apparently implied in his remarks that the Secretary of State would be exercising a wise discretion to use minatory language in this case toward the Empire of Great Britain.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the mere fact that the policy of using minatory language was applied to a small government does not change the principle of the thing at all. The fact is that the policy of the State Department has been to protest—I suppose the instructions to its diplomatic representatives were couched in different terms, according to the conditions at the seat of government where the representative was a resident—but the policy and the practice have remained exactly the same, that wherever action was taken in a legislative body or by ministerial decree which threatened the market for American products our diplomatic representatives have been instructed to make representations; and in many cases it will be found from a reading of the dispatches that the diplomatic representatives did not wait for instructions, but, knowing that to be the policy of the State Department, have made their representations to the foreign office in advance of any instructions from Washington. The resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts, as I gather its sense, merely asks what has been done.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I decline to yield to the Senator now for a speech.

Mr. MOSES. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will take my seat in just a moment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Washington a question?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not understand the word which the Senator used. Is it "miniature" language, or what is it? I did not quite catch it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It sounds very much like that word. I was only quoting the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, does the Senator understand what the word means? I am at a loss to know.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think a great deal of "miniature" language has been used. I think the Senator knows what that means. It means just the opposite, however, of what the Senator from New Hampshire undoubtedly described by the word "minatory."

There is not any doubt at all, Mr. President, that the President of the United States has, in the absence of legislation, the initiative in conducting the foreign affairs of the country, and the Secretary of State is exercising part of the powers that are vested by the Constitution in the executive branch of the Government. Under him are the ambassadors, the ministers, and consular agents; but the question of the mere propriety or legality of an action is a very different thing from the question of the wisdom of it or the propriety of it, if you use the word "propriety" in the sense of whether or not it is a wise policy.

I want to say in regard to the action of Great Britain and of France, which I have heard criticized a good deal in recent weeks in several different particulars, that in cases where they were exercising that prerogative of a people to take care of their own interests, I have rather admired them for it, even in cases where the action was more or less detrimental to certain interests in the United States. It is highly desirable, also, that we should protect our interests. I admire Great Britain for taking the step if it tends to protect her business interests. It might be that when we know what the facts are, after we have had an opportunity to examine the case, the Senate would decide that the United States would be justified in requesting Great Britain to modify her attitude, because of its injurious effects upon the industries of the United States. But I do not think we ought to take such action, either expressly or by implication, unless we are sure that we are justified in doing it, and that the interests involved are of sufficient importance to cause us to question for a moment such steps as Great Britain has seen fit to take within her legal rights, without discrimination against the United States, to foster her interests. That is especially true because of the situation in which Great Britain finds herself at the end of a four years' struggle for her existence, when her resources have been taxed to the utmost; when her industries have been absorbed in the manufacture of munitions, have been dislocated, and in many instances destroyed; when her economic situation has been revolutionized; when supplies have been accumulated; and when new means for readjusting industrial life may be found necessary.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WEEKS. I think I have something of the same sentiment with regard to what Great Britain is trying to do in protecting the interests of her own people; and it is the unanimous sentiment of the business interests of Great Britain that such a course should be taken. I have not seen a single statement for months which has not been along that line.

If the Senator will pardon me for just a minute, I want to read—for I have in my hands an account of the meeting of the Bradford Dyers' Association—something that was stated two years ago by the president of that association in connection with the trade conditions. He says:

> In conclusion, may I be permitted to say that in my opinion the greatest hope for the future lies in our ceasing to act in the interests of party or class, and in the recognition that after the war we should be ready and determined to judge every question from the standpoint of imperial interests only. The problems which will confront us after the war are such as seem to demand a government representative of all parties and classes, devoting its attention almost entirely to the effective organization of all the resources of the Empire.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think Great Britain is justified in such action as that; and, looking upon her conduct in as impartial a spirit as possible, I admire the wisdom of her government in taking such steps to enable her industries to recuperate from the exhaustion of this war. I am informed that both France and Great Britain have been prudent and diligent during the war in preparing for the continuation of their foreign trade and commerce and their domestic industry at the close of the war. In that respect they compare very favorably with the United States; and the comparison is to the disadvantage of the United States, because we have neglected what they have diligently sought.

I noticed a few days ago that representatives of the administration, representatives of the Federal Trade Commission, were speaking in different parts of the country urging the American people not to seek to acquire foreign trade in competition with France and Great Britain, saying that it would be taking advantage of our allies in their exhaustion after this great war; that we ought not to interfere with the foreign trade of our competitors. From other sources in the administration, from the highest sources, we have seen statements that the United States ought not to profit by this war; that we ought not to come out of the war with any advantage—an altruism that is almost superhuman—the argument that although we have been forced into a great war by Germany, although we have exhausted our resources in the defense of our institutions and of the lives and rights of American citizens, though we are right and our enemy wrong, we should not ask for reparation or for indemnities. Our allies are asking for them; but those who are in control of the American Government are set in their policy that the United States, which shared the expense and the sacrifices, shall ask for no indemnity.

Mr. President, there is no idealism that is worthy of the name, there is no spiritual development that is admirable, that has not its foundation in material things. You can not develop the mind and the morals of a man unless he has some of the material necessities and comforts of life. You have to minister to the physical prosperity and well-being of a nation in order to build upon that foundation any sort of spiritual exaltation, or this ideal spirit of altruism that now seems to govern our affairs. We ought to look out for our interests. France and Great Britain are justified in looking out for theirs, and I think that before we pass this resolution, asking the Secretary of State if he has protested against this embargo, we ought to inquire into the conditions and satisfy ourselves whether he would be justified, under the circumstances, in interfering with this action of Great Britain in the management of her own affairs.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I see no reason why we should not ask for the information as proposed in this resolution; and, so far as I am concerned, I am going to support it.

I am only going to speak because of some observations made by Senators who apparently fear that the passage of this resolution might militate against some contemplated action on the part of the Government hereafter that they may think would be desirable to protect the potash manufacturers and the wheat growers.

It seems to me that it is about time that it is understood in the United States of America that the Government is not going to guarantee a price of $2.26 a bushel for the entire wheat crop of 1919, when the winter crop had not all been planted to the date the armistice was signed, and of spring wheat one-half the entire crop has not been planted yet, and when neither of the crops will be harvested under the same conditions that existed when this guaranty was proposed, before the war ended.

I am not at all in favor of these embargoes and restrictions talked about here, and that are expected, on the part of the Government, to protect one part of the people of the United States at the expense of all who must eat in this country of ours; I am not in favor of such a policy at all. If these potash manufacturers, who have been spoken of here as having made potash at the request of the Government at a great loss to themselves, were encouraged by the Government to do that under such conditions that the Government ought to pay them for any loss they may sustain, it is well to have the Government do it, and not to levy a burden upon all who must use potash in production of crops in this country in order that it may be done; and the same thing is true about this wheat crop. Not half of it has been planted yet, and it will all be harvested under entirely different conditions than those existing at the first planting even, and the Government ought not to be expected, under such conditions, to make all the people who must eat pay prices of this sort hereafter for the benefit of wheat growers.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to inquire what disposition was made of the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The third section of the preamble, the Chair is informed, was stricken out.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should not have been greatly surprised if I had heard the voice of a free trader strongly in support of this resolution; but I confess it does surprise me somewhat to find a dyed-in-the-wool protectionist offering a resolution that does, no matter how much we may put on the soft pedal, criticize another Government for adopting a policy of protection to its own citizens.

Whatever you can say of this resolution, it is a resolution inviting the Secretary of State to inquire for a purpose, and that purpose is to request the British Government to modify or suspend this prohibition. What right has the legislative assembly or Congress or Parliament of one country to request of another country that it modify its own domestic policy with reference to importations? What would be the sentiment of the United States Congress if the British Parliament should introduce and pass a resolution protesting against a tariff levied by the American Congress? We would resent it, and we would resent it, I think, truthfully and earnestly.

If the Senator from Massachusetts should simply inquire of the Secretary of State what steps he had taken to meet any condition that was against our interests, or what inquiry he had made, it would present an entirely different question; but this, Mr. President, is not an inquiry for the purpose of determining what Great Britain has done or purposes to do. It is simply an inquiry to determine why we have not protested against the action of the British Government. For my part I do not consider it a very appropriate thing to do, especially in the face of the fact that we as Republicans, we as protectionists, are in favor of levying such a prohibitive tariff as will enable the American producer to produce anything that can be produced in the United States as against any foreign competition.

We have seen the prices of dyestuffs mount some thousand per cent in a very few months on account of this war. We are now starting in this country the manufacture of dyestuffs to supply the American manufacturer of cotton and silken fabrics. I hope that we will put a duty on dyestuffs sufficiently large to enable the American producer to get on his feet; and I would not care, Mr. President, if it went so far as to operate as an absolute prohibition of any importation.

Again, for the purpose of prosecuting our war, which we expected in all probability might last over another year, and to secure food for ourselves and our allies, we voted, by a very large majority, at least, that we would fix the price of bread and flour for the next year considerably above the market price. Now, there is just one way in which we can maintain that. I do not care whether we maintain it by a direct congressional embargo or under the system of a license now adopted. We will keep out Australian wheat, we will keep out Canadian wheat, during the year 1919. Then why may we not expect a protest from Canada against such an embargo? Would the Canadian Parliament for a moment think of questioning our right to place an embargo, under the conditions, against Canadian grain?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Here is a little country, one-third the size of the State of Minnesota, with 35,000,000 people to take care of. She must import everything upon which she places the hand of labor from every section of the earth, and then reexport it again from Great Britain. With her very life depending upon her ability to manufacture and to give work to her labor, we criticize her; and I am not saying that so much in reference to the Senator's resolution as in reference to the remarks which were made yesterday, in which we threatened that she would meet the spirit of 1812 if she dared to place an embargo against the importation of articles into Great Britain, while she must do so in order to protect her own citizens.

I for one, Mr. President, protest against our criticizing any nation that is doing exactly the same thing that we have been doing in the past and that we shall be compelled to do in the future.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McCUMBER. Pardon me; I yield to the Senator from Illinois, who first rose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to inquire if the Senator does not think the billion and a half recommended by the late Secretary of the Treasury to establish credits for the purchase of raw materials might not have prompted a spirit of gratitude on the part of Great Britain?

Mr. McCUMBER. The question answers itself. I yield now to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know that finally I will be in a position to criticize Great Britain for the action which has been taken, but the Senator from North Dakota very truly says they are trying to protect their industries and keep their people employed. I said two or three times that very action prevents us from employing our people in this country. When I see men walking the streets in the Massachusetts shoe cities because the trade with Europe has been cut off, the million dollars of business we were doing in that line with Great Britain was stopped suddenly two years ago, and the embargo has not been removed, I say that I prefer, if one is necessary, to see the workmen of Great Britain walking the streets rather than the workmen in this country.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me answer the Senator. When we put 60, 70, and 100 per cent duty on woolen goods we did not ask the question whether as a result of that it would compel British workmen to walk the streets. We were looking after American interests. I agree with the Senator. We are both good protectionists. I believe in protecting our people, but I do not believe in criticizing another country for doing exactly the same thing that we are doing.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator from North Dakota is far too keen a man not to see the difference between prohibition and protection. This embargo is prohibition. It stops all trade.

Mr. McCUMBER. So an embargo against wheat will be a prohibition. It will stop all importations of wheat and we have got to stop it all from coming into this country?

Mr. REED. Why?

Mr. McCUMBER. Simply because we have so provided in our law, as a war measure.

Mr. REED. That wheat shall not be shipped in?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Where is that clause in the law?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will tell the Senator where the clause is. We have done this: We have provided that we will fix the price——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 13308.

Mr. WEEKS. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may go over without prejudice.

Mr. POMERENE. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the resolution will go to the calendar.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. When the Senate adjourned yesterday evening we were considering an amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to the committee amendment inserting section 6. That amendment is now before the Senate, I understand.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads will listen to me for a moment, that amendment was offered for printing and to lie on the table. I should like to offer an amendment to section 6, which has been printed for several days, if the Senator does not object at this time. I do not think there is any serious objection to the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection in the world to the amendment. I think it is a very proper one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 6, page 37, line 13, after the word "act" insert the following proviso:

Provided, That where the constitution of any State prohibits the same from engaging upon internal improvements, or from contracting public debts for extraordinary purposes in an amount sufficient to meet the monetary requirements of the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, or restricts annual tax levies for the purpose of constructing and improving roads and bridges, and where a constitutional alteration or amendment to overcome either or all of such prohibitions must be submitted to a referendum at a general election, the sum to which such State is entitled under the method of apportionment provided in the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, shall be withdrawn by the Secretary of the Treasury from the principal fund appropriated by the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, upon receipt of the certification of the governor of such State to the existence of either or all of said prohibitions, and such sum shall be carried by the Secretary of the Treasury as a separate fund for future disbursement as hereinafter provided: Provided further, That when, by referendum, the constitutional alterations or amendments necessary to the enjoyment of the sum so withdrawn have been approved and ratified by any State, the Secretary of the Treasury, upon receipt of certification from the governor of such State to such effect, shall immediately make available to such State, for the purposes set forth in the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, the sum withdrawn as hereinbefore provided: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be deemed to prevent any State from receiving such portion of said principal sum as is available under its existing constitution and laws.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I have submitted this amendment to the chairman and several members of the committee, and I am informed by the members of the committee that it is entirely satisfactory. There are two or three States, I am informed by the road department, which have a provision in their constitutions, some of which are now being amended, which would prohibit them from taking advantage of the full amount of this appropriation, and the object is simply that so much thereof as can not be taken advantage of immediately shall be set aside by the Treasury and not paid over to the State until the constitutions are amended. That is the condition in my own State, where a constitutional amendment is being submitted at this time. I understand the chairman has no objection to this amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think it is a proper amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. It can not be adopted at present, because the amendment I offered to the amendment must be disposed of first.

Mr. KELLOGG. I understood that the amendment of the committee is subject to amendment now.

Mr. SWANSON. The amendment I offered yesterday has not been disposed of.

Mr. KELLOGG. I offered this amendment before the Senator from Virginia offered his amendment, and it has been lying on the table.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me? This amendment is to the same section as the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to the amendment. I think it ought to be adopted.

Mr. KELLOGG The Senator does not object to its being considered at this time?

Mr. SWANSON. But when the Senate adjourned yesterday my amendment was under consideration and it should be disposed of. I think there is no objection to my amendment, which was under consideration when the Senate adjourned, and it should be disposed of first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the parliamentary situation is that the amendment of the Senator from Virginia was pending at the time the Senate adjourned, and therefore it is in order at this time.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then I offer this as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to it.

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to ask the Senator whether the language of his amendment would not prevent a State from receiving any of this money where under its constitution it would be entitled to receive and expend a portion of it, but not to the amount that is provided in the bill?

Mr. KELLOGG. No; I have added a proviso. A proviso at the end takes care of that. The State may receive any sum which it can under its constitution allow.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator offers his amendment, I understand, to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia. That would be an amendment in the third degree. The amendment of the Senator from Virginia is an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask that the amendment to the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 15, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following words:

Provided, That so much of the appropriation apportioned to any State under the said act approved July 11, 1916, or under this section, for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available for expenditure in that State until the close of the second fiscal year succeeding the close of the fiscal year for which such apportionment was made, except that amounts apportioned for any fiscal year to any State which has not a State highway department shall be available for expenditure in that State until the close of the third fiscal year succeeding the close of the fiscal year for which such apportionment was made.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am opposed to this amendment. I do not think it ought to be adopted. The only justification that we have for making these tremendous appropriations for roads at this time is to take care of unemployment that exists or may exist throughout the country. This amendment changes the existing law in this respect. The present law provides that if the amount allotted to a State is not expended by the State during the year for which it is allotted it may be carried into the next fiscal year. In other words, it gives a State two years in which to expend the money that is allotted to it under the law. The pending amendment proposes to extend that one year and give them three years in which to expend this money.

Mr. President, what is the situation before us? In view of the condition of the Treasury, it seems so plain that Congress ought not to be making appropriations for unnecessary improvements, desirable though they may be, unless it be for the purpose of taking care of unemployment. I believe that is necessary. I believe an appropriation for roads is one of the best means we can use for taking care of this unemployment. But, Mr. President, this appropriation ought not to be considered as a grab bag by each State to get its share, and if it does not use it now, when unemployment exists, that it may use it two or three years later.

It ought to be treated as an unemployment question. That is not a local question. That is a national question. If we have 500,000 unemployed men walking the streets in three States like Illinois, New York, and Pennsylvania, that is not a local question to those three States. The unemployment of that half-million men affects every State in the Union, and we ought to take care of that unemployment in some such way as this. So I am in favor of appropriating $100,000,000, $125,000,000, or $200,000,000, if necessary, for the purpose of taking care of this unemployment and at the same time receiving a benefit in the way of improved roads in this country.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am impressed by what the Senator from Wisconsin says about the necessity for taking care of unemployment. May I ask him to give me his opinion of the proviso at the end of this section, to which it is now sought to add a second proviso? I have reference to the proviso which provides that preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines. Is it not a fact that if there were 500,000 men who are now unemployed, with the exception of a small percentage they are soldiers, sailors, and marines?

Mr. LENROOT. I think that is true. I do not think the proviso, so far as unemployment is concerned, will be very material, although I see no harm in it. I take it for granted that, in so far as employment can be provided, private industry is going to give preference to our returned soldiers and sailors. But, aside from the question of providing employment, how can these appropriations be justified?

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] said yesterday, when he was asked where we would get the money to pay these vast appropriations, "We will take it out of the profiteers." I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that in the revenue bill, the conference report of which will soon be presented, the Democratic side of this aisle unanimously voted to reduce for 1920 the excess-profits tax, thereby reducing the revenue $2,000,000,000. I wish to call the attention of that side of the aisle to the fact that while the provisions they have made for 1920 will bring only a revenue of $4,000,000,000, the estimates made now, not including appropriations of this character for 1920, amount to $8,000,000,000.

Where are we going to get the money? Are we going to continue to vote bond issues in time of peace? If not, where is the money coming from? The eminent chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was asked that question the other day, and this was his reply:

Mr. KING. Has the committee having this bill in charge taken into account the ways and means by which the revenue is to be obtained to meet these rapidly increasing expenditures?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the business of the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate. They will attend to that.

According to the Senator's idea there is no responsibility upon Senators and Members of Congress who are not members of the Finance Committee or the Committee on Ways and Means with reference to the expenditures of the Government; "they will attend to that."

Mr. President, one of the reasons why the party on that side of the aisle will be in the minority instead of the majority soon is just because of that attitude upon their part, not only now but in the past, treating the United States Treasury as one of boundless resource, seeking to get all the dollars they can get for their own States, irrespective of the national needs or of the condition of the Treasury as a whole.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I am in full sympathy with the Senator's criticism, but I am unable to perceive any difference, either of opinion or conduct, on this question on either side of the Chamber.

Mr. LENROOT. There is this difference, I may say, and I called attention to it a moment ago: While that side of the aisle is continuing and proposing tremendous appropriations, that side of the aisle is attempting to fix a fiscal policy for 1920 reducing the revenues of the Government $2.000,000,000. That side of the aisle is responsible for that and not this side.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true, Mr. President. This side of the aisle at present is in charge of such legislation. Nevertheless, I believe the amount of revenue which we propose to raise by that bill is just as much as the business and producing energies of the country now can stand; and I do not believe after the Senator's party comes into power it will augment the amount of revenue very much by additional revenue bills.

I may also say that members of the Finance Committee representing the other side of the Chamber, where there was no partisanship, so far as the discussion of items of the bill was concerned, were quite as willing to consider and act upon the proposed reductions as members upon this side.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very glad the Senator from Colorado does not at all agree with the chairman of the committee that we may go on and make these endless appropriations and trust to the Finance Committee of the Senate to find the revenue.

Mr. THOMAS. I said so the other day—I think Saturday morning—and expressed myself along that line as well as I could.

Mr. LENROOT. I am fully in accord with what the Senator from Colorado stated the other day.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if American industry is at such a low ebb that it can not give employment to the hundreds of thousands of men, how that American industry, through an income tax or any other kind of tax, is going to pay for the enormous additional expense of cutting down hills and digging up trees by the roots?

Mr. LENROOT. I can not answer the question. The Senator should address his question to some one upon the other side of the aisle, who is taking the position that we can make appropriations in unlimited amounts and still the revenue in some way will be forthcoming to meet them.

I wish to say again that I believe it is necessary to provide for unemployment during the next year. I believe that the improvement of roads is one of the best means which can be found to take care of that unemployment, because in the building of roads we have as high a percentage of labor cost as in any other public work in which we might engage.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator does he not think there is a much better way, and that is to take such action as will put our industries on a prosperous course and allow the industries to earn money and to give the employment?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from North Dakota knows even much better than I that between now and the 4th of March it will be impossible for Congress to legislate in any such way as that. He knows it will not be done, and the fact that there ought to be legislation, in which I fully concur, does not excuse Congress if it shall fail to do what it can temporarily do to take care of this unemployment.

One of the reasons given by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] for the introduction of this amendment was that there were some legislatures which would not be in session this year, and the States would not, therefore, be able to take advantage of this appropriation, and therefore it should be extended so that those States in which the legislature does not meet this year might later on avail themselves of the appropriation.

Mr. President, in this crisis of the country if there is any State in the Union whose legislature is not willing to be called in special session by their governor to do their part toward meeting this situation, instead of saying to Uncle Sam, "We think you ought to do it all," that State is not entitled to a dollar of these appropriations. Each State ought to assume at least a portion of the burden of solving these questions, and it ought not all to be left to the National Government. I would say that any State which has an unemployment situation, or any State which has problems of readjustment, if their legislature will not meet in special session and avail themselves of this appropriation, if it shall be made, is not entitled to any appropriation at all. On the other hand, if the amendment be adopted we will find this situation in those States undoubtedly. They will take the position, "the building of roads costs more now than it will a year or two from now, so we will not build roads in this State now. We have the money from Uncle Sam. We will let it pile up, and we will wait two or three years and get it then, when we can build more roads for the same amount of money than we can build to-day."

Oh, Mr. President, it can not be justified, and this appropriation can not be justified for a single moment, except alone upon the theory of providing for unemployment.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I am for this appropriation because I believe it is a wise policy. It should be a national law. Travel is national, State, and local. Travel being national, State, and local, the appropriations for road improvements should be similar.

England has had a system, local in character, as suggested by some Senators, for centuries. She would never have builded such roads as she now has had she left the local settlement of the question to the counties and local authorities there. When she appropriated money out of the national treasury to aid the local, England began to have a splendid system of roads. France had a similar experience. There has been good improvement in those States where the State has aided the local authorities. When the Federal Government has a vast travel over State roads, it is but right that it should pay its part of the burden.

Congress appropriates vast sums a year to carry mail over the railroads, and yet when you come to carry mail over the post roads a great many people do not want to pay anything for that privilege. If it is right to pay to carry mail over the railroads, it is right and proper to pay a just and fair sum to improve the roads that the Federal Government uses for its mail. It is strange some people will antagonize every proposition to pay for carrying mail over country roads and yet never offer any antagonism to paying for carrying mail over the railroads.

If there ever was a time when this Government can afford to go into road building it is now. We have millions and hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of material in the Army and Navy that could be utilized for this purpose—trucks, road-building material, and machinery of all kinds—which will be wasted and useless unless this appropriation is made and that material made available and turned over to the Federal and State Governments, thus permitting the Federal Government to do its part in constructing these roads.

It is a wise national policy. It is a policy that the country is entitled to have.

The same antagonism was offered to the rural delivery, the same criticism was made, the same objection was made that is now offered to road improvement. I was a Member of the House and was on the first committee which reported the first $10,000 for rural delivery. We were antagonized for contending for rural delivery, as we are now for insisting on national aid to public roads. It grew. It had a hard and strenuous fight, but to-day nothing has done more for the country than rural delivery, and there is nothing to the repeal of which there would be more objection than the great system of rural delivery.

What is this amendment of mine? Under the present law, if the money is not made use of by the local authorities or State authorities the succeeding year it is divided among all the other States. This is an increased appropriation that is being made, and some of the State legislatures are not in session. You would have to call them suddenly into session in order to avail themselves of this money. This amendment provides that if the money shall not be used in the succeeding fiscal year it may be used in the second fiscal year in order that a great many of the States in which the legislatures are not now meeting may have time to meet and provide for this matter.

It seems to me to be but right that the States should have this opportunity to get their part of this appropriation. I think it helps to give employment, but I am not for this legislation solely because it gives employment. I favor it as a national system of road improvement. I believe we will never have a fine, good, splendid system of national roads until the Federal Government, the State government, and the local communities bear a just and fair share of the burden.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator has just stated that the Government has millions of dollars' worth of equipment that it might utilize for this purpose. I wish to ask the Senator whether it is not a fact that under the bill and under the law now existing the Government could not use a single truck for the purpose of constructing these roads?

Mr. SWANSON. This bill turns over to be used on these roads such material as the War Department will not need in the Army to be used in road construction. There is an amendment carrying that. I think if there ever was a time when the National Government can start on this work efficiently, start on it well, it is this time. You will have a great many engineers and a great many people who have been employed on road construction for the Army and for the Navy in France and here, and if there ever was a time when the Government could economically and well enter upon a national policy of the constructing of public roads now is a good time.

This amendment is not material, but it does seem to me to be just. The latter part of it provides something with reference to States which have not highway commissions. I think every State now has a highway commission. That is simply carrying out the provisions of the law which existed before. I am willing for that portion to be eliminated.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to ask the Senator a question for information. The Senator has stated that these roads are all national roads. Well, that is true in my own State and in every Northern State of which I know. One can there go anywhere and use the public roads; but I find that if I go down the Shenandoah Valley I have to pay 5 cents a mile for driving over the public road; at least, that has been my experience in the last few years, though I do not know whether or not that has been the policy in the last few months. I want to ask the Senator from Virginia whether the United States Government in delivering mail on the Shenandoah Valley road pays tolls?

Mr. SWANSON. I should think that was formerly so, because that road was built by a turnpike company, which was a corporation in which the State of Virginia was a large stockholder. I think now the State of Virginia has taken that road over and made it a State road. I am satisfied that no tolls are now being collected; but originally that road was constructed by a corporation, in which, as I have said, the State of Virginia was a large stockholder.

Mr. McCUMBER. And after the State of Virginia gets a nice little sum to build her roads she will at least stop charging the Nation for going over them.

Mr. SWANSON. I think every tollgate has been taken off since the State of Virginia took that road over. The State of Virginia did not get any dividends from the money previously collected on the road, but, as I understand, it was all spent on its improvement.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not saying anything in criticism of it, but I simply want to know whether the Government of the United States has been paying tolls, as private individuals have been doing.

Mr. SWANSON. I should think it has been, although I do not know. It was a corporation which built this road—the Valley Turnpike Co. Some private individuals had stock in the company, and the State of Virginia was a stockholder. Now, I think the State of Virginia has taken over this, that it is a State road, and that there are no tollgates on it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then we, who pay about four-fifths of the taxes for the purposes of these roads, will be entitled, I presume, to drive over them as freely as we now drive over other roads.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from North Dakota says, "We who pay about four-fifths of the taxes." These roads are to be constructed by Federal aid.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I say we who have paid four-fifths of the taxes for the construction of the roads now to be built under this appropriation.

Mr. SWANSON. There is no payment of four-fifths under this bill by anybody. The Federal Government simply pays one-half upon the roads upon which it carries its own mails.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that.

Mr. SWANSON. How the Senator can say anyone pays four-fifths, I can not understand.

Mr. McCUMBER. I say that of the sum which will pay this one-half four-fifths will come from the Northern States. That is what I mean.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In answer to the question of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], I desire to say that if he will read the bill he will see that it expressly provides that no part of this appropriation shall go to roads where tolls are charged. That language is in the original law; it has always been in the law; and the road to which he refers has never received a cent of this money, and never can if it charges tolls.

Mr. McCUMBER. Anything that will knock down the poles across my drive in going through Virginia I shall look upon with great favor.

Mr. SWANSON. They have disappeared, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator is willing to eliminate what I understood to be the latter part of the amendment as to three years, I think, as the Senator from Wisconsin says, the law now takes care of two years, and so does not need any amendment at all.

Mr. SWANSON. The law says "succeeding year," and my amendment says "the second year."

Mr. KELLOGG. The "succeeding year" is the second year.

Mr. SWANSON. I will explain it to the Senator. If the appropriation is confined to this year or is made to expire in the first part of the next year the legislature would have to meet in the meantime in order to secure the benefit of this legislation. Some legislatures do not meet except once in two years, and they would be compelled to hold an extra session in some States in order to get the funds to comply with this law.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think the Senator from Virginia is entirely mistaken, because this law applies to this appropriation, and this appropriation is not going to be made in the last fiscal year, but in this fiscal year. Then any sum not appropriated will go over to the next year, just as the Senator from Wisconsin has stated. I think the law now takes care of it. If the Senator will look it over I am sure he will see that it does.

Mr. SWANSON. My attention was called to the matter by the highway commissioner of Virginia, who stated that our legislature would not meet this year. It was at his suggestion that I offered the amendment. Other States are similarly situated.

Mr. KELLOGG. Do I understand that the Senator has eliminated the last part of his amendment?

Mr. SWANSON. The last part of the amendment may be eliminated, because every State has a highway commission now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I trust that this amendment will not be adopted by the Senate. The existing law would authorize as to the $50,000,000 provided for, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the legislature of any State to provide for the same amount for building these roads any time until June 30, 1920. With the amendment it means that the appropriation of $50,000,000, which is asked for at this time, based upon the fact that it is to be used primarily for giving employment to the unemployed of this country; that the legislature of a State, if this amendment is adopted, need not even draw the money from the Government until June 30, 1922, the second appropriation of $75,000,000 until 1923, and the third appropriation not until June 30, 1924.

Then, under this amendment—although I understand now that the Senator from Virginia is perfectly willing to eliminate it—if a State does not have a highway commission there can be one year more added to the years to which I have already called attention.

I think, if there is any justification for making these appropriations, they ought to be made for this year, if possible; that the expenditure of the money ought to begin as quickly as possible, and let a future Congress take care of the $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. The next Congress or the Congress two years hence will know very much more, Mr. President, about the condition of the Treasury of the United States and the ability of the people of this country to pay taxes than we do at this time. We should not at this time be obligating the Government of the United States to pay hundreds of millions of dollars when we scarcely know how we are going to meet the expenses of the Government for the coming fiscal year.

Reference has been made to-day to the amount of taxes which will have to be raised for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, or the coming fiscal year. Why, Mr. President, if we should take every dollar of profit of all the businesses in the United States it would not be sufficient to pay the obligations which the Government will be under for the next fiscal year. Ten billion dollars will not cover those obligations.

I say now that if it is undertaken to collect more than $4,000,000,000 out of the business of the country for 1919 by way of taxation the business interests of the country can not stand it; there will be failures from one end of this land to the other, and the panics which we have had in this country in the past will have been as zephyrs compared to a cyclone. So I want the American people to know now that they have got to purchase bonds next year—not this year alone but next year as well—not millions or hundreds of millions of dollars' worth but billions of dollars' worth. If Congress is going to appropriate money for the building of roads now, I think it ought to make one appropriation, and that it ought to require the money to be expended, if the States take advantage of this law, at the very earliest possible date.

I intend to offer an amendment, if no other Senator does, as soon as the pending amendment is disposed of, to strike out $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. That means, Mr. President, under the pending amendment, if adopted, the States need not provide money or expend money upon these roads until the year 1924.

The Senator from Virginia says that we have been perfectly willing to pay the railroads for carrying mail over their roads, but that we were not willing to pay for carrying the mail over the country roads. Why, Mr. President, there is not a letter or a package being carried over the country roads wherever mail is carried that is not paid for by the Government. We have the rural route delivery; we have men employed by the tens of thousands for that purpose. I will admit that in the past they have not always been paid what they ought to have been paid for that service, and I am glad to see that there is some provision made here to take care of those men who labor in season and out of season, in all sorts of weather, and under all sorts of conditions, and that they are being recognized in this bill. However, the mail carried over the country roads costs the Government of the United States more, of course, in proportion than does the carriage of mail over the railroad lines, and it ought to do so. Nobody is objecting to that; but I do not want to hear arguments used in this Chamber that nothing is paid for that service.

Mr. President, all I shall ask is that the Senate record its judgment on this amendment. I think the present law which gives one year's time for the State to decide whether they desire to build a road or not, or to decide upon what roads the money shall be spent, affords a long enough time during which the Treasury of the United States should be bound. I hope that the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has expressed my views in reference to these appropriations. I can justify such appropriations for the first year and possibly for two years, but I do not believe that the general terms of the existing law should be changed. This ought to be treated and considered as an emergency appropriation to care for the emergency that everybody fears is impending. So, Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it changes existing law. That seems to be conceded by everyone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SWANSON. I will leave it to the Chair to decide whether the point of order is well taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I rise to move the present consideration of Senate resolution 415.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] are detained on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 415, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 415), as follows:

Whereas a petition has been filed with the Senate of the United States by Mr. Henry Ford, of Michigan, contesting the election of Mr. Truman H. Newberry, of Michigan, as a Senator from said State, and asking for the preservation and recount of the ballots, and the investigation of the unlawful expenditures of money alleged to have been made by and on behalf of the said Mr. Truman H. Newberry, and notice thereof has been given; and

Whereas information has been received to the effect that in certain localities within the State some of the ballots are being destroyed, and that others are likely to be destroyed unless they are taken possession of by the Senate for the purpose of preserving and recounting the same: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the said petition and the papers and the documents accompanying the same be, and they are hereby, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for investigation and report thereon.

Resolved further, That the said Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, authorized and empowered to take possession of the ballots, poll books, tally sheets, and all other documents and records relating to the said election held for United States Senator in the State of Michigan on the 5th day of November, 1918, and that the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, instructed to carry out the directions of the said Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, in that behalf, and that the said Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, directed to proceed with all convenient speed to take all necessary steps for the preservation of the said ballots, poll books, tally sheets, and other documents, and to recount the said ballots, and to take and preserve all evidence as to the various matters alleged in the said petition and notice, and of any alleged fraud, irregularity, and unlawful expenditure of money in the said election and primaries, and to the intimidation of voters, or other facts affecting the result of said election.

Resolved further, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of the Congress, to hold its sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation, and to have full power to subpœna parties and witnesses, and to require the production of all papers, books, and documents, and other evidence relating to the said investigation; and to employ clerks and stenographers at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to take and make a record of all evidence taken and received by the committee; and to keep a record of its proceedings; and to have such evidence, records, and other matter required by the committee printed.

Resolved further, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and his deputy are hereby required to attend the said Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, and to execute its directions; that the chairman or any member of the committee be, and is hereby, empowered to administer oaths; that each of the parties to said contest be entitled to representatives and attorneys at the recount and the taking of evidence; that all disputed ballots or records be preserved, so that final action may be had thereon by the full committee and the Senate; that the committee may appoint subcommittees of one or more members to represent the committee at the various places in the making of the recount and the taking of evidence, and the committee may appoint such supervisors of the recount as it may deem best; and that the committee may adopt and enforce such rules and regulations for the conduct of the recount and the taking of evidence as it may deem wise, not inconsistent with this resolution; and that the committee shall report to the Senate as early as may be; and from time to time, if it deems best, submit all the testimony and the result of the recount.

Resolved further, That the expenses incurred in the carrying out of these resolutions shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers ordered by the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, and approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I would not rise to present this motion if I were not impressed with the fact that it is necessary under the conditions as they exist in the Michigan contest. It is not the idea of the committee that this Senate should finally decide upon the merits of this case. We understand, of course, that even if we attempted to do that it would not be binding on the succeeding Senate. I agree that unless there are extraordinary circumstances, which I do not have in mind now, the commission which is issued by the governor of the State is prima facie evidence of title, which would give the contestee the right to the seat temporarily or until the case shall be finally decided, but the issue goes beyond that.

This election was held on the 5th of November. The primaries were held in August or September. It appears of record in the State of Michigan that in this particular primary there was collected by a committee which had in charge the Newberry campaign $178,000, and that it expended $176,000 in that campaign. It is charged that the expenditures were perhaps two or three times this amount. I do not know what the fact is in that behalf. Suffice it to say that that amount, of which we have record, is an extraordinary amount, a sum largely in excess of any amount that has ever been expended in any State, so far as we have any record.

A notice of contest has been filed. It appeared before the committee that after this expenditure of money became known to the public, and particularly to the people of the State of Michigan, efforts were made to get Mr. Newberry to withdraw, but, it seems, without avail.

After this petition came into the Senate on January 27, 1919, this resolution asking for an investigation was favorably reported to the Senate. About the time that report was made, or a little later, a communication was sent to the United States Senate signed by the attorney of Mr. Newberry, Judge Murfin, who, I understand, is a very reputable lawyer, in which he makes certain countercharges against Mr. Ford, the contestant. I do not know what the purpose of the presentation of this communication was, but its effect upon my mind was to confirm me in the conviction that it was very necessary to inquire into all of the facts connected with the senatorial election. A full opportunity should be given both to the contestant and the contestee at the earliest moment possible to show the facts, whatever they may be; and I have faith that, after the facts are shown, the Senate will decide the contest in accordance with the law and the facts. It ought not to be otherwise, and I do not believe it will be otherwise.

Now, perhaps, Senators will inquire as to the necessity for beginning these hearings now; and I wish to address myself to that branch of the subject for a few moments. Bear in mind that the charges here are fraud, excessive expenditures in violation of the law, State and national. If anyone has been guilty of any charges of this kind, there are those, if we are to judge by what we know to be the usual experience in such cases, who are willing to get rid of the testimony.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. POMERENE. For a question.

Mr. KNOX. I only wish to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if there is any allegation on the record that any testimony is likely to be lost except the testimony of the ballots?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes, Mr. President; and I will address myself to that in a few minutes; but I want to lead up to it in the regular order.

There are about 2,200 precincts in Michigan. There is a statute which provides for a recount, generally speaking; but on five or six different occasions the Supreme Court of Michigan has held that in the case of contests, as for a seat in Congress, the State authorities do not have the power to order a recount, because they took the position—and I think erroneously—that inasmuch as the Constitution made the Senate or the House, as the case may be, the judge of the qualifications and elections of a Senator or a Representative, therefore the State authorities could not intervene; and the court has taken that position, even assuming that the commission had been issued where there was palpable fraud or a palpable mistake; so that the only thing that could be done in order to bring about a recount was to present the subject to the United States Senate.

Before it came here a proceeding was begun by the contestant in the United States courts in Michigan asking for a temporary injunction or restraining order for the preservation of the ballots. A temporary restraining order was issued. Later on the contestant and contestee appeared before the committee and an arrangement was made looking to the preservation of the ballots. Let me say that before the notice of injunction was served upon the defendants in at least two cases the ballots at Marquette and at Saginaw Bay were destroyed, and one of the clerks—I think the clerk in the city of Saginaw—who had charge of these ballots made a statement to the effect that he had disposed of the ballots in that city for junk.

Mr. President, after some conferences here a stipulation was entered into by the counsel representing the contestant and the contestee. Later on an injunction was entered continuing the temporary restraining order. The committee was advised by Judge Murfin, representing Mr. Newberry, on January 21, as follows:

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.,
January 21, 1919.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Pursuant to stipulation between Messrs. Ford and Newberry made in Washington Saturday, final court orders have been entered in both eastern and western districts in Michigan in the Federal court whereby ballots and boxes are now indefinitely preserved. This means they will be available 1 month, 1 year, or 10 years hence if a showing should ever be made making the Senate feel they wish to examine these ballots.

J. O. MURFIN,
Attorney of Record for Thurman E. Newberry.

Now, I shall not charge that Judge Murfin intentionally misrepresented the scope of this investigation; but I have before me a copy of the journal entry, and a copy of the stipulation was read into this journal entry. That reads:

The parties, by their counsel, will, and they do hereby, stipulate in the two cases between the parties pending in the eastern and northern districts of Michigan, respectively, that orders may be entered, and shall forthwith be entered, if the courts approve, that the injunctions shall be continued in full force as heretofore granted until such time as the Sergeant at Arms of the United States Senate may and shall take possession of the ballots and all the contents, records, and the like in the ballot boxes, including poll books, tally sheets, etc.

That the procedure of the taking possession by the Sergeant at Arms shall be fixed by the United States Senate, and the representatives of each party shall be present when the transfer of the ballots and papers shall be made from the boxes to the custody of the Sergeant at Arms.

It is understood that action shall be taken to transfer the ballots, etc., from the boxes in time so that the boxes may be used at the approaching April elections.

It is understood that this stipulation does not foreclose or prejudice either party as to the matters contended for by them respectively.

Signed by the parties, by their respective attorneys.

And the court being advised, it is hereby ordered that the restraining order heretofore entered and issued out of this court on the 28th day of December, 1918, be, and the same is hereby, continued in full force as heretofore granted until such time as the Sergeant at Arms of the United States Senate may and shall take possession of the ballots and all the contents, records, and the like, in the ballot boxes, including poll books, tally sheets, etc., relating to the November 5, 1918, election for United States Senator for the State of Michigan, and until the further order of this court.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand the rule, the Senator moving to take up a matter of this kind is not permitted to discuss the merits of the measure. I am not objecting to that, however; but my inquiry is, Will other Senators be debarred from discussing it in answer to what the Senator is saying?

Mr. POMERENE. Why, Mr. President, if that question is addressed to me, I surely will have no objection. I have understood that under the rules of the Senate a motion of this character, made after 2 o'clock, was debatable.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The motion to take it up is debatable; but the debate on the question itself, I have understood, has always been decided the other way. As I say, however, I am not making objection to it, except that if the Chair should rule as I have indicated, in case a point of order is made when an answer is attempted, I should feel obliged to invoke the rule now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator raise the point of order? [A pause.] The Chair will say to the Senator that the motion is debatable, but the main question is not, under the rules of the Senate, as the Chair understands them.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is my understanding—that the motion is a debatable one, but not the merits of the matter.

Mr. POMERENE. I have been in the Senate for eight years, and I have never heard of any restrictions being placed upon debate. I wish the rules might be so changed that there would be restrictions placed upon it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no doubt that that is the rule. As I said, I have no objection to it myself; but I do not want to be debarred from replying, if a point of order is raised by anybody else, as I fear it will be. Then we would have an ex parte statement, and that I do object to.

Mr. POMERENE. I want to say to the Senator from Michigan that I hope no one will raise that point of order, if there is anything in the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no doubt at all of the good faith of the Senator from Ohio. I have no doubt about it; but if the Chair should rule, when a point of order was made, that it was not debatable and an answer could not be made, I can readily see where an unfair proposition would be presented to the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I shall be among the first to protest against anything unfair being done in this matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think I will rely upon the good faith of the Senator, and not make a point of order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there is not any question on earth about the fact that when the Senator from Ohio takes his seat any Senator in this Chamber can be recognized, and he can speak in answer to the Senator from Ohio, or he can speak on any other question that he sees fit, provided he keeps within the rules.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is not my understanding of the rule. My understanding of the rule is that in a case of this kind, on a motion to take up a bill or resolution, it has to be debated on the question as to whether it will be taken up to supplant another measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has stated the rule; but he will apply the rule in exactly the same way to both sides, as far as the present occupant of the chair is concerned.

Mr. POMERENE. The last paragraph of this journal entry reads:

It is further ordered that the foregoing order shall not prevent the use of the aforesaid ballot boxes by any of the other defendants when necessary for lawful election purposes, and that this court reserves authority to permit the use of said boxes for lawful election purposes.

I read this to point out that notwithstanding the assurance which Judge Murfin gave to the committee and which I have no doubt, knowing his reputation as I hear it to be, was made in perfectly good faith at the same time, the order does not give the protection to these ballots which he suggested in the telegram.

Let me add further, in this connection, that while the statutes of Michigan provide that after the election the ballots shall be returned to the ballot box and sealed up and preserved, there is no stated time for this preservation, and the practice has been to keep them only until the next general election, and then they are destroyed; and the next general election will be sometime in the first week in April, as I am informed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield for a question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator know that this week a bill passed the Michigan Legislature, and has become a law, providing for the preservation of these ballots at the petition of either of the parties or of anybody desiring a recount?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I did not know that the bill had passed. A form of a bill was presented to the committee, and it was said that it would be presented to the general assembly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That bill has become a law.

Mr. POMERENE. I was not aware of that fact. Now, Mr. President, it may be that that law will provide for some further protection to these ballots. I hope it does.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me at this time to ask the Senator from Michigan whether he has with him a copy of that bill as passed?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have.

Mr. REED. In the Chamber?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. I presume the Senator will present it, then, at the proper time?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I shall. I am going to have it read to the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. Now, Mr. President, what I have said refers to only one of the questions involved in this contest.

The statement was made before the committee that shortly after publicity was given to these expenditures and the possible results, the correspondence belonging to the committee having in charge the Newberry campaign was taken out and burned. I think, in the present state of the record, I am justified in making the statement that there were large bank accounts, and that the checks which were drawn upon these accounts are also likely to be destroyed, if they are in existence now. More than that, it appears that some time, perhaps in November or December, possibly earlier than that, an inquiry into the question of these expenditures was begun by the United States grand jury in the city of New York.

The corrupt-practices act provides that an itemized statement of the receipts and expenditures of the primary, as well as the general election, shall be filed with the Secretary of the United States Senate; but this act provides further that the deposit of this affidavit in the United States mail shall be construed as a compliance with the provision of the act requiring it to be filed with the Secretary of the Senate. The affidavit in this case was made and mailed by Mr. Newberry in New York, where he has a temporary residence, and it later reached the United States Senate.

These facts, it is believed, gave to the Federal court in New York City jurisdiction. Witnesses were subpœnaed to appear before the grand jury. I am basing my statement in part upon the briefs filed in the United States Supreme Court. Men who had charge of this campaign appeared before the grand jury and refused to testify, and presented as a reason for their refusal a written opinion which was furnished them by a lawyer to the effect that the Federal corrupt-practices act was unconstitutional.

I have had some experience in trial work, and never until this case did I ever hear that it was the privilege of a witness in a grand inquest, conducted by a grand jury, to plead the unconstitutionality of a statute. I understand, of course, that a witness is always privileged to refuse to answer a question where the answer might tend to incriminate him or subject him to disgrace. The witnesses in that case, after refusing to testify, were adjudged guilty of contempt, and the case is now pending in the Supreme Court.

Mr. President, the charges in the petition or memorial filed on the part of the contestant charge fraud and violations of the law. The charges filed in the memorial which is presented to the United States Senate on behalf of Mr. Newberry charge likewise extravagant expenditure of money and violations of law.

Under the circumstances, ought the United States Senate sitting now go forward and try to secure the evidence, such as it may be, or ought we to wait until the sitting of another Congress? That is the point; and in my judgment the Senate of the United States will be derelict in its duty if it does not take all the necessary precautions in order to preserve this testimony both for and against Mr. Newberry and for and against Mr. Ford.

It is to be assumed, of course, that the witnesses who will be called will be sworn, that they will be examined by the attorneys of either party, and perhaps by the members of the committee who may be sitting to hear the evidence. If any false testimony is procured on behalf of either party, then between this and the next session there will be plenty of opportunity to investigate it. If the testimony is true, then Senators as well as contestant and contestee ought to welcome it.

I am not concerned as to the outcome of this contest. I am concerned that the members of the committee and of the Senate shall do their duty as I think I see it, and see it clearly, so that it may not be said that an injustice has been done to either one party or the other because of the law's delay.

Mr. President, I want to take the time of the Senate for just a few minutes longer.

These charges do not come here alone from persons who are immediately interested, but the charges of corruption were made in the State of Michigan before the primary was held. A communication was sent to the Senate by Mr. Elbert H. Fowler, who, I understand, had charge of the Ford campaign, and in connection with it is a letter by the lieutenant governor of Michigan, Hon. L. D. Dickinson, dated August 22, 1918, in which he discusses conditions as they were during the preprimary campaign. I read a part of this letter:

> Men of all walks of life, who have the best interests of our State at heart, believe the men who are conducting your campaign for United States Senator are conducting one that will bring one of the greatest scandals on our State that Michigan politics ever saw, and have asked me to take the lead in attempting to rid our State of this blight.
> I note by your statement that you say you do not know of these things.

This letter was written prior to the primary.

> In giving you the information I will give you the terms that I hear everywhere in the 62 counties in which I have been recently. I have always had the highest regard for you, and must believe you will relieve the Republican Party and the State of a campaign that is now being likened to the notorious Lorimer campaign of Illinois a few years ago. The terms "boodle" and "rotten" seem to be general terms that I hear.

Another paragraph:

> Every section of the State shows evidence of an expensive newspaper campaign, costing thousands and thousands of dollars. Thousands of men are liberally paid for work at many more thousands of dollars, an expensive suite of offices with a large force sending out hundreds of thousands of letters to influential voters at more thousands of dollars, thousands of autos already engaged for use on primary day at many more thousands, that practically every opponent of the primary system is backing your campaign, and that hundreds of the experts who have figured in or conducted for money the wet campaigns of the past are among the most active of your supporters.
> Conservative estimates say everywhere from $250,000 to $500,000 is being used. The good people of the State are apparently powerless to give the voters these matters on short notice. In case you get the most votes, you must expect to have the placing of your name on the election ballot contested. If by technical reasons you succeed, then you must expect every church and moral organization to work until election night to keep our fair State from the baneful influence that success following such methods would leave for years to come.

It was said by one of the attorneys representing Mr. Newberry before the committee that notwithstanding that letter the Republican lieutenant governor supported Mr. Newberry.

Mr. Dickinson was reelected lieutenant governor at the same election by from 115,000 to 118,000 majority. Mr. Newberry's plurality was, on the face of the returns, 7,500. The conditions of Michigan were such that when Mr. Dickinson was inaugurated lieutenant governor of his State in an address to the State senate he said, among other things:

> Primary elections will call for action on your part. * * * More communications on this line asking for legislative action have come to me by far than all others combined, and almost without exception Republican, not only from all parts of Michigan, but from other States. This, you know, is the outgrowth of a candidacy that doubtless cost more money than ever before was paid for a nomination for office in all the world's history. * * * The individual or even party interests are of little note when the sanctity of the ballot and safety of democracy are at stake. From almost every part of the State come to me pleas that this legislature make it impossible in the future to witness the sale of a public office on the auction block, but rather that the laborer, the farmer, the business or professional voter, however humble but able and respectable, may have a chance with the man of millions.

If this statement came from an adversary, if it came from one of the opposite political faith, it might well be questioned, but when it comes from the lieutenant governor of a sovereign State, who was reelected by an overwhelming vote at the same election at which Mr. Newberry presented himself as a candidate for the United States Senate, it speaks volumes.

If this is the way in which this subject appeals to the official class of Michigan, and, I add, to the good citizenship of that great and good State, ought we to delay? When the lieutenant governor is appealing to the legislature of his State for additional legislation in order to prevent a recurrence of this situation, will the United States Senate sit silently by while this testimony may, in part, at least, be where we can not get at it if it is needed, if some future Congress insists that there ought to be an investigation and we do not?

If the situation is one-half as bad as described in the lieutenant governor's letter and his address to the Michigan Senate, does not the Senate of the United States owe it to itself to inquire what the facts are?

Statements are filed with this committee giving the names of reputable witnesses who, it is said, will be able to show that Mr. Newberry was in constant touch with his campaign committee. I shall await with interest the testimony on that subject. I do not care, and I shall not prejudge. Mr. Newberry makes the statement, as appears in the record in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, to the effect that he spent nothing in this campaign, that he received no contributions, and I think I quote him correctly when I say that his language was, in substance, that nothing was either received or expended to his knowledge. He does make a statement in one of the affidavits which was filed to the effect that he had heard some reports about the activities of some of his friends, but that they were purely voluntary. The letter which Mr. Dickinson, the lieutenant governor, first wrote to him was written to and received by Mr. Newberry a number of days before the primary was held, advising him as to the conditions that prevailed.

Let us look at the other side of the proposition. It is stated by Judge Murfin, on behalf of Mr. Newberry, in substance, that Mr. Ford and his friends conducted a campaign of very great extravagance and that they had violated the law. My answer to this charge is, if both have violated the law, then neither of them ought to sit here in the Senate.

And now, Mr. President, I wish to repeat very briefly that those Senators who favored this investigation and favor it now, lest the evidence be dissipated, do not ask and will not ask that this Senate shall attempt to pass judgment upon the title of either party to a seat in this Chamber. We are simply taking such steps as we believe are required of the Senate sitting now. Now should be the accepted time to take the testimony. It is not an unheard-of thing to begin proceedings for the preservation of testimony. The code of civil proceedure and the common law itself provide for methods to do this, and we are simply following the precedents in that behalf when we ask that the Senate authorize the committee to take up this subject and order the investigation now.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to make an inquiry, and I should like to have an answer if the Senator from Ohio is willing to make one. Suppose this investigation is pending and testimony is being taken at the time of the organization of the next Senate, what effect, in the judgment of the Senator from Ohio, would that fact have upon Mr. Newberry taking his seat under his credentials from the State of Michigan?

Mr. POMERENE. In my judgment, none whatever, unless some facts might develop, which I do not anticipate.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to know, if the Senator is willing to answer, what he means by facts developing. Facts of what nature developing, in respect to what particular phase of the matter?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I had nothing special in mind. I think, without an exception, so far as I now know, when a Senator presents his credentials in legal form at the time he seeks to be qualified, the Senate would have to seat him. The question can be taken up afterwards and determined as to whether he shall be unseated.

Mr. KNOX. In other words, as I understand the Senator from Ohio, the merits of the contest would have no bearing upon the right of the Senator to take his seat under his certificate?

Mr. POMERENE. I should think not.

Mr. President, I dislike very much to interfere with the consideration of the bill that is before the Senate, but I have felt an effort was being made to prevent the passage of this resolution at this session and to block the taking of any of this testimony, and I feel it a duty that I owe to myself, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as well as to the Senate to place briefly before the Senate the issue as I understand it, and then the Senate must take the responsibility.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] feels it is wise and best at this time to take up this Michigan senatorial controversy. He has admitted, to begin with, that this Senate has nothing to do with the qualifications and election of Mr. Newberry; that the next Senate has the power of deciding these questions, and, further, that any action which might be taken by the committee at this time might be absolutely ignored by the next Senate, and all the expense and time and trouble will have been wasted.

I wish to say at the outset that I am no more in sympathy with the illegal or extravagant expenditure of money than is the Senator from Ohio, and at the proper time, before the proper tribunal, if there shall be a basis of fact for investigation, I shall not oppose it.

I believe the proposed procedure in this case is wholly unwarranted and absolutely unnecessary. For the contestant, Mr. Ford, I have no ill feeling; I understand he has always been my friend, and I have no personal animosity against him. As a citizen and business man he has my great respect, but it is well for the Senate to understand the history of Mr. Ford's candidacy for the Senate and the circumstances which actuated and promoted it.

Some time in June of last year some practical Democratic politicians of Michigan, of whom the attorney for Mr. Ford in these proceedings was the principal advisor, as he is his advisor now, recognizing the fact that Michigan is normally strongly Republican, set out to defeat the party by indirection through the primaries. Mr. Ford was sent for by the President and went to the White House. He tells the result of the interview practically in this language:

> I do not feel qualified to act as Senator, have no disposition to be a Senator; but the President asked me to be a candidate in Michigan and I accepted that request as a command, and I am going to be a candidate.

When asked what party he was to represent, he said he had no particular choice; he was not a partisan man, but he consented to be a candidate on both tickets, the Republican and the Democratic. The fact that Michigan is strongly Republican makes it easy for our Democratic friends to go into the Republican primaries and nominate the man whom they would like to defeat. They have done it in the past. This time they endeavored to select the Republican nominee, not to defeat him but to defeat the Republican choice.

The Democrats joined in the Republican primaries for the purpose of trying to put upon that party Mr. Ford as their candidate as well as ours, because, while under the Michigan law a man can not run on two tickets for election, but must make his choice as to which one he will accept, it was arranged that he should refuse to accept the nomination on the Democratic ticket and abide by the privilege that was granted him to run as a Republican.

In the primaries he was defeated for the nomination on the Republican ticket but was nominated on the Democratic ticket. It is the campaign for the primary about which complaint is made, for I venture the assertion that if it were not for the primary there would not even be an allegation that there was any fraud in the election. It was the primary in Michigan that created the greatest disturbance.

In spite of the charges of rival candidates, Mr. Newberry was nominated by a substantial majority in the primaries and went on the Republican ticket as its candidate. The election was held, and something over a month after it occurred, and after the time had expired for filing a notice of a demand for a recount under our statute, Mr. Ford announced through his attorneys that he was satisfied with the election and should make no contest. Under our laws there is no provision for the preservation of ballots after the official count, the returns of the State board of election canvassers, and the certificate of election has been issued. Mr. Ford made no complaint at that time and for nearly a month thereafter.

The Senator from Ohio has referred to the fact that there is danger of the destruction of the ballots and that ballots had been destroyed. Mr. Ford in his petition to the Senator's committee set out that ballots had been destroyed, some of them at that time; but no notice had been given that a contest was even expected. These ballots were destroyed in accordance with the ordinary custom. They were destroyed in Marquette because there was an election in December following the November election, and they had to be destroyed in order to use the boxes. No one thought that they would ever be called for and there was not the slightest suggestion that these ballots were to be treated differently from the way ballots theretofore had been treated. I understand that is practically the situation in Saginaw and Port Huron. But it can not be shown, as I am informed, that there were any ballots destroyed after Mr. Ford had given notice or even suggested that he wanted a recount. The ballots have been preserved.

Now, mark you, sir, it was Mr. Ford who invoked the Federal courts of Michigan for preservation of those ballots. He secured a temporary restraining order in the two Federal courts of our State. Before the time for a hearing on those orders had arrived the representatives of Mr. Ford and Mr. Newberry appeared before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and the legal representative of Mr. Ford expressed some doubt as to the validity or the power of the court which he had invoked. Therefore the two parties stipulated that the temporary restraining orders should be made permanent. Mr. Newberry's attorney went home, according to instructions, and appeared before the two courts and had those restraining orders made permanent, and they are so to-day, and the ballots are in the possession of the courts.

Notwithstanding that fact and realizing that possibly there would be a conflict between State and Federal authorities, I want to say here, by way of parenthesis, that I do not believe those Federal courts or this Senate can legally take possession of those ballots against the law of the State of Michigan, although there has been no action and no disposition manifested to interfere in the least with the preservation of the ballots, because Mr. Newberry, if there is to be a recount, is, I believe, more interested in the preservation of them than is Mr. Ford, as I shall attempt to show if this resolution is to be considered; but, notwithstanding this fact, Mr. Newberry's friends caused a remedial law to be enacted in Michigan to provide for the preservation of ballots, if invoked.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I merely wish to inquire of the Senator, as he made reference to restraining orders issued by the court ordering those ballots to be preserved and retained, whether there was any modification of any of those orders to the effect that they would be held in reserve until the next election, or words to that effect?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not at all. I have the orders here. I shall put them into the RECORD a little later so the Senator may see just what they were. They were in compliance with Mr. Ford's attorney's request to preserve the ballots.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understood there was some modification of one of those orders to the effect that they would be retained until the time came to use the ballot boxes again in which those ballots were placed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will put the restraining orders in the RECORD in just a moment when I come to them so the Senator can see just exactly what the orders were. They provide for preserving the ballots indefinitely.

I am making these preliminary remarks because this is a question which is going to require a great deal of time, if the Senate sees fit to lay aside its legitimate business to take up the work of the next Senate. This proposed action admittedly will not be binding upon the next Senate. If Senators wish to do this they can, but the facts must be disclosed, although I shall be willing to yield at any time for the purpose of taking up the legitimate business of this Congress.

But to get back to the procedure, it was doubted by some, as I have said, that this power of the Federal court would be effective in restraining the destruction of the ballots; that they belong to the State and that the State would possibly ignore some order that might be issued which they regarded as unconstitutional, and therefore a bill was introduced in the senate and house of representatives at Lansing as soon as it was possible to prepare one, and at the earliest possible moment, not losing a single day, both houses passed the bill unanimously. Mr. Ford's attorney knew that this action was to be taken, and as I understand it he approved it. I have received a telegram from our governor, dated February 4, as follows—

House enrolled act No. 1, being an act to provide for the preservation of ballots cast for office of United States Senator in cases of contested elections or in cases where notices of contested election may be given, etc., has this day received my approval and is now a law in full force and effect in the State of Michigan.

ALBERT E. SLEEPER.

I shall put that bill into the RECORD. It provides that Mr. Ford may go into the Supreme Court, and to cover any possible question of jurisdiction it is provided that in the circuit court of the county of Ingham he may petition to have these ballots preserved, and provides the way in which it can be done, and everything has been done to preserve the ballots, and that was the only thing of any serious consequence that was presented to the committee showing that there was danger that something might happen to embarrass the investigation of this case by the next Senate.

But this is not the whole story of this proceeding. After Mr. Ford had been placed in the race in Michigan by the President of the United States, after the people of our State had decided in the primary that he was not the Republican nominee, and this after the Ford committee had published every one of these things which the Senator has brought out here, spread them before the people in the campaign for election, the people decided by a majority vote that Mr. Newberry was Michigan's choice for Senator. The Ford party or the Ford committee simply covered our State with advertisements, many pages of advertisements in the newspapers, calling attention to the fact that Mr. Newberry had expended $176,000 in the primary campaign and then, in connection therewith, statements showing that Mr. Ford spent $3,000,000 to build a hospital, and further stating that Mr. Ford, who had millions of dollars' worth of contracts with the Government, proposed to give his share of the war profits back to the Government. Those things were all published to the people. The people passed upon them.

Mr. Ford reached the voters several times during that campaign. His committee reports—and I shall have something to say about that later—or the Democratic State central committee reports, that it spent about $53,000. His own committee expended something like $1,500 or $1,800. Yet, Mr. President, when this question comes up I shall show one pamphlet that was sent out by the Ford people that must have cost at least $80,000 to print, mail, and distribute—one pamphlet alone. It is what was known as the pamphlet de luxe.

It is well that Senators should know all about this case and what influences may be inspiring it. Mr. Ford gave an interview for publication the other day in Los Angeles, Cal., stating that he spent no money for the nomination or election, but he would spend a million dollars, if necessary, to keep Mr. Newberry out of the Senate.

I can understand somewhat of this propaganda that is being urged, and I do not charge with indirection or bad faith the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, for whom I have the greatest respect; but he does not know it all. The thing has been misrepresented to him. He has asked that we lend the influence of this body, which has nothing to do with Mr. Newberry's primary or election, for the purpose of molding a public sentiment before trial in the next Senate, which may influence its action in regard to the seating of Mr. Newberry.

The Senator admits for the first time that Mr. Newberry's credentials, being proper and regular, he will be entitled to be sworn in on the day of the next session when he shall present himself to the Senate.

Then, I say, if the Senator, who will probably be on the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any other Senator, feels, after looking over all the facts that have been presented, that an investigation for fraud or for any other purpose that would invalidate Mr. Newberry's seat should be made, he will not find me opposing him in his position; but, Mr. President, not only is there a determined and powerful influence at work to prevent the seating of Mr. Newberry, but I believe that there is the widest misrepresentation of facts connected with the election or the primary of which it is possible to conceive.

There is another incident, Mr. President, that ought to be borne in mind: The Senator from Ohio has referred to the grand jury proceedings in New York. After the primaries and in the very midst of the campaign for election, in October grand jury proceedings were instituted in New York City, a thousand miles, more or less, from Michigan.

That proceeding was instituted for the purpose of showing that the friends of Mr. Newberry and Mr. Newberry himself had violated the corrupt-practices statute of the Penal Code. Mr. Newberry's most influential friends were subpœnaed and haled down to New York, as well as all of the gentlemen from whom the Senator from Ohio has made quotations against Mr. Newberry—ex-Gov. Chase S. Osborn; Lieut. Gov. Lurin D. Dickinson; Grant M. Hudson, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League; James Sweinhart, representative of the Detroit News; Louise De Lamater, stenographer; and Jay Hayden, representative of the Detroit News.

Then they called the following Newberry people: H. A. Hopkins, director of publicity for the Newberry committee; Paul R. Dailey, attorney; Milton Oakman, ex-county clerk, Wayne County; Guy Ingalls, city treasurer elect, Detroit; C. L. Sibben, stenographer; Margaret Nevin, stenographer; and Florence Shapiro, stenographer.

All of these people testified before the grand jury which was called for the purpose of investigating the charges of fraud which Mr. Dickinson and Mr. Osborn had made against Mr. Newberry. Finally they called upon Mr. Frank W. Blair. He was treasurer, as I believe, of the Newberry committee and is president of the Union Trust Co., of Detroit. They also called upon Mr. Allan A. Templeton, president of the Seamless Steel Tube Co., of Detroit, and Mr. Thomas P. Phillips, editor of the St. Clair Republican. Those three men refused to testify under advice of their attorneys, as I understand, believing that they were not compelled to do so under the law.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VARDAMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator who the attorney was who gave that advice?

Mr. TOWNSEND. To what attorney does the Senator refer?

Mr. POMERENE. To the attorney for Mr. Newberry.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think it was the Hon. Martin W. Littleton. I do not think he was Mr. Newberry's attorney.

Mr. POMERENE. Was he the attorney who advised these witnesses?

Mr. TOWNSEND. My understanding is that the attorneys advised them with regard to this matter.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not care to interrupt the Senator's statement, but I want to call attention to another fact. As I understand, Mr. Newberry in the summer and fall of 1918 was living temporarily in New York?

Mr. TOWNSEND. He was. He was the commander in the third naval district. One of his sons was in the Army and the other was in the Navy. I am glad the Senator from Ohio asked me that question. Mr. Newberry was stationed in New York, and did not go into Michigan during the campaign, although some affidavits are with the committee to the effect that the commander was in Michigan. The affiants were mistaken.

But they called all these people down there to testify, and these three men refused to do so. I understand that Mr. Truman Newberry and Mr. John Newberry, the brother who had subscribed the largest amount of the campaign money, were in New York and were not even called upon to testify. Immediately the three men who refused to testify were committed for contempt of court. They were released on a writ of habeas corpus. The writs were contested before Judge Clayton, the circuit judge. He dissolved them and remanded the men to jail. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and it was argued last week here in that court. Its decision will determine the validity of the corrupt-practices act, so far as it relates to senatorial primaries, and may settle the contention of this case.

Meanwhile the grand jury, which had all the facts that have been alleged in the statement by the Senator from Ohio, refused to return a true bill, and that fact was kept secret. Representatives of the Department of Justice held it secret with the hope, I verily believe, that it would have its effect upon the voters in Michigan just the same, because Mr. Newberry was practically being tried for corruption, but hoping that that trial would be considered as still in existence after the grand jury had been dismissed. One of the jurymen, however, stated the fact that the jury stood 16 to 1 unopposed to any action against Mr. Newberry. That was published finally in the State of Michigan, and that juror was haled into court for contempt, but was afterwards dismissed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. The question I assume was, as I understand the issue in this case, as to whether or not this was a correct affidavit. Necessarily the members of the committee would have some information touching those incidents.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know to what the Senator from Ohio refers.

Mr. POMERENE. The witnesses who were found guilty of contempt did not testify before the grand jury.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No.

Mr. POMERENE. So that the grand jury did not have the benefit of whatever information they may or may not have had.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No, Mr. President, these three witnesses did not testify. It was a test case on these three witnesses, but all the people who had to do with the fund or the management of the campaign outside of the office, and some of those in the office, did testify, and they testified to all these statements of complaint. Mr. Ford's friends called the men by whom they hoped to prove those alleged facts and had them sworn, but the jury found no cause for action; yet, I repeat, that fact was held secret until by accident it came out that Mr. Newberry was relieved of the charge that was made against him of having indulged in corruption—either he or his friends.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. MOSES. Will the Senator from Michigan be good enough to state by whose orders this secrecy was maintained?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can not tell; I do not know by whose order it was done. I simply know secrecy was employed. The Senator may imagine that I am indulging in suspicion when I put 2 and 2 together; but when I remember the origin of Mr. Ford's candidacy and close it with his statement in Los Angeles the other day, that he would spend a million to keep Mr. Newberry out of the Senate, I can understand that this may have been a part of the scheme to defeat Mr. Newberry in that election which was being waged at the time, and, failing in that, to keep him out of the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator desires to deny that, I will yield.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will continue to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. Does the Senator from Michigan know the name of the presiding judge in these proceedings—whether he was a judge for the district in which the proceedings were held, or whether he was an outside judge who had been brought in there to hold this term?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think Judge Clayton does not belong to the southern district of New York; and he was the presiding judge.

Mr. MOSES. Does the Senator from Michigan know from what judicial district Judge Clayton comes?

Mr. TOWNSEND. He comes from the Alabama district, whichever that is. I do not remember the number of the judicial district which includes Alabama.

Mr. MOSES. Had Judge Clayton been sitting regularly in the court when this proceeding was had?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know.

Mr. MOSES. I do not wish to break in upon the Senator's argument, but I have heard that judges from outside jurisdictions are frequently called to sit in the Federal courts in New York for reasons which it may be improper to discuss here, but which in cases like this would justify many deductions.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not able to hear what the Senator from New Hampshire is saying.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. My understanding was that one branch of this case was tried before some judge who is resident in New York and another branch of it came before Judge Clayton. Judge Clayton is one of the judges who is constantly ordered into other jurisdictions to try cases.

Mr. TOWNSEND. He was ordered into this jurisdiction, anyway; that is certain.

Mr. POMERENE. And it is hardly a fair inference, knowing Judge Clayton as we do, to suggest that he would be guilty of any improper conduct on the bench.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am not suggesting it.

Mr. POMERENE. Allow me to make a further suggestion. I know nothing about the so-called secrecy of the proceedings to which the Senator refers, but I do know a little something about the practice which prevails. Where a criminal case is not pending on a transcript, it is not usual to give publicity to any grand-jury proceedings, so that even if these proceedings were secret, it was simply the practice which prevailed in every other inquiry.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It fitted pretty well in this scheme, if there was a scheme. I disclaim any——

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator, of course, can draw any inference he desires.

Mr. TOWNSEND. One moment. I disclaim any attempt or disposition to discredit Judge Clayton, with whom I served in the other House and for whom I have great respect. I am simply reciting the facts. The Senator from New Hampshire asked me who presided, and I told him.

Mr. President, as I stated a moment ago, this case is going to take a long while to present. I have some papers which I wish to produce at the proper time and read to the Senate, touching the Ford activities in the campaign, touching the classes of advertisements that were used, and everything that was done, as well as what was done by Mr. Newberry and his friends.

I ought to say, in answer to one statement of the Senator from Ohio, that I doubt if he has any affidavit or any statement worthy of the least credence which shows that Mr. Newberry's friends have tried to destroy any evidence. There is evidence—and I shall present it to the Senate—in the form of affidavits that the Federal Government, through some of its representatives, indulged in the most unconscionable and improper methods imaginable to get evidence against Mr. Newberry, but obtained nothing of value. I shall be able to show to the Senate that representatives of Mr. Ford, but claiming to be representatives of the Federal Government or of some agency of the Government, went to various county clerks who had the custody of the ballots and the election records and sought to investigate or to look into those ballots, and in some cases took the records out of the office and carried them away into some secret room.

I have in mind one case in particular, where they came into the clerk's office when there was a girl in charge, the clerk being out, and represented to her that they were legal officers of the Government, entitled to all of the papers connected with the election. So she handed over to them the election returns, the tally sheets, and everything of that kind, and they took them out of the office. When the clerk returned, he went out after the records and brought them back, but not until these agents had had them for some time. If there has been any effort to tamper with the ballots and election returns in Michigan, it has not been exerted by Mr. Newberry's friends.

I think I speak for Mr. Newberry when I say that he courts the fullest investigation as to the election and as to the primary, if an investigation as to the primary shall be held valid, at the proper time and by the proper court. He joined with Mr. Ford's attorney to preserve the ballots. He it was who instituted the proceedings providing for a State law to preserve the ballots, for fear the objection might be raised that the Federal court did not have jurisdiction over the matter. He stands ready now, as do his friends, to disclose the facts before the proper tribunal; but, Mr. President, this Senate shall not with my consent—and if it is done it must be done with my utmost opposition—go out and investigate this case ex parte for the purpose of trying to shape public sentiment that may be able to operate upon the next Senate, which is to convene after March 4.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SWANSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator used the expression "this Senate shall not with my consent go out and investigate this case ex parte." Does the Senator mean that anybody proposes to go out and conduct an investigation where both sides shall not have the privilege of being represented?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no faith in an investigation that would be made at this time. I will say that to the Senator.

Mr. REED. That is highly complimentary to the membership of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It has been represented here by some Senators that all they wanted to do was to preserve the testimony, which was likely to be lost. That is not the attitude of the Senator from Ohio. He desires to go out and take all the testimony he can in reference to this case. Now, necessarily there is not enough time to take all the testimony before the Congress ends. I feel sure, however, that an effort will be made to make a case against Mr. Newberry. So far as the ballots are concerned, of course they could not be counted in a year, if that is what is intended. Those 438,000 ballots, in 2,166 ballot boxes scattered all over Michigan, could not be counted in a year, and it is not the intention to count them. The Senator says he wants to preserve some of those stub checks in Detroit. Oh, they will all be preserved; there is no disposition to destroy them. The very witnesses who, it is stated, did not testify are among the very highest class of gentlemen in the State of Michigan.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. Is the statement correct, that I made on the authority of representations laid before the committee, to the effect that the correspondence of this campaign committee had been burned?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I presume so—a good deal of it. Does the Senator know a campaign committee on earth that preserves all of its correspondence which has accumulated during a campaign? Does the Senator do that?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes, Mr. President; I have all of my correspondence, or did have, for a considerable time after the election.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the most remarkable statement I ever heard in my life. I have had some experience in campaigns——

Mr. POMERENE. I never had anything to cover up.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; probably not. That induces me to say something that comes into my mind, but I guess I will not do so.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not want that to be misunderstood. I did not mean that as referring to the Senator, of course.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I know that it is absolutely true that campaign committees do not keep their correspondence for months after an election where there has not been the slightest suggestion that there is any part of it which will ever be needed. It can not be done, and it is not done. But there will be nothing more destroyed. If you want anything that has not already been destroyed, as the Senator suggests, you can enjoin through the State courts the destruction of anything that is necessary in this proposed hearing or investigation.

I believe that the Senator is laboring under a great misapprehension if he believes that there is anything in this campaign on the part of Mr. Newberry and his friends that they want to cover up. I believe that they made a truthful statement as to the expenditure of money. It was too much money, but they believed they had a right to spend what they did in advertising. Why did they feel that way?

Mr. Ford is probably the best-advertised man in the United States outside of public life, and is better advertised than most men in public life. He spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in 1916 advertising his peace propaganda and the reelection of Mr. Wilson. He has advertised in every section of the United States, and especially in Michigan. He has a Ford agency in every little hamlet in our State, and I shall show from the affidavits here that those agencies generally were Ford's headquarters during both the primary and the election campaign. I shall show that, while the records disclose, according to his report in Wayne County, that only about $1,800 were subscribed to his personal campaign fund by his friends—and his friends constitute those who have business relations with him, the men who contract to furnish him wheels, auto bodies, and other parts for his cars—contributed generously to the Democratic State central committee, and that committee employed its efforts largely to elect Mr. Ford.

I repeat that one pamphlet alone issued by the Ford people in his campaign is reported to have cost more than is returned by the Democratic State central committee and the Ford senatorial committee put together.

I am not using this as an argument to excuse Mr. Newberry if he has violated the law, because I know that it is no excuse for a wrongful act that some one else has done a similar thing; but I am thinking of the candidate who was running against him. That candidate was advertised all over the State of Michigan. He has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in accomplishing it. He had 45,000 employees, and those employees were notified by their superintendents that Mr. Ford was a candidate for the Senate.

Mr. Newberry had the Federal employees against him. There probably were 10,000 of them in Michigan. For some strange reason——

Mr. REED. And the State employees for him and the county employees for him, I presume?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know about that; some of them probably were, but they were legitimately interested in the campaign, but I am talking about the forces arrayed against Mr. Newberry. Another strange thing that I wish to suggest is this: The President put Mr. Ford into the race for Senator. The President had openly opposed the election of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], because he thought that Senator had not always supported his war measures. The President went into the State of Georgia to defeat the junior Senator from that State [Mr. HARDWICK], because he alleged that Senator was not loyal; he went into Mississippi to defeat the junior Senator from that State [Mr. VARDAMAN] for the same reason. Yet, he took up Mr. Ford in our State, who had approved of all of the opposition that was made to the war measures and would not be able to stand the acid test of any war proposition, and asked the people of our State to nominate that man as Senator from Michigan. Mr. Newberry had those influences against him.

There is another strange thing, which I shall show at the proper time. We have a list of the subscribers to the Ford campaign fund filed in Michigan. I think something over 100 postmasters subscribed to the fund; that is, to the fund of the Democratic State central committee, which was in reality the Ford fund. A peculiar thing occurred in regard to that. In looking over the list I found subscriptions of $33.33, $61, $70, and all kinds of peculiar sums, which I thought were very strange to be put down on a subscription blank. I had some of them figured out. In one county, for instance, it was found that all of the subscriptions were exactly 1½ per cent of the salaries paid to those officers. In another county the subscriptions paid by the postmasters subscribing to the fund amounted exactly to 3 per cent. There was method in it; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. Newberry had all of those influences against him. His committee believed that under the law they could advertise and circulate any amount of publicity literature in the State of Michigan. Mr. Newberry's friends believed that could be done legally, and they did it; but I am informed and believe that not one dollar was expended to corrupt a voter.

Mr. Ford advertised his influence. He advertised his benefactions. He advertised the assumed fact that he was going to turn over his profits out of his war contracts to the Government. Why, you and I know that under the bill that is now pending 80 per cent of those profits will be taken in taxes anyway by the Government. But he now states in his interview in California that he can not control the minority members of the company, and he does not know what they are going to do with their share of the profits, but it is his share, of course, that he is disposing of for political purposes; and 80 per cent of that already has the Government lien upon it.

Mr. President, I mention this not as an excuse for any improper expenditure of money, because if it has been improper I shall not countenance it; but I am thinking of the kind of a campaign they had in Michigan. It was not the campaign of a poor man against a rich one.

It was the campaign of a man of the greatest influence, the best-advertised man in our State, against a man who was not personally known by our people. During the Spanish War he enlisted in the Navy and served through it. He was afterwards made Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and then, by Mr. Roosevelt, made Secretary of the Navy. When the late war broke out, he enlisted in the Navy again, and was made a commander in the third naval district. His boys entered the service, as I have stated. His life has been honorable and distinguished by exalted service to his country. His high character has never been questioned. His honor and integrity have never been impeached. He has, however, never mixed politically with our people. He became a candidate for Senator while he was serving in the Navy, and the only way that he could reach the people, as against the influence of Mr. Ford, was through the press; and his friends used that press most liberally. There is, however, very little difference between the amount of advertising space he occupied and that which was occupied by Mr. Ford. The only difference is that Mr. Newberry's committee reported $176,000 expenditures, and Mr. Ford reported through his committee $53,000.

So, Mr. President, if this Senate feels that in a matter over which it has no proper jurisdiction it wishes to occupy the time which should be devoted to the business of this Senate, it can do so; but before we are through here the hundreds of affidavits which I have that bear on this subject shall be presented to the Senate, because, as I said before, Mr. Newberry has been attacked in the Senate, and the other side must be shown. I believe in fair play, and if public sentiment is sought it must be intelligently bared.

That is my position, Mr. President. I do not wish anybody to understand that I wish to stand in the way of rapid, speedy, intelligent consideration of legislation that the country needs. The Post Office appropriation bill, which it is proposed to displace by this political measure—because, I care not what you say about it, it is nothing else than that—should be considered and completed.

Great emergencies growing out of reconstruction, the problems which are on our hands for solution, have no business to be laid aside for the purpose of making an investigation that may be ignored by the next Senate. It may absolutely ignore the whole of your work and have another committee investigate, and we will have spent thousands of dollars in a vain thing, the result being simply to incite partisan feeling and possibly prejudice, when there should be no prejudice in the trial of a case before the next Senate.

Mr. President, I have said this because I have felt that some of these facts should be known. The statement of the Senator from Ohio has compelled me to say this much in reply. I shall be more explicit if the resolution is taken up. I have prepared this case in due form, systematically, having affidavits bearing upon all the points which I desire to present to the Senate, and if it is your pleasure to take up this resolution now and displace all of the proper legislation of the Senate, I am prepared to go ahead with it.

Mr. President, I ask consent to insert as a part of my remarks the temporary restraining order and the permanent injunction order issued by both our Federal courts, and also a copy of the Michigan statute which was passed this week.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House enrolled act 1.

An act to provide for the preservation of ballots cast for the office of United States Senator in cases of contested elections, or in cases where notices of contested elections may be given, or in cases where any judicial proceedings may have been instituted preliminary to contesting elections to the office of United States Senator.

The people of the State of Michigan enact:

SECTION 1. Whenever the election of a United States Senator is contested before the United States Senate, or notice of a contested election for United States Senator may be given, or whenever any judicial proceeding may be instituted preliminary to a contested election involving the right to a seat in said United States Senate from the State of Michigan, and it shall be made to appear to the Supreme Court of the State of Michigan that there is danger that the ballot boxes used in the election of said United States Senator within said State will not be properly preserved, the seals upon said boxes interfered with, said ballot boxes opened or the ballots therein interfered with or destroyed, such supreme court shall grant a restraining order directed to the officers having custody of said ballot boxes within said State restraining them and all other persons from interfering with said boxes, seals, or locks thereon, or the ballots therein except as therein provided.

SEC. 2. Application for such restraining order may be made by any candidate for such office and shall be made by petition duly verified under oath setting up the material facts relative to the election and the election contest involved. Such petition shall be heard in open court, and the court shall give such notice of the hearing on such application as it shall deem sufficient to the candidates for the office of United States Senator in the election concerning which the application was filed and to such persons as shall be named in such application. Pending such hearing any justice of the supreme court may, in his discretion, grant a temporary order restraining any interference with said ballot boxes or the ballots therein.

SEC. 3. Service of any restraining order may be made personally, as in the case of the service of other process of said court, or such service may be made by registered mail. In cases of emergency, notice of the issuance of a restraining order may be given to the officers to whom the same is directed by telegraph or by telephone in advance of the actual service of said order, and after such notice, whether by telegraph or telephone, said officers shall be charged with the same duty with regard to the preservation of said ballot boxes and the ballots therein as after the service of said order.

SEC. 4. On being served with a copy of a permanent restraining order issued by said court, it shall be the duty of all officers having the custody of ballot boxes containing ballots cast at said election for said office forthwith to deliver the same to the county clerks of the counties in which such officers reside. It shall be the duty of said county clerks to receive such ballot boxes containing such ballots and to receipt therefor to the officers so delivering them. Said county clerks shall thereupon deposit said ballot boxes containing said ballots in some secure place to await the action of the commissioners herein provided for.

SEC. 5. Upon issuing permanent restraining order as herein provided, the supreme court shall name three commissioners who shall proceed to the offices of the several county clerks as soon as may be, open said ballot boxes, remove the ballots therefrom, place them in packages securely wrapped and sealed and so marked as to show in what voting districts such ballots were cast.

SEC. 6. Such packages shall be sealed by said commissioners and redeposited with said county clerks, and it shall be the duty of said county clerks to again place said packages of ballots in some secure place pending the further order of the court. It shall also be the duty of said commissioners to make a statement, duly signed by them, to be included within each such package, as to the character and condition of the ballot boxes when opened by them as herein provided, and of the condition of the ballots within such boxes. Each county clerk shall thereupon notify the several officers of election within the county that such ballot boxes have been released and direct such officers of election to appear and secure said boxes.

SEC. 7. The commissioners, as herein provided for, shall give public notice of the time when they will appear at each county seat for the purpose of removing the ballots from the ballot boxes, as herein provided, and such removal shall be publicly made in the presence of the county clerk and judge of probate in the office of the county clerk during office hours.

SEC. 8. It shall be the right of each candidate to the office of United States Senator at such election to be present in person at such removal, or to be represented thereat.

SEC. 9. The compensation of the commissioners herein provided for shall be fixed by the Supreme Court and such court shall allow such traveling and personal expenses of such commissioners as it may deem proper. All allowances to commissioners shall be taxed by the court as costs in the proceeding.

SEC. 10. Any officer who shall violate the terms of any such restraining order shall be in contempt of court and shall, in addition to such penalty as may be imposed thereby, be liable to a fine of $1,000.

SEC. 11. Instead of filing the petition for relief provided for in this act with the Supreme Court of the State of Michigan application may be made in like manner to the circuit court for the County of Ingham, and when application is so made such court shall have full jurisdiction to make all orders, name the commissioners, and otherwise exercise all necessary authority to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 12. It is the intention of this act to furnish a speedy and effective means for the preservation of evidence of the intention of voters in the case of elections to the office of United States Senator. It is remedial in character and shall be construed in such manner as fully to carry out the intention herein expressed.

This act is ordered to take immediate effect.

[SEAL.] CHAS. J. POTTER, Clerk.
By CHAS. L. FITCH, Deputy.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I can follow the Senator's example by expressing regret, as he did, at the attitude taken. He expressed regret at the attitude taken by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and I must express regret at the attitude taken by the Senator from Michigan.

If I can have the attention of the Senate, I want to state my position on this case.

As everybody knows, I am a Democrat. I am a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. After the primary in Michigan, and before the election, an effort was made to cause an investigation of the Michigan case. A great deal of talk and comment was had in the newspapers with regard to the large expenditure of money in that State. I took a pronounced position against having an investigation at that time, because it seemed to me that, while clearly within the jurisdiction of the Senate under some of its powers, such an investigation would have the inevitable effect of influencing the election, and that, if it was tried in an artful way, one side might be presented to the voters before the election and the other side have no opportunity to be heard. Therefore I took the position that it was not fair at that time to investigate, although I believed that we had the absolute right to investigate that question, if under no other power, under the broad right that the Senate has, through any of its committees, to investigate any public matter which may demand public legislation, a right which we are exercising every day, and under which a half dozen committees are at this moment proceeding.

After the election was held I took the position, and I still take the position, that, assuming that the credentials of Mr. Newberry are in proper and legal form, upon their being filed here with the Senate he is entitled, at any time after the 4th of March, to take his oath of office and to take his seat, and to retain that seat until and unless the Senate of the United States, upon proper proceedings, shall oust him therefrom.

I make this statement because I want it understood that, so far as I am concerned, I have tried to assume, if it is possible for me to assume, a judicial attitude—the attitude that ought to be assumed by every Member of the Senate, not only now, but throughout the course of these proceedings, until the final vote. It may be too much to expect from flesh and blood, although, since all the world is to become good and perfectly unselfish, possibly a little modicum of it might get into the Senate Chamber.

But now the case takes another phase. A contest, or protest in the nature of a contest, is duly filed with the Senate, and that is referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for such proper action as it may see fit to take. The committee met, called before it the counsel of the two contending parties, and these gentlemen agreed, first, that they were willing to preserve the ballots, and agreed upon orders of court which were to be entered prohibiting the destruction of the ballots; and until last evening I had assumed, and assumed upon the strength of telegrams that had been sent to the committee, that those court orders broadly preserved the ballots intact until such time as the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate of the United States should take them into his possession. But it now appears that, at least in one district, the order, while reciting the conditions I have just stated, added this clause, in substance and effect: That the ballots must be taken by the Sergeant at Arms before the next election, and as the next election occurs early in April, the situation presented is that the Sergeant at Arms has no authority to take those ballots, and will have no authority to take those ballots, until after the next election, unless this Senate shall grant him that authority by the passage of this resolution, and orders to be issued thereunder. That is to say, if we do not pass this resolution between now and next April and take possession of these ballots between now and next April, the ballots will, in the judicial district to which I am referring, be destroyed, because another election is to be held.

Mr. SWANSON. Is that a Federal judicial district?

Mr. REED. A Federal judicial district—one-half of the State, I assume. There is an eastern and a western district, if I am correctly informed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The same injunction is in force by both courts, in both districts.

Mr. REED. The same exception is invoked, then.

Mr. President, that presents this question: In order to preserve these ballots this Senate must take action. Now, I am taking a statement that was made to me as to the contents of this decree. I have not myself examined the original decree, but I saw what purported to be a copy, and I guess it will be found that I am not mistaken. Therefore, the question which lies at the threshold is, Shall these ballots be permitted to be destroyed for want of a Senate resolution giving authority to investigate, and authority, under the investigation, for the Sergeant at Arms to take possession of the ballots?

It is true that we are now told, and it is the first information I have had—and, of course, I accept the word of the Senator from Michigan—that the legislature has passed an act which allows certain proceedings to be taken, and which, it is assumed on the face, can authorize some method of saving the ballots; but we do not know whether or not the jurisdiction there will be challenged, whether or not the principle of law will be invoked that has once been invoked in Michigan, namely, that the State authorities have no jurisdiction or control over the election of men to the United States Senate, which I understand to be the rulings of their courts. If that principle is invoked, the question may arise, and very likely will arise, whether this statute is itself constitutional.

Therefore the only safe thing to do, the only prudent thing to do, is to get possession of these ballots. All that I have said now, with reference to getting possession of the ballots applies to any other kind of documentary evidence, and it applies also to any class of evidence which is likely to be lost or destroyed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand that the Senator thinks that a State has no right to preserve ballots cast in the State for a State officer?

Mr. REED. Oh, for State officers, yes.

Mr. LODGE. They are all on one ballot.

Mr. REED. That is true; but, as I understand the law—and the Senator will permit me to say that I only heard the proposed bill read before our committee some weeks ago—that bill gives to the aggrieved party, or a party claiming to be aggrieved, the right to go into court; and the party in this instance would be the candidate for the United States Senate. Now, I do not say that that point is accurate. I did not rise here to argue the legal question. It is a matter upon which I might change my own mind. I am now discussing the question of the propriety of saving this evidence, the fact that it is the safe method to pursue; and I am here to claim not only that it is the proper thing to do, but that every honest man ought to want to help keep this evidence.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri further yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I never heard of this law of Michigan until I heard it stated by the Senator from Michigan on the floor this afternoon, but I now have it in my hand. It is—

A bill to provide for the preservation of ballots cast for the office of United States Senator in cases of contested elections, or in cases where notices of contested elections may be given, or in cases where any judicial proceedings may have been instituted preliminary to contesting elections to the office of United States Senator.

And then comes the bill, which is quite a long and elaborate one, and which seems, as well as I can tell by glancing at it, to cover everything pretty thoroughly. I should think it would be well to have it printed in the RECORD, where we could all see it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I want to say that I propose to have that bill, together with these orders, inserted in the RECORD. That bill has an amendment to it which gave it immediate effect, and which does not appear on the copy which was sent to me. That is all the difference there is. The bill takes immediate effect, and I am going to ask to have it put in the RECORD.

Mr. REED. I understand the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts with regard to the bill, but the point I am making is this, and I am simply suggesting it. I am not giving it as an opinion, for I have had no opportunity to examine the Michigan authorities. It has been stated to me—indeed, it was stated in argument before the committee—that the courts of Michigan had held that they had no authority over any contest or over any election concerning a Congressman or a Senator, and that that was a question of jurisdiction.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on that point I see that this bill provides, in section 11, as follows:

Instead of filing the petition for relief provided for in this act with the Supreme Court of the State of Michigan, application may be made in like manner to the circuit court for the county of Ingham, and when application is so made such court shall have full jurisdiction to make all orders, name commissioners, and otherwise exercise all necessary authority to carry out the purposes of this act.

I assume that that is the circuit court of the United States, is it not?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; the provision is that the application may be made to our State circuit court.

Mr. LODGE. It is the State circuit court, then.

Mr. REED. I shall probably have these decisions before I take my seat, and I shall be glad to return to that subject.

Mr. President, I am indifferent to that question. I repeat what I said, that every honest man ought to want to have the honest evidence in this case before the Senate at the proper time for its consideration, and that every scrap of that evidence should be preserved. Now, there may be differences of opinion between honest men as to how the evidence should be preserved and who should preserve it, but as to the main question I repeat that no honest man wants anything except all of the evidence in this case preserved and presented at the proper time.

That brings us to the question of what is the proper time to get the evidence. Every man who has ever tried half a dozen lawsuits knows that the proper time to get the evidence is just as soon after the occurrence as you can get on the ground with legal authority to act. The recollections of witnesses are fresh; the documents have not been destroyed or forgotten; perjury has not yet been devised, generally speaking; and the opportunity to get at the truth is so much greater, because of the proximity to the time, that unless there are overmastering difficulties time should never be allowed to lapse. Particularly in a case involving fraud or crime I have often remarked that I would give more for the first 10 days than for the next 10 years in the matter of investigation; so that from the practical standpoint the proper time is as soon as possible.

That brings us, then, to the question of who has the right to take this testimony and preserve it. I grant that it would be unfair for the present body of Senators to undertake to pass upon the qualifications of a man whose term begins on the 4th of March. Indeed, we are powerless to pass upon that question, because he does not formally present his credentials until that time. But is it possible that the Senate of the United States does not possess the power and jurisdiction to preserve the evidence in regard to a matter which concerns its very make-up and existence? Is there anybody who believes the Senate is so helpless as that?

In the first place, we are a continuing body; and, like other bodies that have brains, we take judicial notice of public events. We not only have judicial notice, but we have official notice, that an election has taken place in Michigan; and we not only have public information of which we can take judicial notice, but we have direct notice that Mr. Newberry has had his credentials issued, and that they will be presented; and we have filed, I assume, with the Secretary of the Senate, the expense accounts of the candidates for this office; and we have the right to investigate those expense accounts and find out whether the affidavits back of those expense accounts are true affidavits or are false affidavits; whether perjury is being attempted to be foisted upon this body by either one of these candidates or by anybody in their behalf. The jurisdiction of this body now to investigate any affidavit filed with its Secretary and to investigate the truth of that affidavit can hardly be denied by anybody. It seems to me inconceivable that it should be denied.

But, Mr. President, counsel for both sides in this case appeared before the committee and each of them protested that he desired to preserve all of the evidence in the case. I am taking no side in this case. I am simply insisting upon the right and duty of the Senate to preserve this evidence and to get it as soon as possible, but I say the only proper thing for lawyers to do and for Senators to do, whether they represent merely as friends or partisans, or whether they represent as paid counsel—and of course Senators do not do that; I do not mean that—either one of these contestants, the only proper attitude for honest men to take is that they want the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Any man who gets in any other attitude than that will go far toward convincing me and toward convincing others that his client or his friend or the man whose cause he advocates has to hide from the truth.

Now, why have these attempts been made to delay? I say it with a good deal of sorrow, but I have witnessed tactics here that seem to me like the tactics of lawyers playing for a continuance in a bad case. Particularly when you get near the end of a term of court, you frequently find that the attorney for the defendant comes into court and has a bad cold that morning, and will they not please put off the case until the next day? The next day some little trifling thing happens and the next day something else, and finally the term of the court has expired.

Is it possible that any man would take the position or does take the position that this present Senate will not get the evidence honestly, and therefore they can not be trusted to get the evidence honestly? Let us see. Under this resolution, if it is passed, the Committee on Privileges and Elections will proceed probably through a subcommittee of three or five or seven men. The majority in this case would undoubtedly be Democrats, and there would be the usual minority representation for the Republicans. The committee would proceed to take the evidence. If the committee took the evidence without giving proper representation to both sides, the Senate, which would meet to pass upon that evidence, would throw it out as unworthy. If the committee refused to hear evidence that could be properly considered, the committee of the Senate that convenes after March 4 would supply that evidence. If the committee did anything that is unjust or unfair or improper, then the Senate can correct its conduct or entirely throw out the evidence. Nobody can be harmed.

A Republican Senate, organized upon the very vote of one of the contestants, and by his vote alone—that is, his vote being the determining vote—will organize the next Senate and will try the case from the evidence that is now to be gathered. If that evidence has not been properly or fairly gathered, I repeat, that body thus organized, that Committee on Privileges and Elections then organized, with that majority of Republicans greater than the Republicans have in the Senate, will proceed to consider the evidence that may be taken and submitted by the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. There would still be one vote. Strictly speaking, his vote would not be the determining vote.

Mr. REED. I stand corrected. It is not important.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it is important.

Mr. REED. No; it is not important on the point. So no man can claim that this is an unfair proceeding unless he boldly claims that the Committee on Privileges and Elections as now constituted would do a very scurvy piece of investigating.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator a question in that connection?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. It is not in connection with the character of the committee, of which I have no doubt whatever. Does the Senator think that the committee of a Congress which has died—an expired Congress—can go on until the new Congress comes in and investigate or do any work?

Mr. REED. I have not the slightest doubt that the Senate can appoint a committee now with authority to investigate during the session of the Senate or during the recess, and that committee will continue to be a live, working committee until the next Congress is convened and organized. This is a continuing body.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I agree.

Mr. REED. We can proceed in that way always.

Mr. LODGE. That would be a special committee, the Senator means?

Mr REED. No; not a special committee. The Committee on Privileges and Elections, if this resolution is passed, will be proceeding under the authority of the resolution. The resolution would authorize it to proceed to investigate.

Mr. LODGE. Then the present Committee on Privileges and Elections could go right on after the 4th of March?

Mr. REED. Unless we are called together. If we are called together, then, of course, the new organization would take its place. That would displace the committee because a new committee would then be organized.

Mr. LODGE. Our rules require that the committees shall be appointed at the beginning of a Congress. I only want to know if the Senator meant that this committee would continue its investigation.

Mr. REED. No; not after the organization of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. No; after the 4th of March? Of course, it could not act after the new organization, because there would be a different committee.

Mr. REED. After March 4, if we are not called together in extra session, and it ought.

Mr. President, I think I have said enough to make it plain that no injustice can be done.

I am sorry the Senator from Michigan has stepped out, because I wanted to reply to some things he just said. Will some one ask him to come in?

Mr. TOWNSEND entered the Chamber.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator for coming in. The Senator from Michigan spoke of an attempt to create a political atmosphere about this investigation. As nearly as I am able to interpret or gather the Senator's thought, it is that if we began the investigation now it would have some effect upon the ultimate decision of the Senate. I beg to say that whenever this evidence is taken, whether it be taken by the present committee of the Senate or whether it is taken by a committee organized after the 4th of March, it is going to take a certain length of time to get the evidence. The minute you begin gathering the evidence, no matter what committee takes it, the effect that the Senator spoke of will follow, that is to say, the public discussion of the evidence from day to day will have its effect upon the public mind. That is a thing that is inevitable in a discussion or in an investigation and can not be escaped in any investigation unless you have it behind closed doors, and since we have "open covenants openly arrived at" I presume that will be followed even in the investigation of an election in Michigan.

Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with all his great power and force told us about things that Mr. Ford had done and gave us pretty clearly to understand that he expected to prove when this investigation proceeds that Mr. Ford's statement of expenses is untrue, or that his committee's statement is untrue—I do not know which made the statement—that many improper things were done by Mr. Ford. The moment it was suggested that anybody had any charges to make against Mr. Ford the chairman of this committee, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] caused this resolution to be amended so that the jurisdiction of the committee would extend to cover all the irregularities in the election.

So far as I am concerned I am in a position to be the justest judge and the most disinterested individual in the world as this trial proceeds. I am told that one of these gentlemen is a rock-ribbed simon-pure Republican who never puts a pencil across the name of a Republican on a ballot. I am told that the other gentleman never wittingly voted for a Democrat. I confess I can not see much political choice between them. I am told, in fact, I read the statement of Mr. Ford after he was nominated, that he was neither a Republican nor a Democrat, and I confess as between a man who is neither a Republican nor a Democrat and a Republican, I lean toward the Republican.

I am not interested, sir, in the protection of Mr. Ford nor in the protection of Mr. Newberry. I am interested in the protection of the American ballot box where the American voter has the one chance of a freeman to express his choice. If those ballot boxes are contaminated by the use of money or fraud or force, I do not care who is the guilty party, we owe it to ourselves, we owe it to the Senate, and we owe it to our country and to posterity that the gentleman should be brought to book. If anybody has filed any false affidavits here that fact ought to be known and nobody ought to try to cover the facts up. I do not charge that has been the case.

It seems that up in the State of Michigan we have this peculiar sort of thing. The Republicans nominated a very wealthy man, the Democrats nominated a very wealthy man, and you have got a race of two rich men for an office. I do not like it myself. I do not think riches ought to bar a man from office, but if there is no better reason for a man to run for office than that he has great riches it would be better that he should remain in private life. When you get men with great fortunes competing for these great offices you are liable to get overenthusiastic lieutenants who spend vast sums of money. It just so happens in this world that the average man who has accumulated a good many million dollars gets it into his head as an ordinary proposition that every other man has his price, and that somehow or other his money will command the souls, and consciences, and bodies of men. It is not much wonder that 1,800 years ago Jesus Christ told us that "it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God." I do not make indiscriminate attacks upon wealth. I am stating my position here to-day very plainly and very bluntly. When the only reason why men are picked out to run for the United States Senate is because they have a large bank account, the man who picks out that sort of a man, if he picks him out for that sort of a reason, does a disservice to his country.

Mr. President, there have been very serious charges made in this case, too serious for the Senate to postpone action; too serious for delay. There have been some things done of a very suspicious character; that is, it is charged that they have been done.

The Senator from Michigan states that it is customary to burn the papers of a political committee after an election. I do not know about that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I said the ordinary correspondence.

Mr. REED. Yes; I do not know about that. So far as I am concerned, I have in boxes put away, I think, every political letter I ever received, and if you have any idea of writing me one that I can not dig up on you some day you had better hesitate about writing it. That is not because I am suspicious, but it is because those letters constitute the record of those times, and one never knows when he may want to go back to find out an event or to fix the name of some one who did him a service or a disservice.

It may be, however, that some committees and that, generally, committees, within a short time after an election, destroy their correspondence. But I will tell you what they do not do. They do not lock letters up in a vault and put a guard over them, and keep them locked up in that way until they have an opportunity to burn them, and then burn them; and it is charged that is exactly what took place here. I never knew of the political correspondence of an honest committee being of such a dangerous character that it had to be locked up in a vault behind a time lock and guarded until the match could turn it into ashes and the wind blow it away.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Do I understand the Senator to say that any such thing as that happened or has been charged in this case?

Mr. REED. It was charged.

Mr. TOWNSEND. They allege in their petition that these papers were destroyed before they gave any notice that there would be a contest or that they would be needed.

Mr. REED. That does not answer.

Mr. TOWNSEND. They had been already destroyed.

Mr. REED. It was charged before the committee that certain papers of this committee were kept under lock and key and guard until such time as they could be burned. They may have been perfectly innocent; it may be that this is not a fact; I am not trying this case; I am only trying to impress upon Senators the seriousness of the charges.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Can the Senator conceive of any reason for putting the ballots under lock and key when there had been no question of suspicion? Could they not have destroyed them at any time? Why would they need to put them under lock and key?

Mr. REED. Now the Senator is inviting me into the field of psychology. I do not know what was in their mind. I can conceive of circumstances, though, that would make this exactly the course to be followed. There may be a settlement coming yet between some of these gentlemen who had handled the accounts; some of these papers may have been essential for that; and it may have been essential that they should be preserved long enough for the settlement to take place, and then very desirable that they should be burned. I simply give the Senator that as one illustration that comes to my mind at this moment.

Another charge that is made is that while $176,000 is admitted to have been expended in a State—what is the population of the State of Michigan, I will ask the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Something like 3,000 000.

Mr. REED. In a State of about 3,000,000 population it is charged that, in addition to this, it is pretty thoroughly known that $160,000 on the outside was expended. It is charged that one of Mr. Newberry's relatives expended $99,900, all, I apprehend, in the interest of moral progress and reform. But I do not say that this took place; I hope that it will be disproven. It is charged, Mr. President, that there is evidence of a systematic and deliberate preparation for the making of false returns—a very ugly and nasty charge.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, does not the Senator from Missouri also know that those same charges are made against the elections in Nevada, in Montana, in Kentucky, and in Georgia?

Mr. REED. No; I never heard of this particular charge that I am speaking of in any election, except in the Michigan election.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Some of those charges are before the committee.

Mr. REED. Of course we could not try those other cases in this particular resolution, but if anybody will bring to the Senate substantial reasons for investigating other elections, I shall be ready to investigate them all.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I simply mentioned that for this reason: Every charge of fraud is accompanied with such statements. As I said before, I do not believe that anybody seriously believes that any of those practices were employed in the election in Michigan. I do not believe that there is a question about that. Those are stock terms that are used in condemnation usually of a proceeding of this kind.

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President; I am not speaking of general stock charges. I am speaking of a charge to the effect that letters can be produced showing that responsible parties, acting for Mr. Newberry or for his committee, sent out letters to men who were handling money, so phrased as to indicate to them that they were to return as expended by them only a certain amount of money, whereas in truth they had expended a much larger sum of money.

It is claimed—I do not say truthfully—that this was a system, and that it was widespread. If that is true, it would afford the most abundant reason for locking the records in a vault or for burning them quickly.

Now, the statement is made that Mr. Ford got out a pamphlet that cost eighty or ninety thousand dollars, and that the cost of that is not returned. Mr. President, if Mr. Ford got out a pamphlet that cost eighty or ninety thousand dollars and did not return it as an honest man should, unless he could very clearly show that he did not know about it, I would say that he was not fit to sit in the Senate. I will say exactly the same thing about anybody else. No man has a right to come in here with tainted title; no man has a right to enter this Chamber with an affidavit in his hand containing perjury. But this is the first time I have heard that charge. Let us find out whether Mr. Ford did it, just the same as we find out whether Mr. Newberry did certain things; and let those of you who naturally desire to have an additional colleague upon that side of the Chamber take the position we will take. Let us take the lid off, and take it off now; look at the contents and make a record, and let the results, be what they may, only so long as they accord with the facts of the case.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to state that I have not charged that Mr. Ford got out this pamphlet. I verily believe that neither Mr. Ford nor Mr. Newberry knew personally of much that was going on in their campaigns. I said that the pamphlet was issued in Mr. Ford's behalf and circulated—probably 500,000 copies of it—by first-class letter postage over the State of Michigan, in addition to the vast numbers that were circulated on the street corners of almost every city in the State of Michigan.

Mr. REED. Well, I am glad to know that that reflection is not made on Mr. Ford, as I am glad to know that no direct reflection is made on any man. I do not want any man besmirched unless he is guilty.

It is charged that Mr. Newberry filed a disclaimer with regard to any knowledge of any moneys that were expended—I think I state that correctly—and it is charged again that Mr. Newberry was in intimate and close connection with his campaign, and that he did know what was going on the same as the ordinary candidate would know. That is a question of fact to be tried. I do not know what the fact may be; but I do know that if it should transpire that Mr. Newberry had misrepresented the facts and said he did not know when he did know, that would be a very important circumstance bearing upon his right to a seat in this body.

In this connection, while I do not desire to take much of the time of the Senate, I am reminded that there is on file with the committee a document which contains this purported copy of a letter from Gov. Chase S. Osborn to Mr. Newberry. Let me read it; it is very significant. The letter is dated December 17, 1918, and is as follows:

MY DEAR COMMANDER: I have read your letter. Thank you for your sentiments. I shall support you. Already I have straightened out entanglements that would have been hurtful to your success. I am not interested in you personally a particle. The entire matter is so far beyond personal consideration and transcends individual proportions to an extent that only public welfare may be thought of. You can be elected; no doubt you will be. My idea is that the thing for you to do is to honestly confess that you broke the law and that you knew all about the campaign, but that you did not realize the enormity of your offense.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Who wrote that?

Mr. REED. Chase S. Osborn, who is governor, is he not, of Michigan?

Mr. TOWNSEND. At one time he was governor.

Mr. REED. Very well. The letter proceeds:

In such a position you would be intrenched in honesty, I fully believe. And an indulgent people would forgive you and fight for you, because of the past services they think you have given and what they have been told you are giving now. In addition this action would make for your name an honorable place in the history of Michigan. Otherwise the future will curse you.

The plea can not be honestly made that you spent money in excess because you were fighting Ford, because you had begun your reckless campaign long before Ford was mentioned and had already transgressed the law. Nor can you plead "you did not know." That would prove you to be both an ass and a liar, which I choose to think you are not. I am for you only to save the Nation and the State from the curse of Fordism. A vote for Ford is a vote for the Kaiser right now, as I view the case.

Yours, truly,

CHASE S. OSBORN.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, does the Senator understand that Mr. Osborn was called before the grand jury at New York and testified, as did Mr. Dickinson, and that the letters which have been dwelt upon by the chairman of the committee, and to which the Senator from Missouri has referred, from ex-Gov. Osborn and Lieut. Gov. Dickinson were the basis of this charge, made in the midst of a campaign, Mr. Osborn having been a candidate for the Senate at that primary and defeated?

Mr. REED. No; I do not know the political history of Michigan. I have not followed it; but it does not appear to be an unfriendly letter, because I find, a few days before that, this letter from Mr. Newberry to Mr. Osborn:

NEW YORK CITY,
Sunday, September 1, 1918.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: Your cordial telegram assuring me of your earnest support is all that was needed to insure the defeat of Ford in November. I fully realize that my personality is submerged in the issues that confront our party in our State. Many times in the past few months I have envied your ability and privilege to talk, and when your voice rang clear and strong throughout State and Nation on the menace of Ford I wanted to wire you godspeed in your patriotic work.

Your deeply appreciated telegram of support helps me to visualize the statesman, the sportsman (hunter), and gentleman that I have always known you to be.

Cordially, yours,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the Senator perhaps does not have—I do not think it has been submitted—the telegram which Gov. Osborn sent to Mr. Newberry congratulating him unreservedly upon his election. The letter which the Senator has just read from Mr. Newberry was then sent, and the letter of Mr. Osborn was the result.

Mr. REED. No; I have merely these two letters.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Osborn's telegram should go before Mr. Newberry's letter.

Mr. REED. From these two letters, assuming that Mr. Newberry is of the high character that he should be, it would appear that he at least on the 1st of September certifies in most flattering terms to the high character, the intelligence, the patriotism, the public service, and so forth, ad infinitum, of one Osborn, and that 24 days later the said Osborn wrote him a very friendly and cordial letter advising him to tell the truth about these campaign expenses. It is entirely possible that Osborn may have become transformed in those 25 days from a sportsman and a thoroughbred into a sneak, who was trying to undermine his friend, but I am compelled to take the documents at their face value.

Mr. President, there is another peculiar thing about this case, and I confess it does not leave a very good taste in my mouth. Always I have maintained in elections and matters of that kind that no man ought to fear publicity; that no man ought to fear investigation. Is it not a very peculiar circumstance that when a grand jury in New York, being in the opinion of the legal advisers of the United States within its jurisdictional rights, shall undertake to investigate an election and witnesses are brought there to testify these witnesses are advised by the attorney of Mr. Newberry to defy the grand jury and to refuse to testify upon the ground that the grand jury is without jurisdiction?

Some 35 years—and I am getting old—I have practiced law somewhat actively. In all that length of time I never knew a witness to refuse to testify before a grand jury except on the ground that his evidence would tend to incriminate him or subject him to public contempt and obloquy.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Did the Senator ever know before of a grand jury that was so clearly called and used for political purposes?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not know anything about this grand jury, except that a grand jury was duly called in a Federal court, impaneled and sworn according to law, and that it was proceeding under the direction of a Federal judge and under the guidance of a district attorney who had sworn to uphold the Constitution and faithfully and impartially to administer the laws. That is all I know about it; but if everything is clean, if everything is fair, if everything is honest, I want to know what objection there was by these witnesses to telling the facts? And why should they, called upon only to tell the facts of their knowledge, be in consultation with the attorney of Mr. Newberry? Why should the attorney of Mr. Newberry be advising these witnesses to put padlock upon their tongues and to take jeopardy of jail rather than tell the truth? Nobody could compel them to tell anything but the truth. What was there in the truth that made it necessary for these men to place themselves in jeopardy of jail, in jeopardy of court contempt? Why this secrecy and putting off?

I hope the Senator from Michigan did not mean it, but he used some expressions here to-day which in the old days we thought always were a notice of a filibuster. I hope the Senator from Michigan did not mean to say that he proposes to read a hundred or a thousand affidavits here, at this time, on the floor of the Senate, in the consideration of this resolution. I frankly say that if the other side of this Chamber are determined that this resolution can not come to a vote at this session they can filibuster it over. We are now within 20 working days of the end of this session. Any four or five able-bodied gentlemen can hold the Senate in session and can tie up all the great supply bills.

Mr. LODGE. We are not tying them up now.

Mr. REED. I will answer that in a moment. If the Senator from Michigan proposes to read a thousand affidavits or a hundred affidavits and proposes to say to us that this question can not come to a vote, he has it in his power to put this matter over.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. HARDWICK. I simply wanted to know if a filibuster was in progress?

Mr. REED. Now?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not now.

Mr. REED. There is one threatened. Did the Senator from Massachusetts want to interrogate me?

Mr. LODGE. I wanted to ask a question, but the Senator has gone away from the point about which I wanted to ask him a question.

Mr. REED. I will come back to it.

Mr. LODGE. I wanted to ask him if those witnesses in New York refused to answer on the ground that they would incriminate themselves?

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I do not think so.

Mr. LODGE. Well, I know that they did not ask it on that ground.

Mr. REED. That is exactly the point. If they had asked it on that ground there would have been some excuse for it.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I think, without any design or desire whatever to filibuster, it would be only fair to give some explanation of that case which the Senator has made appear so very black.

Mr. REED. That is all right. That can be done.

We have had some smiling about filibustering here. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] opened this matter with a statement of the facts, not overlong, and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] followed with a statement of his views, which was not overlong, and I have taken about the same length of time; and so far as we are concerned upon this side, we are ready to vote. But if the Senators upon the other side tell us that we can not have a vote, that they propose to hold this matter here and filibuster it to death, or discuss it for days, we know that the business of the Senate can not be held in that way, and with a frank statement of that kind we will not press this motion; but we do ask for a vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not indulge in any camouflage at all about the matter. The Committee on Privileges and Elections once decided that they had no jurisdiction of this matter. Some other matters have come up which have made it absolutely necessary, in my judgment, that this full case be presented to the Senate. It has been presented time and time again by the affidavits of the people who have made charges, and only those people. We have, I think, thousands of affidavits which, if this Senate is going to act, if this Senate is going to proceed with this investigation, it should have.

Mr. REED. But let me ask the Senator a question. Does he refer to affidavits which the Senate should have read here in the Senate or affidavits which it should have presented to the committee that is to investigate the matter?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Affidavits which it should have presented here in the Senate for the purpose of determining whether this committee, or the next committee, shall investigate this question.

Mr. REED. That is to say, affidavits that were made in the State of Michigan?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. As to the facts of this election?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. The Senator thinks that those affidavits, being read here in the Senate, will enable the Senate to determine whether it is the present Senate or whether it is the succeeding Senate which should make the investigation?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It will enable the Senate to determine whether or not it wants any investigation at all of this question, and I think they will have to be presented. Now, I do not want to interfere with what I conceive and what the committee has conceived to be the work of the Senate. Anything that you have here that is in order, and ought to be considered, I am ready to consider, and I am ready to lay this aside, so far as I am concerned, for that purpose; but if the majority of the Senate say that they want to take up this question, to the exclusion of the supply bills, if they want to do that, they must know all the facts before they do it.

Mr. REED. But that is not the question, and it can not be put in that way. The majority of the Senate are not going to say that they want to take up this resolution to the exclusion of the supply bills. The proper discussion of this question could certainly be had in a few hours. There may be legal arguments to be made against it; but affidavits, a thousand affidavits, made in Michigan as to the merits of this election can have nothing whatsoever to do with the question as to whether an investigation should be had; and when the Senator says that he proposes to present them to the Senate we know what he means. We know that he means that he is going to read a thousand affidavits to the Senate, so that the Senate can not pass this resolution unless it does it at the expense of holding up all of the supply bills for this session. In other words, it is the boldest, clearest-cut threat of a filibuster I have ever heard uttered on the floor of the Senate, and I have heard several. Now, just let us understand it.

Mr. President, we ask for a vote; and if the Senator wants to begin reading his affidavits, let him proceed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no desire or intention of entering upon any filibuster of any kind. We have sat here in silence and heard all sorts of charges made against Mr. Newberry, whom some of us believe to be an honest man. We know that he has served his country in both wars and that his sons have served his country. Before this matter is decided I shall want to say something. It will not take very long; but I have the same objection to the use of millions of money in elections that the Senator from Missouri has.

Mr. REED. I know it.

Mr. LODGE. I feel about it just as he does. But there is something larger and deeper than even the spending of money in elections, and that is the influence of a colossal fortune like that of Mr. Ford, and the way it has been used, not merely in this election but in all sorts of directions. Before this case is remitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections those of us who feel quite as strongly about Mr. Ford as you do about Mr. Newberry propose to lay before the country their views on him, and I should like about an hour in which to do it.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me to say, if he misunderstood me, that my remarks about fortunes applied just as much to one of these gentlemen as to the other and just in proportion to their wealth.

Mr. LODGE. When the Senator said that he was an absolutely just judge in this case, I fully agree with him. I believe he would be absolutely just in this case. While he was speaking his remarks reminded me of what was said of a distinguished judge in Massachusetts who resigned from the supreme court, and they said he resigned from the supreme court because he was unable to decide against both parties in every case. [Laughter.] So that I do not question the Senator's justice at all.

Mr. REED. I might be able to do that here.

Mr. LODGE. Possibly; but I do not think it is fair to discuss Mr. Newberry and give an impression about his campaign to the country, here in the Senate, and leave it wholly unanswered and unreplied to in the same place where the charges have been made, and not behind committee doors.

Mr. BANKHEAD obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator yield for a moment? I was going to suggest to the Senator that perhaps we could agree on voting some time to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have not this matter in charge. I am not on the committee, and I am not a Senator from the State of Michigan, and I am not going to undertake to make any arrangements about it. I think it is our duty to go on with the supply bills and not to discuss an election case which comes before the next Senate, over which we have no jurisdiction, as the Senator admits.

Mr. REED. I think we have jurisdiction, absolutely, to take the evidence.

Mr. LODGE. We have jurisdiction to preserve evidence, perhaps.

Mr. REED. I have no doubt about that proposition—that we have jurisdiction.

Mr. LODGE. Between preserving evidence and taking evidence I think there is a distinction.

Mr. REED. Well, taking and preserving are both the same thing.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I suggest that I have no objection to a provision which will preserve evidence that is in danger of being lost. We answered every request that was made in the stipulation. We followed out the course that was instituted by Mr. Ford's attorneys. He entered the courts. He ought not to be heard to complain now that they do not have jurisdiction; but we went even further than that. We have placed in their hands the power of the State courts, so that they can go in and preserve every scrap of evidence that they require. Now, if you need anything further that that, I have no objection to its being passed by the Senate; but I do object to going out and taking testimony on an ex parte statement, practically, that has been made to the country from the Senate; and I insist that the facts on both sides shall be presented to the country from this body at the same time.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, the Senator speaks about the decree of the court being the decree that Mr. Ford wanted. I am not in this case as Mr. Ford's representative. I believe it is the duty of the Senate to find out and preserve the facts. The decree of court, however, as I called attention to when the Senator was out, does not make these ballots secure.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think it does, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. Do I understand the Senator to mean now that he would consent to the passage of the resolution if it was limited merely to the preservation of documentary evidence?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would. I am perfectly willing that that should be done.

Mr. REED. That is to say that the subcommittee would preserve the ballots and call for and receive and preserve any other documentary evidence?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection to that if that is properly arranged as the stipulation provides. We must know how they are going to be taken and how they are going to do it. I want provision made for doing that.

Mr. REED. You want it done with the attorneys present and a proper representation of the parties.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator, after reading the law that has passed in Michigan, finds that it covers the ground, so that these people can go into the court there and get all the relief they want, what more does the Senator wish?

Mr. REED. I do not want anything except I want this evidence saved. I do not want it destroyed. I think we are getting to a point where we may be able to agree upon it. Of course, we can not do it very well, standing on the floor of the Senate in this way.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am asking the Senator to read the State law, with the provision that it is given immediate effect, and to see if that does not furnish all the relief which this Congress or Mr. Ford has a right to ask.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, we have had this bill before the Senate for five days, and I think about four and a half hours have been spent in its consideration. I am now going to move to adjourn until to-morrow, but I want to state that beginning to-morrow, after the morning hour, I shall insist that this bill shall be kept before the Senate to-morrow and to-morrow night and the next day and the next night until the bill is passed.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have been waiting to hear a statement like that for some time. I hope the Senator will do as he states, and I hope that those having charge of other bills that we must dispose of before Congress adjourns will insist upon a similar proceeding.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, with a view to facilitating action upon the revenue bill when it is reported to the Senate, I wish to state to the Senate that there will be a conference report filed in the House, and that the bill as amended by the conferees has been printed. These documents can be had by applying at the Document Room.

As a further aid to Senators in getting ready so that we can dispose of the report without delay, I am going to ask that the conference report be printed in the RECORD in order that those Senators who desire to do so may examine it in advance of its regular presentation to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The Chair suggests to the Senator from North Carolina that the conference report will be printed in the House proceedings of to-day, and that it would not be competent for the Senate to make an order for printing the report in advance of receiving the report.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Chair did not understand me. I am not proposing to present the report of the conferees on the part of the Senate. I am simply asking that the report which has been made to the House by the House conferees be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator if, when the report is presented to the House, it will not be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think so, but I am not quite sure about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from North Carolina to request that if the conference report does not appear in the proceedings of the House when presented to the House the same shall be printed in the RECORD of the proceedings of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to ask the Senator in what form the matter is going to appear, so that the public at large may know what the bill itself provides for in its entirety.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have stated that the bill as amended by the conferees has been printed. It is already printed, so that with the report of the conferees any Senator can tell exactly what has been done.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 7, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 6, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Oh Thou, to whom we are indebted for all things, God our Heavenly Father, without whom we are nothing, illumine our minds, quicken our conscience, that we may see clearly the way and act fearlessly, nobly, our part in the great drama of life, under the spiritual leadership of Thy son Jesus Christ, the world's Great Exemplar; and Thine be the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

UNEMPLOYMENT OF MINE WORKERS.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter and a resolution passed by the United Mine Workers of America. I want to say that in Ohio alone there are 15,000 mine workers who have not worked a day this year and the other 30,000 have worked only about 50 per cent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD a letter and resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has this lack of employment or the small number employed in the output of coal been the result of the action of the mine owners so as to keep up the high price of coal, or what has been the purpose?

Mr. SHERWOOD. I will have the resolution read, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought the gentleman had the information as to the reason why these men are out of employment, when the price of coal is three times what it was in peace times.

Mr. SHERWOOD. There is nothing in the resolution about that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter and resolution are as follows:

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Columbus, Ohio, January 30, 1919.

Hon. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have just made a tour of the coal-mining districts of Ohio and find conditions extremely bad.

There are 15,000 coal miners in this State that have not worked one day this year, the other 30,000 have worked less than 50 per cent time and have no assurance of any immediate relief.

The people living in the mining communities have lost all confidence in themselves and everyone else, including the Government, and because of this lack of confidence people are only buying what they absolutely can not get along without.

Because of this, the merchants are buying nothing from the wholesale houses and everyone is affected all along the line.

There is only one remedy that we can see at this time that will bring relief and restore confidence and that is for the Government to inform all operators and coal consumers that the price fixed by the President in 1917 would maintain in 1919, and that fuel purchased by the Railroad Administration would take the same price as other consumers are required to pay and that all coal purchased by the Railroad Administration for fuel purpose or Government use should be as near equally distributed among all the mines as is possible, thus assuring to the men employed in and around the mines an equal opportunity to earn a dollar during this reconstructive period.

I appeal to you as a citizen and statesman from this grand old Buckeye State to use your power in Congress and with the Fuel and Railroad Administration to the end that a public statement will emanate from Washington to the effect that the price of coal fixed by the President would maintain during this year.

The effect of an order of this kind will bring immediate relief, because large consumers are not purchasing coal at this time because they have coal in stock and are using their stock in the belief that prices will be reduced.

If they had the assurance that prices will not be reduced, instead of consuming their stock coal, they would from time to time purchase part of their daily consumption so that will, to that extent, increase production and increase the earnings of the men employed in and around the mines.

You will kindly give this question the serious consideration that it merits and advise us of any information or relief that you may be able to secure.

Thanking you in advance for giving this matter your personal attention, we beg to remain,

Sincerely,

JOHN MOORE,
President Ohio Miners.
G. W. SAVAGE,
Secretary-Treasurer Ohio Miners.

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Columbus, Ohio, January 31, 1919.

Hon. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
Member United States Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the delegates representing fifty thousand (50,000) coal miners in the thirtieth annual convention of Ohio miners, District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America.

Trusting you will give this matter your early consideration, I am,

Respectfully,

G. W. SAVAGE,
Secretary.

Resolution.

To the representatives of the Ohio Mine Workers, thirtieth annual convention assembled:

Whereas the Government agents representing the Railroad Administration are using every effort possible to reduce the price of railroad coal per ton to less than the price set by the President of the United States, Hon. Woodrow Wilson, for the duration of the war; and

Whereas during reconstruction period, in order to prevent disaster in our industrial affairs, it is absolutely necessary to have all industries in our country operate to provide employment for those who must work for a living; and

Whereas if the policy of reducing the price of railroad coal is adopted, it will cause many of the mines to close down and throw thousands of our miners out of employment, which would cause hardships among the miners and their families; Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, representing approximately fifty thousand (50,000) mine workers in Ohio, want an equal division of the work, and who, because of the enormous high cost of living, appeal to the authorities at Washington and our Government to insist that the price per ton for coal for railroad fuel be the same as the price made by the Government, and which every other consumer is required to pay; and be it further

Resolved, That as a solution to prevent the closing of some of the mines, while others are in operation, the miners demand that each mine in operation be given the opportunity to supply coal for railroad fuel, and that the tonnage be divided among the various mines in proportion to the tonnage produced; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary be instructed to send copy of this resolution to Members of United States Congress from Ohio, to Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States; Hon. Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroad Administration; Hon. H. A. Garfield, Fuel Administrator; Hon. Felix Frankfurter, War Labor Policy Board; Hon. W. B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor; and Hon. Ellison D. Smith, chairman, Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5342. An act providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the northern judicial district of the State of Texas.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1847) to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Wyoming National Forest.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the revenue bill, H. R. 12863, and ask that it be printed under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a conference report on the revenue bill, which will be printed in the RECORD under the rule.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. MANN. Is it proposed to have the revenue bill printed in any way, as it will read if the conference report is agreed to?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Either before or after the conference report is agreed upon?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. We have the bill already printed as agreed upon by the conferees, and any Member of the House can send over to the room of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House Office Building and get a copy to-day. Of course, copies will be printed to-morrow and be in the document room, but Members can get copies to-day by sending over to the room of the committee.

Mr. MANN. The committee have had it printed for the use of the committee, but it would not be printed for the document room, would it?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not until to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. It would not be printed for the document room at all unless there was a special order made.

Mr. KITCHIN. I forgot to say that I have a motion with reference to that which I am going to present immediately.

Mr. MANN. If the conference report is agreed to, of course the bill will be signed eventually by the President; but I apprehend that it will not be practicable for the President to sign the bill probably until he returns home.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me it will be very important to assume that the President will sign the bill if the conference report is agreed to, and that meanwhile people ought to know what it is going to be, so they can begin to prepare to make their returns.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will tell the gentleman our intention. I have an order reading this way:

Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the House document room 2,500 copies of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, agreed to in conference.

I will offer that in a moment. Then, after the conference report is agreed to by the House and the Senate I will try to get an order to print it in pamphlet form, so that it can be sent out to the people, and the House and Senate can have the privilege of getting copies. Of course, it will be unsigned, but it will be exactly as the bill passed.

Mr. MANN. When does the gentleman intend to call up the conference report?

Mr. KITCHIN. Saturday.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I have just come in. Has the conference report been agreed upon?

Mr. KITCHIN. It has been agreed to by the conferees. I have just presented it for printing in the RECORD. Any gentleman can get a copy of the report as agreed upon and the statement of the conferees on the part of the House by sending to the Committee on Ways and Means in the House Office Building at any time to-day.

Mr. Speaker, I present the motion which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the House document room 2,500 copies of the bill H. R. 12863, an act to provide revenue, and for other purposes, agreed to in conference.

The motion was agreed to.

CASUALTIES IN THE PENNSYLVANIA NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a newspaper article concerning the casualties in the Pennsylvania National Guard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a newspaper article.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not understand what it is about.

Mr. VARE. It is an article from the Philadelphia Press, which gives the casualties of the members of the National Guard of Pennsylvania.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman think we ought to commence to print the casualty lists in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. VARE. This makes some comparisons which show the very important part taken by Pennsylvania troops.

Mr. FOSTER. All the States have had a good many casualties, and if we begin printing these lists every State ought to have the right to do the same thing, it seems to me.

Mr. VARE. I have yet to see the time on this floor when there was objection made to printing anything calling attention to the important part that any gentleman's State may have played in the war.

Mr. FOSTER. I know that all the States have played an important part, and we are all proud of them.

Mr. VARE. I do not doubt that a bit.

Mr. FOSTER. But I do not believe we ought to publish these lists in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand this is a proposition to publish the casualty lists.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I understood.

Mr. VARE. Not the names of individuals. This is simply a newspaper article——

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, I misunderstood the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, is it the object to show by comparison that Pennsylvania had a larger casualty list than organizations in other States?

Mr. VARE. No. It does not make a comparison with the rest of the States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, how long an article is it? Is it all that the gentleman has in his hand?

Mr. VARE. No; it is a part of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a small part. I have not objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WOUNDED MARINES AT CHELSEA HOSPITAL, MASS.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, there have been some erroneous reports published in reference to the payment of wounded Marines at the Chelsea Hospital, near Boston. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD some official correspondence and reports relating to the matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD some official correspondence and reports in regard to wounded marines in the Chelsea Hospital, near Boston. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, how long is the correspondence?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. It is short, it will not take, I think, over a page of the RECORD, embracing official correspondence and reports relating to the matter in question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The correspondence and reports are as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 6, 1919.

Gen. GEORGE RICHARDS, United States Marine Corps,
Washington.

MY DEAR GEN. RICHARDS: My attention has been called to a report, appearing recently in the New York World, to the effect that 25 United States Marines have been without any pay for about eight months. A letter was written on this subject by Senator LODGE to Gen. Lauchheimer, which letter with the reply thereto was submitted to the House Naval Affairs Committee.

I understand that later you made a thorough investigation of this report, and I would appreciate your sending me copies of the correspondence between Senator LODGE and Gen. Lauchheimer, and any reports that you may have submitted in connection therewith. I learn that recently this erroneous report has been circulated among some of the Members of Congress, and for this reason think that it should be corrected by setting out the facts in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Yours, sincerely,

W. B. OLIVER.

HEADQUARTERS U. S. MARINE CORPS,
PAYMASTER'S DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 6, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. OLIVER: Replying to your letter of even date relative to a report printed in the New York Evening World, to the effect that there were a number of wounded marines in the naval hospital, Chelsea, Mass., who had received no pay for eight months or more, this office would state that this report as to these wounded being without pay, it appears, was first published in New England newspapers some time in November last, as brought to attention here by Senator LODGE of Massachusetts. If you will refer to the printed hearing of the Marine Corps, before the Naval Committee of the House December 19, 1918, you will see there certain correspondence between Senator LODGE and Gen. Lauchheimer on this subject; copies in full are inclosed herewith, from which it will be seen that the statement that these men had received no pay was found to be untrue.

Later the same report was republished in the New York Evening World of December 27, 1918, in connection with a notice that a benefit ball, to occur at the Cambridge Armory on New Year's eve, was being arranged for by public-spirited citizens to supply these wounded marines with funds to purchase needed comforts. Again this matter was reinvestigated at the direction of these headquarters. You will find inclosed a copy of the report made by this office on January 9, 1919. You will see in examining this paper that it was found as a result of that reinvestigation that not a single one of these wounded marines in the naval hospital at Chelsea who wished their pay failed to receive pay immediately after their admission to that hospital.

Trusting that this information is sufficient for your purposes and thanking you for this evidence of your interest in the welfare of the enlisted force of the Marine Corps, believe me to be, with kindest regards,

Faithfully, yours,

GEORGE RICHARDS,
Brigadier General,
The Paymaster, United States Marine Corps.

Hon. WILLIAM B. OLIVER,

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTE OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS,
November 9, 1918.

MY DEAR GEN. LAUCHHEIMER: I should be very much indebted if you would let me know whether there is foundation for a report which has come to me that a number of our marines who were wounded in France and are now undergoing treatment at the naval hospital at Chelsea, Mass., have received no pay from the Government for many months and are unable to obtain any. I do not know the names of these soldiers at Chelsea, but a constituent of mine has written me in their behalf, sending me a statement from one of the Boston newspapers in regard to the matter. For any information that you may give me I shall be greatly obliged.

Very truly, yours, H. C. LODGE.

Brig. Gen. C. H. LAUCHHEIMER,
The Adjutant General, United States Marine Corps.

HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS,
November 11, 1918.

NAVY YARD, BOSTON, MASS.

For marine barracks: Investigate and report immediately if any wounded marines in naval hospital, Chelsea, have received no pay for many months and are unable to obtain pay period. Attention is called to instructions August 17 covering subject payment wounded marines, also to more specific orders October 8, requiring detailed reports covering cases of wounded marines unpaid for many months.

MARCORPS.

NOVEMBER 12, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR LODGE: Your letter of the 9th instant, bringing to my attention report that there are a number of wounded marines at the naval hospital, Chelsea, Mass., who have received no pay for several months and are unable to obtain any, has been received. This matter has been taken up by wire with the commanding officer Marine Barracks, navy yard, Boston, Mass., that the precise facts may be developed, action taken, and proper information supplied you.

As to whether there is any foundation for the report, let me say that we already know that the commanding officers of some of the units of the Marine Corps in France, did, in April last, suspend regular payments to their commands for reasons of a military nature; also, that later, when some of those units went under fire, the wounded men were evacuated through the British and French evacuation and base hospitals, situated in something more than 75 widely scattered localities.

Immediately the officers of the Paymaster's Department, Marine Corps, in France, made every effort to reach our wounded who needed funds; there are two letters inclosed herewith, as well as an official report of the Paymaster, Marine Corps, that cover details. In addition, Col. John H. Hughes, Inspector General, United States Army, in France, reports under date of September 6, 1918, the following:

"Paragraph 3, page 7, General Order 111, General Headquarters American Expeditionary Forces, 1918, requires that in case marines are sent to hospital their service records be sent direct to paymaster, United States Marine Corps, Paris. There are now about 6,000 of these service records in this office. All men away from organizations are supposed to have their records at the Paris office. There are men whose records have been lost, and in some cases records are said to have been destroyed by shell fire. In such cases these men are paid from data available on cards in Paris office. The duplicate service record must be secured from the United States. Maj. Wills has made during August a round of all hospitals west of a line north and south through Paris and paid each man 100 francs. At the same time he left cards with the men by which they can inform him of any change of address. He paid about 1,300 men. He left Paris about September 3 to make a similar trip through eastern France, and on his return will have much valuable data as to the whereabouts of the men to be paid from his office. On future trips it is the intention to pay men full amount due them. It is impracticable to take these trips by railroad due to the great loss of time in getting from place to place and the short stay at each place."

When some of these wounded began arriving within the United States general instructions were issued August 17, 1918, to all posts of the Marine Corps on the eastern coast, so that the needs of these men, in the matter of funds, might further be met, and in connection therewith specific reports were required to be furnished these headquarters covering such cases as you describe.

In these circumstances your inquiry may now only be answered to the effect that no reports have been received here as to any such cases in the naval hospital at Chelsea, Mass., and in the absence of such reports the rumor is probably incorrect. As indicated above, you will be informed as to the result of our investigation. In the meantime let me express my appreciation to you for bringing the matter so promptly to our attention.

With kindest regards, believe me to be,
Faithfully, yours,

C. H. LAUCHHEIMER.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS,
November 12, 1918.

MY DEAR GEN. LAUCHHEIMER: I am very much obliged for your letter of the 12th and for the information which you give me. I knew, of course, that everything possible was being done by the Marine Corps to extend financial aid to our wounded marines, but I was anxious to ascertain from you just what was being done in that direction in order that I might make intelligent reply to those who have written me about it.

With kind regards and many thanks, I am,
Very truly, yours,

H. C. LODGE.

NOVEMBER 14, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In further reference to our previous correspondence with regard to wounded marines not receiving their pay, I have the honor to quote for your information the following telegram which has just been received from the commanding officer marine barracks, Boston, in reply to telegraphic orders which were sent to him on the 11th instant to investigate this matter:

"All wounded marines at Chelsea (Boston) hospital have been able to draw pay when desired, except Pvt. Leroy Barbee, who returned Monday from sick leave. Status of his pay accounts was forwarded Tuesday to assistant paymaster, 291 Broadway (New York), and he should receive payment by to-morrow. Barbee was last paid to and including 31st May."

You will note from this that we are taking all possible steps to see that wounded marines returned to this country do not have their pay held up, and if any such cases have occurred they are exceptional cases, which we are endeavoring to guard against.

Again expressing my appreciation of your interest in the welfare of our men, and with the assurance of my high regard, believe me,
Sincerely, yours,

C. H. LAUCHHEIMER,
Brigadier General, Adjutant, and Inspector.

JANUARY 9, 1919.

From: The Paymaster.
To: The Major General Commandant.
Subject: Personal letter from Brig. Gen. C. S. Radford, assistant quartermaster, Marine Corps, to Brig. Gen. C. H. Lauchheimer, inclosing clippings from newspapers in re alleged nonpayment of wounded marines.

* * * * * * *

1. Pursuant to reference (a), this office got in communication with the assistant paymaster at New York, by telephone, and directed him to make an investigation and submit report relative to nonreceipt of pay by wounded marines. This was on December 31, 1918. The assistant paymaster at New York on that date informed this office that so far as known to him all men in the naval hospital at Chelsea who desired funds had been paid. The same date this office had a telephonic communication with the commanding officer, marine barracks, Boston, Mass., and was advised by him that the statement contained in the clipping from the Evening World was untrue.

2. In addition to the foregoing, a telegram was prepared for the major general commandant addressed to the commanding officer, marine barracks, Boston, which read as follows:

"Referring to article in New York Evening World headed 'Eight months unpaid but don't whimper,' and dated Boston, December 27, regarding benefit ball to raise funds for 25 marines in Chelsea hospital. Investigate and report immediately to the major general commandant all the facts in detail with a list of the names of wounded marines in the Chelsea hospital with dates and amount of last payment, and if not paid since arrival the reason for nonpayament. Attention is again called to instructions August 17 and October 8 requiring payments and detailed reports covering cases of this kind."

3. Under date of January 2, 1919, this office received a report on this subject from the assistant paymaster, New York, N. Y., dated December 31, which is quoted for your information, as follows:

"Subject: Payment of wounded marines in United States Naval Hospital, Chelsea, Mass.

* * * * * * *

"1. In connection with references (a) and (b), there is transmitted herewith a list showing the names of all men to whom this office has any knowledge as being patients at the United States Naval Hospital, Chelsea, Mass. This list has been prepared from the pay roll of the Marine Barracks, Boston, Mass., for the month of November, 1918.

"2. This office notes that no emergency payment has been made in the cases of Pvt. George H. Tower and Sergt. Arthur Clift. No request from the commanding officer of the Boston barracks has been received in this office requesting an advance.

"3. Reference (e) will explain the reason no advance has been made to Daum.

"R. E. DAVIS."

4. The report from the commanding office marine barracks, navy yard, Boston, Mass., reference (d) on this case, the original of which is attached hereto as well as the report from the assistant paymaster, Marine Corps, New York, quoted herein, shows that statements contained in the clipping from the New York Evening World, referred to in this correspondence, were without foundation in fact. Particular attention is invited to the following paragraph from the report of the commonding officer Marine Barracks, Boston, Mass.:

"3. With reference to the benefit ball, a Mr. George Baker, an employee of the Washburn-Crosby flour agency at Boston, came to see me about two weeks ago with reference to this ball. Mr. Baker stated that he has for many years been a firm friend of the Marine Corps. Nevertheless, I declined to accede to Mr. Baker's request for permission to use my name in connection with the proposed ball, or to take action which would give the ball an official status; and without hurting Mr. Baker's feelings, in view of his expressed friendly sentiments, I endeavored to discourage the project of a benefit ball, as I felt that an erroneous impression might be created. I also informed Mr. Baker that the wounded marines in Chelsea Hospital were being well looked out for financially and in all respects, under special orders from the major general commanant."

The fourth paragraph of the report of the commanding officer Marine Barracks, Boston, Mass., reading as follows, is further evidence of the absolute untruth of the contents of the clipping from the New York Evening World:

"4. The instructions of 17 August and 8 October, 1918, referred to in reference (a) have been carefully complied with by this office. Almost daily inquiry has been made at the Chelsea Hospital in order that every case might receive careful and prompt attention."

In this connection special attention is invited to the fact that the commanding office at Marine Barracks, Boston, Mass., has been making almost daily inquiry at the Chelsea Hospital, evidencing that that commanding officer has taken a very active interest in the matter of looking after the wants and needs of all wounded marines in that hospital.

5. This final report in this case was held here awaiting the receipt in this office of the report from the commanding officer Marine Barracks, navy yard, Boston, Mass., reference (d), which appears to have been received at these headquarters on January 3, 1919, but was not received in this office until January 8, 1919, five days later.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 265, nays 0, answered "present" 2, not voting 162, as follows:

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, before we proceed I desire to make a statement. About one hour and a few minutes remain of general debate. It is our desire to finish this bill by to-morrow night, and for that purpose, if it is necessary, I shall ask the House to sit to-night. I hope it will not be necessary. I hope that we can make such progress during the day that it will not be necessary. If it should be necessary to have a night session in order to complete the bill by to-morrow night, however, I shall ask that that procedure be pursued. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] gave notice this morning that he would call up on Saturday the conference report upon the revenue bill, and we desire to have this bill out of the way by that time.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as I have to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], and, as I understand it, the chairman of the committee has agreed to yield to him part of his time.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I yield to the gentleman 20 mihutes of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman: The forces of liberty, right, and justice, in a contest in which civilization was at stake, achieved a great triumph in the world war, now happily concluded. To that high enterprise our country made a notable contribution. Imperial Germany is prostrate, Austria is in the dust, Turkey is a shapeless ruin, great Russia is a formless mass of jarring and discordant elements. Thrones, principalities, and potentates have been overthrown. Nowhere do the powers of autocracy rear their insolent heads to threaten the peace of the world. Nowhere may be seen the menace of any danger to the United States. Having these conditions in mind we are moved to ask why it is, that at this time the most prodigious naval bill in the history of our country, has been reported to this body, and why in face of the admitted facts Congress should approve the recommendations of the Naval Committee? Is it the logic of the situation that as dangers recede, our preparations for war shall multiply? Is it true that in proportion to the declining power of the arrogant autocracies that aspired to the overlordship of the world, this mighty, free, and secure Republic of ours must multiply the agencies of destruction under the pretense that they are required for necessary defense?

A few days ago there came to us news of the most tremendous significance that was ever borne to the expectant peoples of the earth, since this old world of our started spinning down the ringing grooves of change. That news was to the effect that the congress at Paris had agreed upon a league of nations, and that the terms of the agreement provided for the disarmament of the nations, the reduction of military forces, and the abolition of conscription for the maintenance of armies—in a word, for the destruction of those agencies which throughout the ages have agitated, perturbed, and filled with dire alarms the free and liberty-loving peoples of the earth. If that news be true, then certainly there is no necessity for the action recommended to be taken, and if it be not true, then I will ask some spokesman for this bill, to tell me and to tell this committee what are the dangers against which we are asked to prepare, who are the possible enemies likely to confront us, and why it is that in addition to the inevitable burdens entailed by the great war, we are now asked to assume burdens in the way of a larger Army and a larger Navy, far greater than were deemed necessary for the national defense in the period that preceded our declaration of war? Emerging as victors from a short but bloody participation in a war that has served to make the world secure for the citizens of this Republic, have we only succeeded in laying greater military and naval burdens on our country? Does it fairly follow from our victory, that the dangers to the peace and security of the United States have been so greatly magnified, that upon a calm review of the world situation we are justified in concluding that we must increase both our Army, and our Navy to the dimensions proposed, to adequately safeguard our national interests? If we look for information on this material inquiry, to the report of the Naval Committee, what do we find? Not a word in the way of explanation, or justification of its recommendations.

After giving a number of details related to the great expenditures proposed, the report contents itself with saying that it is agreed that we need an adequate Navy—a magnificent platitude but hardly an illuminating statement. Whatever may be our divergent views as to the size of the Navy, we are all agreed that we favor an adequate Navy. But this body of intelligent representatives of the American people is justified in asking the Naval Committee to advise us as to the dangers which it deems are reasonably to be apprehended, and the impelling reasons for the policy which it recommends? May I ask, what is an adequate Navy? Is the answer, a sufficient Navy? If so may I ask, what is a sufficient Navy? Unless we are apprised of the dangers reasonably to be apprehended, how can we determine the size of the Navy required to repel those dangers? A few days ago one of our admirals testified before the Committee on Naval Affairs. His testimony appears in the hearings. He testified somewhat after this fashion, that whatever may be the extent of our naval construction, it will not be equal to the Navy needs. Further, that now is the appropriate time for this country to make the suggested enhancements and enlargements, because the world expects us to take this action. And still further, that there never has been any period in the history of the United States when our country needed greater naval preparation than at this good hour. There are three statements of fact involved in this testimony that every man on this floor, I believe, will instantly challenge.

The cryptic and mysterious utterances that come from time to time from members of the high command, serve only to agitate, confuse, and alarm the public mind. For the purposes of intelligent action, we would like to have some definite recital of facts to support the statements made by this witness, some definite information afforded from which the Congress can determine what ought to be done with respect to any emergency likely to arise. [Applause.] I ask the Members on both sides of the Chamber, intelligent and patriotic representatives of the people who have shown throughout the dread emergency that has confronted the country during the last two years, that there was nothing that you were not prepared to do in support of the public cause—I ask you, my colleagues, in view of that proud and ineffaceable record of public achievement, if you are not entitled to be told by your Naval Committee why it is, that at this time when our enemies are prostrate, we should increase the public burdens in the name of national defense? What are the dangers that render necessary these prodigious preparations? [Applause.]

When the admiral referred to, stated that the world expected us at this time to increase our Military and Naval Establishment, upon what did he base that statement? Are we not entitled to know? If we look abroad to ascertain the facts required for intelligent action as representatives of the people, what do we find?

England has deferred her naval program. Neither in France, Italy, or Spain, do we find any lurking dangers, or any quickening activities that would cause anyone to conclude that this country is so seriously endangered that our Navy must be enlarged, and our standing Army increased. Germany is in sackcloth and ashes. Look to Japan, China, South America, take in the whole circle of the world, and tell me where you find the evidence of any present, or prospective preparation so extensive, and so alarming, as to make it necessary for this Congress to proceed with feverish haste to establish new armaments in the name of proper and adequate defense. The other governments of the world are anxiously striving to bring about a reduction of the burdens entailed by the war. The heaviest of these burdens are their overgrown military and naval establishments. Why should those nations which are all agreed that armaments must be reduced, expect us at this time to multiply our burdens, to establish larger armies, and more powerful navies, unless our country is in greater danger, than in the ante-bellum period? It is not enough for this admiral to make the statements that he did as a witness before the Naval Committee. He should communicate to that committee, and they in turn to us, the facts upon which he based that statement. Again he declares that at no time in our history has there been as great need for preparation as at present. Against what menace is this proposed preparation, this supplementary naval program intended to protect us? Is it some alleged danger? Then what danger? In what quarter is it reasonably to be apprehended?

What nation threatens us with naval activities likely to put in jeopardy a single right, or a single interest of the American people? Where are those activities to be found? A few days ago the Scientific American—and surely no one will take that journal as erring on the side of what is called little navyism—stated in a leading editorial that to-day in dreadnaught power this country is equal to that of any three nations in the world, excepting England. The modern dreadnaught strength of the United States as stated by that journal and nowhere denied, is equal to that of Japan, France, and Italy combined. This being so, where then is the danger reasonably likely to arise, and sufficient in extent, to justify this Congress in hastily authorizing the gigantic supplementary program proposed by this bill? The naval program of 1916 was the most prodigious ever adopted in any country at any time. Construction under this program has hardly begun. Our present dreadnaught strength, including three dreadnaughts practically, though not actually complete, is 19 great battleships. The three nations I have recited, Japan, France, and Italy, have 21 modern dreadnaughts.

The statement of the Scientific American in this connection is as follows: "In the Scientific American of December 28, 1918, we made known the very gratifying fact, that with the elimination of the German Navy, the United States Navy moved into second place. We showed also that because our allies lost many of their capital ships, and stopped work during the war upon those they were building, our Navy is so strong a second that it is equal in dreadnaught strength to the three navies of France, Italy and Japan. The United States possesses 19 dreadnaughts, Japan 9, France 7, and Italy 5. We found also that because of the superior gun power, armor protection, and displacement of our vessels, our 19 ships were fully a match in strength and fighting power, for the 21 ships of the nations enumerated. Our total of 19 United States dreadnaughts was based on the statement of the chief constructor, to a congressional committee to that effect.

"The end of the world war finds the allied powers war weary and eager for relief from the burden of maintaining huge armaments both on sea and land. Americans returning from the other side, whether they be officers of the Army or Navy, or civilians, tell us that all of our allies, now that the German threat is gone, are prepared to make a pro rata reduction of their armaments."

Excluding England, the three nations just mentioned are the three greatest naval powers of the world who may be treated as our possible adversaries. But if our present battleship strength is equal to that of these possible adversaries, and these adversaries show no indications of activity in new naval construction, are we justified at this time in burdening our people, and alarming the world, by hastily authorizing the immense addition proposed to our present Navy? We should deal with this situation as intelligent Representatives, having in mind dangers reasonably to be apprehended, not mere possibilities. Any nation, or combination of nations, may be considered as a possible enemy, but we should not establish our national policy upon a theory of possibilities. I am unable to say, and no one in this body is able to say, what the future holds in the way of possibilities. At some time in that unknown and unexplored future it is possible that we may have to fight an embattled world. Our possible adversaries may be England,

France, Italy, Germany, rejuvenated Russia, Japan, and every other free nation, and autocratic government on earth. Who can say? The combination of nations I have suggested, may not be excluded as a possible adversary, but who would be willing to vote money to establish and maintain a navy sufficient to protect this country against so unlikely and remote a combination? In the realm of speculation we may not be able to exclude the possibility of such a combination of adversaries, but we would be all agreed that the likelihood of danger from such a quarter, would be so remote that no sane man would concern himself to provide against it.

Armies and navies, when not needed for the national defense, are per se burdens, and are not to be voted lightly upon the country. They should be established with exclusive regard for internal and external safety. To the extent they exceed the national requirements in either direction, they are merely mischievous extravagances. The determination of an appropriate military and naval policy is a purely legislative function, and should be determined, as other legislative problems, in the exercise of our best judgment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Just for a question.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the gentlemen familiar with the cablegram recently sent by the President to certain Members of the House?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am not. Is the gentleman?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I happen to be.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Very well, what of it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I want to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it makes for wise legislation that some Members of the House should be in possession of certain information and others not?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That inquiry has nothing whatever to do with the inquiry whether the policy proposed by this bill is wise, or unwise. Concede that the answer to your question should be no, and what then? The immediate inquiry that concerns the members of this committee, is whether in the discharge of our duty as prudent and discreet legislators we should follow the recommendations of the Naval Committee, and enact the legislation which it recommends. If it is made clear to us that our national security requires the construction of the additional battleships, and cruisers proposed, then nothing remains to be said. The necessary credits should be voted before the rising of to-morrow's sun. Salus reipublicae est suprema lex. I have stated, Mr. Chairman, that looking the world over to-day, and always excepting England, there is not a naval power, viewing the nations in succession as possible antagonists, either singly, or in likely combination, that threatens, or menaces the naval supremacy of the United States even on our present basis of naval strength, and excluding the program of 1916 which, in the main, remains to be constructed. I admit that with respect to our strength upon the high seas our Navy as at present constituted, or even with the completed program of 1916, would not be as powerful as the British grand fleet.

But it has never been proposed that our fleet should match the British fleet. I am familiar with the arguments that have been advanced in this body during the last 12 years, and during that entire period it has always been maintained that in determining the naval policy of the United States, we could always exclude Great Britain as a factor in the problem. Both in the debates in the House, and in the testimony before the committee, it has been agreed that a proper building policy for this country was in no wise to be determined or affected by the extent of the English activities.

I quote again from that big Navy organ, the Scientific American:

"We find that there is a practically unanimous conviction that the strength of the British Navy is warranted by her island position and the scattered condition of the British Empire, and that it is sufficient that we should be a powerful second. Particularly strong is this conviction among the officers of the battle squadron which you recently reviewed on its return from cooperation with the British fleet in the North Sea.

"If there is anybody of expert opinion that is qualified to judge whether the British fleet is a menace to the peace of the world, it is to be found surely, among these American officers, who have spent a whole year with that fleet in the most intimate intercourse and cooperation. They frankly express their conviction that the British Navy is regarded both by ojcers and civilians of Great Britain as a purely protective force, built up and maintained for the sole purpose of keeping open the trade routes between Great Britain and her widely-scattered colonies.

"The persistent advocacy, even before the peace conference has opened, of huge increases in the United States Navy has filled all thoughtful people, not merely among our allies, but here in America, with amazement and deep-seated concern."

I would like to be advised whether as one result of a war waged to free the world from the menace of an autocratic power which sunk our ships, and murdered our citizens on the high seas, a war in which we fought shoulder to shoulder with Great Britain, and so fighting, won a glorious and never to be forgotten victory, we are to treat our whilom comrade as a possible enemy, and viewing him, as we aforetime viewed Germany, order our policy accordingly, and proceed to build battleships upon a scale of surpassing magnitude in order to protect this country against the menace of this new adversary. [Applause.]

New ties have been established by the sorrows and the sufferings of this war, jointly endured by the Anglo-Saxon nations. I had fondly believed that the experiences of the fiery furnace of trial through which we had jointly passed had served to draw us more closely than ever to that mother race from which we spring, and that the peace between the two nations which has been unbroken for over a century now be fairly considered as perpetual and infrangible. The burdens of this war are surely heavy enough, without the suggestion that as another outcome of this frightful strife, we must regard our only English-speaking ally as a possible enemy in the determination of our future naval policy.

If that is to be true, then assuredly the war has brought us new burdens. In the effort to establish our security by the overthrow of the one power that menaced it, can it be that we have succeeded in some mysterious fashion in placing the one power that we have heretofore excluded from consideration in all of our computations of naval construction, and all our estimates of probable enemies, in the category of possible antagonist, and for the future must consider her programs of naval construction as carrying a possible menace to this country. Having fought as allies to destroy the menacing power of autocracy, must we now part company, and at this very time when the pæans of victory resound in our ears, begin with feverish haste to prepare for the day of conflict with our whilom ally? If we exclude England from contemplation, as we have excluded her during the last three decades, then what fleet, or fleets of possible adversaries, require us to establish this supplementary program?

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. One question.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does the gentleman recall the secret treaty entered into between Great Britan and Japan that gave to Japan the islands in the Pacific, some of them surrounding our great naval base, in the last three years?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I suppose the implication that the gentleman intends to convey by that question is that this country should construct its future fighting fleets with reference to Great Britain as a possible adversary. If his implication does not mean that, then what does it mean? If that is what the Naval Committee, and the naval experts have in mind, then they should be manly enough, and frank enough to say to the American people that as one result of the great war, our relations with Great Britain have been so altered that we must reverse the attitude of the past, and so far from excluding that country from the category of nations proper to be considered in the determination of our building program, we must in the future consider the menace of her fleet in ascertaining the number and strength of the ships required for adequate national defense. If it is considered that a new factor has been projected into the problem of national security, and if that factor is the menace of England's fleet, then that fact should be plainly announced so that the Congress may act intelligently, and reach its own conclusions upon the necessity for this supplementary program. The cryptic and mysterious intimations of the gentleman from Illinois are not enlightening. Give us the facts, so that we may act advisedly, and intelligently. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another feature of the situation——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I prefer not to yield at this time, if the gentleman will wait until I finish the statement of what I now have in mind.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I was rather interested in suggesting one question to the gentleman.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Well, I will yield.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. My recollection is that the gentleman from Virginia in the past has generally had great faith that America never would need even the Navy we have now.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have always favored a Navy sufficient to protect this country against all dangers reasonably to be apprehended.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Because my recollection is that the gentleman almost invariably voted against the increase in the Navy.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have always been against unreasonable and unnecessary increases.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Is the gentleman so sure of the future, based upon his past prophecies, as to the needs of America?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Far more sure.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Please state why the gentleman now is——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will so state with a great deal of pleasure. I have never favored a policy of nonresistance either on the land, or the sea. I have always favored a Navy that, so far as I could determine from my study of the available authorities, the experts, if you choose to call them so, would be equal to the Navy of any other country that could reasonably be regarded as a menace to this country. Great Britain was always excluded by the naval experts themselves from the list of possible enemies.

Within the past few months the one country that really threatened the peace of the world, the one country that has been continually used by the naval expansionists to alarm this country into voting for new construction on an extensive scale, has been completely eliminated as a naval power. Her entire fleet is in the hands of her adversaries, and at their mercy. The present plan is to destroy every one of these ships.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We are getting away from my question.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not at all. I am proceeding to show you that our present Navy secures us against any danger reasonably to be apprehended, and in that connection I referred to the passing of Germany as a naval power. I have given the figures of the combined dreadnaught strength of France, Italy, and Japan. Is France a menace to this country? Is she building new navies? Are her yards humming with new construction?

What of Italy? Do you really think that we need additional ships to protect our interests against danger from that quarter? Does the naval strength of Japan alarm you? Is she an adversary reasonably likely to attack this country? If so, having in mind the relative strength of the navies of Japan, and the United States, what do you imagine would be the outcome of a naval war between this country, and the island empire? How and in what way does the navy of Japan menace the peace and security of the United States? [Applause.]

You ask me what I have to say with respect to my attitude in the past. I can answer in a few words.

I would not retract a single vote that I have cast on the naval programs. I was against the naval program of 1916, holding that it was not needed for the national defense. Subsequent events have vindicated that attitude. If not a single great ship had ever been built under that program, and none so far has been constructed, this war would have been won, just as it has been won. If the ships provided by that program had been in being, and ready to go to sea when war was declared, I mean the great battleships, they could not have been used.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We would not have won it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. We helped to win it. I am discussing our contribution to the war. It was a material contribution but not in the form of battleships.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Is the gentleman willing that we should always accept the assistance of others?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. We did not require assistance. We went to the assistance of others, with torpedo boats, mine sweepers, and light cruisers, not with battleships. Upon what theory do we build a Navy? Why upon the theory that it is needed for the maintenance of our safety and interests. We have never undertaken to build a Navy as great as that of Great Britain, for the simple reason that it has never been considered that our interests required a Navy of that size.

The naval program contemplated by the act of 1916 has played no part whatsoever in the present war, for the simple reason that it has never come into being. With Germany eliminated we may safely omit the construction of much of that program, not to speak of the supplementary program provided in this bill. We played a notable part in the recent war, but it was with our lighter ships that were on hand when war was declared. To these should be added the ships completed during the progress of the war, the destroyers, submarines, mine layers, mine sweepers, and other small craft.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Did the gentleman vote for any of the warships or battleships that are now in the water?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. How many of them?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not know. I can not say. You do not know in the aggregate how many you voted for. [Laughter.] In all likelihood when you voted for four, I voted for two, and when you voted for two, I voted for one. Possibly there were occasions when I did not consider that any additional construction was needed, having in mind the ships in being, and the additional ships that had been provided for in previous authorizations.

But at all times I had in mind to provide our country with an adequate Navy, one that would be sufficient to make her secure against all dangers reasonably to be apprehended. No vote that any so-called little navy man has cast in the last decade has left our country unprepared to play an adequate part in the recent hostilities. The little navy men so called have favored a larger construction of submarines, torpedo boats and swift cruisers, and fewer great dreadnaughts. Our material contribution to the recent naval war was in the way of small craft, not in ponderous and expensive battleships. The heavy ships never went into action, many of them never went across. Our present dreadnaught strength is ample for our adequate protection against the dreadnaught strength of other nations, always excluding England. Should the other nations begin new programs of dreadnaught or other naval construction, I rather fancy that we can build as fast as they can.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In other words, won by the strength of other powers.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not at all. It was won with our help, but not with our dreadnaughts. The bulk of these great ships swung idly at their anchors on this side of the Atlantic. Our dreadnaughts were not needed, for the simple reason that England's supply was more than sufficient. I ask again, who, and where are the adversaries that we are supposed to be arming against? If conditions are such that more ships are not needed for national defense, is it suggested that this body in a merely grandiose spirit shall impose upon the American people burdens that will soon amount to a thousand millions of dollars a year for the maintenance of the Navy, not to speak of the cost of construction. Certainly I do not favor such a policy. I am in favor of building as large an American Navy as our interests, and just considerations of urgency require.

Now tell me how large that Navy should be? What is your test, what is your standard. If we had potential enemies when this war began, assuredly the most menacing and dangerous of those enemies has been destroyed. Does the fact of his elimination render us less, or more secure? If we are more secure, why new armaments on an expanding scale? Suppose the present war had been confined to a death grapple on the high seas between this country and Germany. Does anyone on this floor, knowing the facts in reference to the strength of the present American Navy, doubt that we would have emerged as victors from that strife?

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to weary the House with unnecessary details. I would not object to this naval program if it were merely a fantastic conception dealing with fantastic and unreal dangers and not requiring action on our part, or calling for vast sums of money. Not at all. The gentlemen might dream their dreams undisturbed. But I know full well that the burden proposed to be laid upon this country for armaments, first for a Navy of the minimum size proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], and second for an Army of the minimum size proposed by our General Staff, will retard our national development, will withdraw countless thousands of men from useful and productive activities, and will erect obstructing barriers in the way of the full enjoyment of life and liberty, and the pursuit of happiness by the American people. [Applause.]

I am asking you, gentlemen of the committee, to point out the necessity for this program, and if you can establish that necessity, I will join you as an ally, and fight under your banner.

When war was in progress, no one voted more willingly than I did for the legislation that was necessary for the maintenance of American interests and the winning of the war. No man in this House voted more readily than I did, for the imposition of the burdens that this country will carry to remote generations, but I was moved to this action by the fact that the success of the American cause depended upon the funds that this legislation afforded. I am as ready as any Member of this body on either side of the House to do whatever may be necessary for American security, American rights, and American interests. I would not hesitate for one moment to vote for this program, if it was essential to our security and the maintenance of our vital interests. But I ask the Naval Committee to tell us something more than it has told us in the elaborate report which it has filed.

The report tells that "an adequate Navy is necessary." That sheds a great light upon the situation, does it not [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of general debate has been limited by the House.

Mr. PADGETT. I can not agree to an extension of the time. The House has fixed the time, and the committee can not extend it; but I will yield five minutes to the gentleman out of my time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I maintain this proposition, that an intelligent program of national defense must be directed by intelligence, and that no one can act intelligently unless he has the information necessary for action. No one can determine what an appropriate military and naval program should be, unless he is put in possession of all of the necessary facts. I take it that in the determination of a national policy we should not be controlled by the ambiguous, not to say unintelligible assertion, that our country needs an adequate Navy. This body is as competent to act intelligently upon the whole facts as the committee. In this connection I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that according to the contention of the naval experts, we are $700,000,000 short of an adequate Navy. If the House is expected to follow the experts, the question may well be asked, Why did not the committee follow them? These experts gave their judgment as to what was needed for an adequate Navy, and fixed it at $1,414,064,090.15.

With great apparent satisfaction the committee calls attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Navy, who himself is not an expert, reduced the estimate for the program submitted by the naval experts by several hundred millions of dollars. Proceeding further, the committee, a nonexpert body, have reduced the figures of the nonexpert Secretary of the Navy, and reported a bill that is over $650,000,000 short of the amount required to provide adequate naval protection, in the judgment of the naval experts. Does the committee think that the bill which they report, and which flouts the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy and of the naval experts, will afford the country a really adequate Navy? If the committee can reduce the recommendations of the experts over $650,000,000 may not the Members of this House, in the exercise of an intelligent judgment, effect a further reduction in this gigantic bill, and still afford the country adequate protection? [Applause.] Are we not entitled, as custodians of American interests, to use a like discretion to that used by the members of the committee? [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I will submit one final request, and that is that in the course of this debate some one gentleman, speaking for the committee, will tell us what are the dangers reasonably to be apprehended by this country, and against which we must prepare on the tremendous scale proposed, and if this spokesman can not tell us what are the dangers reasonably to be apprehended, will he at least advise us as to the cloud shapes of danger that rear their turbulent and menacing heads above the rim of the horizon of the future? That much at least, we are entitled to know. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WILSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 15 minutes.

[Mr. WILSON of Texas addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

During the delivery of the speech of Mr. WILSON of Texas favoring the proposed three-year naval building program, and while discussing the telegram from the President in which he recommended the authorization of such program, the following transpired:

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Now, will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. WILSON of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. On the day that the President's telegram was made public in the United States he made a speech in the French Chamber of Deputies in Paris in which he congratulated the deputies there assembled and the world that there would now be a diminution of armaments throughout the world, relieving the people of that great burden. Now, as a Member of this House, I want to know his impelling reason—why at the same time he is congratulating the rest of the world that they could disarm he should be urging us to arm? Can the gentleman give us the reason for that?

Mr. WILSON of Texas. In order that the speech of the President be not misconstrued, I am going to ask permission now to print it in full in to-day's RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks leave to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there any objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON of Texas. Our President needs no defense from anyone, but, since this question is raised, it is proper that his speech should go into the RECORD while we are considering this bill, in order that it may be reconciled with his recommendation by gentlemen who want to, and in order that excerpts from it may not be taken and used by anyone to create confusion and misunderstanding and the impression that the President is not consistent. The speech was made in the Chamber of Deputies at Paris the 3d day of this month, with official France present, the Associated Press dispatch, including the speech, being as follows:

PARIS, February 3.

President Wilson this evening delivered an address in the Chamber of Deputies, having as auditors President Poincare, the presidents of the Chamber and the Senate and large numbers of members of both Houses of Parliament and the personnel of the French cabinet.

The President was accompanied to the Palais Bourbon by President Poincare, who called for him at the Murat mansion. Premier Clemenceau and M. Dubost, speaker of the Senate, also were in the party.

Military honors were rendered by the republican guard, resplendent in new uniforms and their full regalia. The presidential party entered the Chamber amid a fanfare of bugles and the rolling of drums.

Mrs. Wilson, Mme. Poincare, and Mme. Deschanel had seats in the presidential gallery.

CHEER FOR FIVE MINUTES.

As President Wilson rose and walked toward the tribune with a quick step, the deputies, senators, and others rose and cheered and applauded for fully five minutes. The audience insisted on hearing the President's address standing. M. Poincare, Clemenceau, and Dubost also stood. This seemed to embarrass President Wilson, who made gestures that the deputies remain seated, but they shouted: "Standing! We will hear you standing!"

President Wilson turned to M. Deschanel, begging him to request that the deputies be seated, but the president of the Chamber shrugged his shoulders, as if helpless, and President Wilson began in a low voice, which gained force as he proceeded.

There was a ripple of applause now and then as he was speaking, but the majority of the deputies and senators were unable to understand English clearly, thus the enthusiasm did not break out until the interpreter translated the speech. Then deputies and senators gave full vent to their feelings. President Wilson spoke as follows:

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

"I am keenly aware of the unusual and distinguished honor you are paying me by permitting me to meet you in this place and to address you from this historic platform.

"Indeed, sir, as day has followed day and week has followed week in this hospitable land of France I have felt the sense of comradeship ever become more and more intimate, and it has seemed to me that the making of history was becoming singularly clear.

"We knew before this war began that France and America were united in affection. We knew the occasions which drew the two nations together in those years, which now seem so far away, when the world was first beginning to thrill with the impulse of human liberty, when the soldiers of France came to help the struggling little Republic of America to get on its feet and proclaim one of the first victories of freedom.

"We had never forgotten that, but we did not see the full meaning of it. A hundred years and more went by and the spindles were slowly weaving the web of history. We did not see it to be complete, the whole of the design to be made plain.

DIVERGING LINES MEET.

"Now, look what has happened. In that far-off day when France came to the assistance of America, America was fighting Great Britain. And now she is linked as closely to Great Britain as she is to France. We see now how these apparently diverging lines of history are coming together. The nations which once stood in battle array against one another are now shoulder to shoulder fighting a common enemy.

"It was a long time before we saw that, and in the last four years something has happened that is unprecedented in the history of mankind. It is nothing less than this—that bodies of men on both sides of the sea and in all parts of the world have come to realize their comradeship in freedom.

"France in the meantime, as we have so often said, stood at the frontier of freedom. Her lines lay along the very lines that divided the home of freedom from the home of military despotism. Hers was the immediate peril. Hers was the constant dread. Hers was the most pressing necessity of preparation, and she had constantly to ask herself this question: 'If the blow falls, who will come to our assistance?'

"And the question was answered in the most unexpected way. Her allies came to her assistance, but many more than her allies. The free people of the world came to her assistance.

AMERICA PAYS HER DEBT.

"And in this way America paid her debt of gratitude to France by sending her sons to fight upon the soil of France. She did more. She assisted in drawing the forces of the world together in order that France might never again feel her isolation; in order that France might never feel that hers was a lonely peril, and would never again have to ask the question who would come to her assistance.

"For the alternative is a terrible alternative for France. I do not need to point out to you that east of you in Europe the future is full of question. Beyond the Rhine, across Germany, across Poland, across Russia, across Asia, there are questions unanswered, and they may be for the present unanswerable.

"France still stands at the frontier. France still stands in the presence of those threatening and unanswered questions—threatening because unanswered; stands waiting for the solution of matters which touch her directly and intimately and constantly; and if she must stand alone, what must she do? She must put upon her people a constant burden of taxation. She must undergo sacrifice that may become intolerable.

NATIONS MUST BE READY.

"And not only she but the other nations of the world must do the like. They must be ready for any terrible incident of injustice. The thing is not inconceivable.

"I visited the other day a portion of the devastated region of France. I saw the noble city of Rheims in ruins, and I could not help saying to myself, 'Here is where the blow fell, because the rulers of the world did not sooner see how to prevent it.'

"The rulers of the world have been thinking of the relations of governments and forgetting the relations of peoples. They have been thinking of the maneuvers of international dealings, when what they ought to have been thinking of was the fortunes of men and women and the safety of home and the care that they should take that their people should be happy because they were safe.

"They know that the only way to do this is to make it certain that the same thing will not always happen that has happened this time, that there never shall be any doubt or waiting or surmise, but that whenever France or any free people is threatened the whole world will be ready to vindicate its liberty.

"It is for that reason, I take it, that I find such a warm and intelligent enthusiasm in France for the society of nations—France with her keen vision, France with her prophetic vision.

IS MANKIND'S NEED.

"It seems to be not only the need of France, but the need of mankind. And France sees the sacrifices which are necessary for the establishment of the society of nations are not to be compared with the constant dread of another catastrophe falling on the fair cities and areas of France.

"There was a no more beautiful country. There was a no more prosperous country. There was a no more free-spirited people. All the world had admired France, and none of the world grudged France her greatness and her prosperity except those who grudged her liberty and her prosperity. And it has profited us, terribly as the cost has been, to witness what has happened, to see with the physical eye what has happened, because injustice was wrought.

"The president of the chamber has pictured, as I can not picture, the appalling sufferings, the terrible tragedy of France, but it is a tragedy which could not be repeated. As the pattern of history has disclosed itself it has disclosed the hearts of men drawing toward one another. Comradeships have become vivid. The purpose of association has become evident.

BROTHERHOOD PLAN NEARS.

"The nations of the world are about to consummate a brotherhood which will make it unnecessary in the future to maintain those crushing armaments which make the peoples suffer almost as much in peace as they suffered in war.

"When the soldiers of America crossed the ocean they did not bring with them merely their arms. They brought with them a very vivid conception of France. They landed upon the soil of France with quickened pulses. They knew that they had come to do a thing which the heart of America had long wished to do. When Gen. Pershing stood at the tomb of Lafayette and said, 'Lafayette, we are here!' it was as if he had said, 'Lafayette, here is the completion of the great story whose first chapters you assisted to write.'

"The world has seen the great plot worked out, and now the people of France may rest assured that their prosperity is secure because their homes are secure; and men everywhere not only wish her safety and prosperity, but are ready to assure her that with all the force and wealth at their command they will guarantee her security and safety.

"So, as we sit from day to day at the Quai d'Orsay, I think to myself we might, if we could gain an audience of the free peoples of the world, adopt the language of Gen. Pershing and say, 'Friends, men, humble women, little children, we are here; we are here as your friends, as your champions, as your representatives. We have come to work out for you a world which is fit to live in and in which all countries can enjoy the heritage of liberty for which France and America and England and Italy have paid so dear.'"

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 20 minutes remaining.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I do not know that I shall consume all of the 20 minutes. I thought it proper to refer to some matters adverted to heretofore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] referred to the chaotic condition in Russia and in Germany, the disintegration of Turkey, and we read in the papers about the spread of bolshevism, the breakdown of organized government, and the weakness and inability there of constituted authority to maintain peace and order and international relations and international obligations.

I readily concede that a condition almost of chaos and anarchy exists in all that great part of the world, involving many hundreds of millions of people. And as I stand before you I ask you seriously and solemnly in the face of that condition, involving one-half of the population of the world, Are we not going to look at our preparation, are we going to turn our backs to the past, and close our eyes to the future and make our ears deaf to any suggestion that the great people of the United States do not desire, purpose, or intend to make themselves a protectorate of any other country of the world?

We have a condition to-day and for the future that is different from what it has ever been before. It is true we have the same great coast line on two oceans, extending for thousands of miles; we have great cities, with disturbed and uncertain conditions abroad; we have resting on us the obligations as to our international duties, a responsibility to our citizens when they travel abroad; we have it to maintain toward the citizens of other countries that may come here. With all of these diversified duties and obligations mingled and mixed with all these conditions, I repeat, Is there not to us in the very suggestion of the gentleman a duty that we shall not neglect our own protection and our own care? [Applause.]

Again, I want to call attention to the fact, and I want to make it plain, that we are not building against any nation; we are building for the United States—not that we loved Ceasar less, but that we love Rome more; or, if I may bring it down from the expression of ancient days, we are not preparing against any nation toward which we entertain or maintain any spirit of hostility or enmity, but looking with love, with patriotic devotion to the great and diversified interests of the United States, prompted by a desire to preserve and be ready at all times to protect the interests of the United States. It is our country that we love, and no other country do we hate. That is the purpose and the spirit and the intent that has moved the Committee on Naval Affairs in submitting to you for your consideration and asking your approval of the proposals that are contained in this bill. I believe that we can address it to your intelligence, to your judgment, and to your patriotism, and spurn to appeal to any sense of enmity, ill will, or jealousy of any other country in the world.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt there with a single question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. McCORMICK. How does this plan comport with that one of the 14 points which proposes the reduction of armaments to the lowest point consistent with domestic security?

Mr. PADGETT. I will be very glad to answer that, and I want here to pay tribute to my confidence and my firm belief and conviction in the sincerity of our President, who is abroad, laboring to accomplish, if it can be done, that result. [Applause on Democratic side.] Yet, let me say that when the President stood in yonder place and spoke to the Senate and the House he used this language:

I earnestly recommend the uninterrupted pursuit of that policy of continued naval program. It would clearly be unwise for us to attempt to adjust our programs to a future world policy yet undetermined.

I do not know what is going to come out of the league of nations; I do not know what is going to issue out of the contention and the work to bring about a disarmament; but I do know that if there is any league of nations established that that nation which has a predominant sea power will exercise a predominant influence and control in that league, and I do know that I want the United States to be able, for her dignity, for her honor, for her glory, and for the performance of her international duties and obligations, to be prepared to make in that league of nations a contribution equal to that of any other country, so that in the partnership we will be an equal partner and not a minority stockholder. Let us face the issue fair and square. It brings me back to the statement I made a moment ago. With our great merchant marine, with our seacoast, with the transformation of the financial centers of the world, and all these duties and obligations that rest upon us, I want the contribution of the United States to equal that of any other country.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire the gentleman from Tennessee to set me straight, as he has often done heretofore on other matters, about one matter to which I desire to direct his attention. I am somewhat confused. I have heard the chairman of the committee speak of the necessity of increasing our armament to a certain size because of our extensive sea borders. That seems to be in conflict with what the President of the United States said when he opened the convention abroad, because the President is then reported to have spoken as follows:

In a sense the United States is less interested in this subject than the other nations here assembled. With her great territory and her extensive sea borders, it is less likely that the United States should suffer from the attack of enemies than that other nations should suffer.

I can not understand that.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I shall answer the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as I understand it. I do not think the President meant to be understood that with a long seacoast we are not liable to be attacked.

Mr. BUTLER. I could not tell about that. I simply read what the President said, and at the time it impressed me as a contradiction of our views in recommending the naval program.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think the President is to be understood as meaning what the words there, as the gentleman has submitted them, may be interpreted to mean.

Mr. BUTLER. I can not understand it. He says with our great territory——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, I am not doing this for the purpose of in any way criticizing anything that the President may have said. I do not quite understand it—

With her great territory and her extensive sea borders, it is less likely that the United States should suffer from the attack of enemies than that other nations should suffer.

Mr. PADGETT. I could not answer that. I do not know whether that is a correct quotation of what the President said. I do not know the connection in which it was said, but there is one thing certain and that is that with the great seacoast we have, we all know that in time of war it would be an exposure to danger.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. McCORMICK. A moment ago the chairman of the committee suggested, as I understood him, that the power which possessed the greatest fleet would dominate the councils of the league of nations to enforce peace—not that power which had the greatest population or whose cause was the most just, but that which had the greatest armament. If that be true, Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman from Tennessee suggest that the league of nations to enforce peace is an invitation to arm in order that you may have assets to control its deliberations and to determine the decision of the "justicable disputes"?

Mr. PADGETT. I know that there are two phases of the question, and it is assumed that in the league it may rightly be assumed that in many phases of it the idea advanced by the gentleman would be the predominant idea, but there are——

Mr. McCORMICK. But the idea was advanced by the gentleman from Tennessee that if you would be heard and carry weight within the league you must arm.

Mr. PADGETT. I know this to be true, that in every combination of human energy and human effort, in stock companies, in banks, in corporations, and all sorts of organizations the fellow who is the majority stockholder exercises the power and the influence. I know another thing, that in the big States of the Union there is influence that counts, and I would suppose that in the league of nations, if in the frailty of human nature, in the weakness or in the heat of passion, there should come a decision in that league, the gentleman would not want the United States to be a minority stockholder or to be under the protectorate of some other country.

Mr. BUTLER. But we do not want to hold all the stock.

Mr. McCORMICK. The President suggested it is to be a peace of the common man and not of the majority stockholders.

Mr. PADGETT. We want the United States as one of the common stockholders to own an equal share with others. Now, then, another matter I want to call attention to is this, that the Navy is the proper, logical, and sensible defense of the United States. Separated as we are from other countries with an ocean on either side, a Navy upon the high seas protects us from an army coming upon our shores, and as long as we have a Navy we can dispense with an Army. I am not going to consume the time of this committee in attempting to recite the splendid performance of our Navy in this last war. It is known of all; it is approved of all; it is a source of pride, satisfaction, and glory to the American people. My friends, one other thought: Let us be consistent; let us pursue the policy that we adopted in 1916 of not building haphazard, but to look at a program embracing several years and live up to it and meet the duties and the obligations that rest upon us.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the present existing program, the yards will not be able to complete it for three years?

Mr. PADGETT. That has been our contention all along.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, we are proposing a program that can not take any form until three years in the future?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no.

Mr. STAFFORD. I mean as far as building is concerned?

Mr. PADGETT. No; we can lay down two of each type of ship along about next May of the fiscal year for which we are providing.

Mr. STAFFORD. My information was that nothing could be done for at least two and mayhap three years in the future?

Mr. PADGETT. No. We can begin the laying down of them in the latter part of the fiscal year for which we provide.

Mr. STAFFORD. When is it contemplated that this program will be completed?

Mr. PADGETT. It will take about seven years, and I will explain that to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Congress is not intended to be in adjournment during that period, is it?

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Let me finish this. This is a three-year program for 10 battleships and 10 scout cruisers, and it is suggested in the bill that during the first fiscal year of the three we start the construction of two battleships and two scout cruisers. It will take not less than three years to complete those. In the second-year program they would start four battleships and four scout cruisers. It would take three years from the starting of them to finish the battleships. That would run it for four years. Then you take the next one, the third year you start them; you take the remaining four battleships and remaining four scout cruisers and it will take three years to complete the battleships. That runs it up to six years, but as we do not begin them until in 1920 it would run until 1926 before they were completed, and this authorization we made of $412,000,000 would be distributed and divided up in the seven years in which construction would be carried on.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL EXPENSES.

The Secretary of the Navy shall send to Congress at the beginning of its next regular session a complete schedule or list showing the amount of money of all pay and for all allowances for each grade of officers in the Navy, including retired officers, and for all officers included in this act and for all enlisted men so included.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object—and I do not propose to object—but I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether the gentleman proposes to allow during consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule general discussion of the naval policy, with extensions of time, when any Member takes the floor?

Mr. PADGETT. I have no objection to a reasonable extension of time for the purpose of discussing the matters in the bill, but I do not want to extend time with reference to outside matters that do not relate to the bill. Is the gentleman going to discuss the bill?

Mr. LONDON. I will discuss the policy—the naval policy.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, we have before us a bill appropriating for the purposes of the Navy a sum of money which only a short time ago was considered sufficient for all the purposes of the Government, a sum of money larger than the total annual prewar appropriations of all European countries combined. We are asked to impose upon the people this heavy burden after the war has been won.

We thought we were through with the world crisis. We were evidently mistaken. It looks as if the armies and navies of the allies have won the war, but as if the people have lost the war. Instead of general rejoicings such as one would expect after the conclusion of a great struggle there is fear, restlessness, uncertainty, and anxiety—anxiety as to the present and anxiety as to the future. I shall attempt to explain it. It is a sad fact that this country has had no definite international policy and that it has none now. This is certainly true as far as the two political parties—the Republican and the Democratic Parties—are concerned.

In 1916 the majority party in Congress was elected on a platform of "He kept us out of war." The charge has been made by Republicans since that the Democrats were insincere in 1916. But the Republicans had nothing to offer in 1916. They knew then that there was a Kaiser in Germany. They knew then that Belgium had been invaded in 1914. They, the Republicans, did not demand in 1916 that the country enter the war. On the contrary, they sought to avoid the issue of war. When pressed for an answer to the question, "What would you have done?" the presidential candidate of the Republican Party finally picked up enough courage and declared that he would have taken possession of the German ships interned in American harbors. That was as far as he would go.

About six weeks before the country declared war the President had asked for armed neutrality. If you will read the speeches delivered during the discussion of the armed-neutrality bill you will find that almost every man who spoke for it argued that it was sure to keep us out of war. Everybody professed anxiety that the country be kept out of war. That was in the beginning of March of 1917. The armed-neutrality bill failed of passage in the Senate.

In April Congress declared war by an overwhelming majority. The legal ground was the invasion of the right of Americans to travel on the seas without danger to their lives. America's right to freedom of the seas had been invaded. During a short address which I delivered in February, 1917, I asked this question: "What will the United States win if it wins the war? Italy will get 'Italia Irredente,' France will get Alsace-Lorraine, Russia will get Constantinople; Germany, if she wins, will have destroyed a great commercial rival; England, if she wins, will succeed in strengthening her world empire. What will the United States win if we win?" The answer was that we would win the right to unmolested travel on the seas in the next war, because in peace times that right was not disturbed.

As things stand now, the very phrase "freedom of the seas" is yet to be interpreted. Immediately after the declaration of war there was a general feeling that the fight for the right to travel on the seas unmolested during the time of war, and for that only, would not appeal to the heart of the American people. So new slogans were created. I do not say that they were created dishonestly. On the contrary, I do wish the President of the United States success in his work. I believe that he is right in being where he is now, trying to get the best he can for America and humanity out of this crisis. [Applause.] I am not saying it in criticism. I would readily give my life to promote the things he has announced he stands for.

The truth is that he has more loyal and genuine support in the socialist movement of the world than among the tories and plutocrats and munition manufacturers of Europe and of America. There is no doubt about that. I know you would not have the courage to applaud that statement, because there is too much truth in it. But it is a fact anyway.

The President announced a new slogan, "We will make the world safe for democracy; we will try to get rid of the Kaiser and do away with autocracy." Of course, the country knew that at one time there was a Czar in Russia, and the Czar of Russia was not a bit better than the Emperor of Germany. The country knew that there was a Sultan in Turkey, and no effort was made to democratize his peculiar institutions. But the slogan was proclaimed, "We are going to make the world safe from the evils of autocracy."

Well, that was not strong enough. Then the President and all other statesmen came out with the slogan, "We are going to make this the last war." Mothers were told that their boys were being sent across to France so as to make this the last war. This did appeal to the hearts and souls of men. And the most radical of radicals, the most extreme of extreme Socialists and revolutionists said, "Oh, yes; that is something worth while fighting for. We will make this the last war." And, as I pointed out in my speech in January, 1918, the President's 14 points—which, by the way, were proclaimed by the entire press of the country as a new Sermon on the Mount, a new and noble code of international ethics—there was not a Republican newspaper that criticized those 14 points. On the contrary, the custom was then to praise anything that the President said as the greatest and the grandest and the profoundest thing that has ever been said by any human being. And those 14 points were proclaimed to be the wisest thing that ever came from the brain or lips of man. I started out to say that in a speech which I delivered on the floor of this House on the 11th of January, 1918, I pointed out the fact that these 14 points were in substance the 15 points presented by the revolutionary movement of Russia.

We are now told that these 14 points are not what we have been fighting for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to know at the outset of the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule what is to be the policy of the chairman as to the consideration of the bill and how long it is his intention to run to-night?

Mr. PADGETT. I announced this morning that I want to finish the bill by to-morrow night, and I want to run as late to-night as necessary, and see if we can finish it to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. If that is the policy, if you are going to allow everybody unlimited time under the five-minute rule, you could run until midnight to-night and to-morrow night and not finish the bill. I do not think it is fair to the membership to grant these unlimited extensions of time.

Mr PADGETT. I will have to object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We can stay here until midnight. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. PADGETT. I will not object now, but let me say that hereafter I will object.

Mr. DIES. I want to say to the chairman, before he makes that statement, that I have not taken up any time heretofore in the debate, but I shall want 10 minutes as soon as the gentleman gets through.

Mr. PADGETT. On the bill itself?

Mr. DIES. Yes; on the bill itself.

Mr. PADGETT. I am willing to allow full discussion on the bill itself.

Mr. BUTLER. On the bill and on the policy involved.

Mr. DIES. Otherwise I may make a number of five-minute speeches. But if I can get 10 minutes I think in that time I can get out of my system what I have to say. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, many of our statesmen are now opposed to the very things that the President has informed the world this country stands for; the very things on which he bases his appeal to the conscience of the world—disarmament, the doing away with conscription, the establishment of some arrangement among the nations of the world which will substitute moral force or, in the worst stage, the economic boycott for physical force. These very things are repudiated as visionary. A league of nations may be impracticable; it may be impossible of immediate realization. But the effort should be made by thinking men. The moral appeal of the President to the world is strong, and yet in this country the big moral principle, that new ethical code that he proclaims to the world, is ridiculed as nebulous and absurd.

What remains? There remains a war that has been won by the armies and the navies, not by the people. The people have been fighting for disarmament. They can not get that. The statesmen say it is not worth while. The people have been fighting for a world federation. The statesmen say it is not worth while—that it is a joke; that it is not worth trying. There is a lack of a definite international policy. There is a lack of support for the President who speaks in behalf of the people. He has plenty of difficulties over there. The secret treaties, the existence of which has heretofore been patriotically denied, are now made the basis of conflicting claims.

The old-style statesmanship is bankrupt.

The Washington Post credits Sir Arthur Balfour, foreign secretary of Great Britain, with the statement that pacts entered into by the nations will not be affected by the constitution of the league of nations. In other words, all the sinister schemes involving the spoliation of territory, secret treaties—treaties to which neither the people nor the Government of the United States was a party—will stand, in spite of the league of nations.

They may give you a new phrase; they may make you a "mandatory." [Laughter.] They may give you some new expression; but the substance of what the people of the world, the common masses, think the league of nations should be, the people are not going to get. That is why there is fear; that is why there is restlessness. The sum and substance of my complaint is that we have had no definite international policy heretofore, and that we have no definite international policy to-day; that we are drifting; that we do not know "where we are at." That is the sum and substance of my complaint. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, as nearly as I can make out, the complaint of my Socialist friend from New York is that the world has not repealed the law of human nature. I had not expected that to occur. The discussions of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs on this floor rather disclosed the fact that that imaginary happening is not expected to be a fact, because he said we need the enactment of this naval program, which, I may say, is the largest in the history of the world, because we want to go into the league of nations with a bigger stick than anybody else has who comes into the league. [Laughter.]

That is a very commendable thing, of course, to go in with a better army than the other folks. Naturally Great Britain cherishes the same desire; likewise Italy and France.

Now, I do not want to pay any respects to the Kaiser nor to Hindenburg nor to Bernhardi, but if I read Bernhardi's book "The Next War" intelligently, he was in entire accord with the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs; that is, that force eventually determines the course of nations.

But I did not rise to talk about that phase of the naval appropriation bill. I have been under no delusion. All these phrases and nebulous speeches here and elsewhere have not deceived me. I have known all the while that human nature is just now what it has always been, and will probably remain so until the end of time. Nor do I sympathize with the defense of the President by the Socialist Member from New York. I know he is an internationalist. I am an American. [Applause.]

I am a selfish American. I believe in my country, and I want to promote its prosperity and its glory. I say with the poet:

This is my own, my native land.

And all of this international, socialistic, maudlin sentiment that is being propagated over the world is childish and academic. It is the spawn of those philosophers who learn human nature on the fifth story and not of those who have learned it from flesh-and-blood men. The point I want to inquire about is this: Who knows where we are going to get all the money to respond to all these cablegrams and all of these schemes and chimerical propositions for the uplift of mankind? Every Cabinet minister is busy with pencil and pad of paper showing how he could spend hundreds of millions of dollars to raise mankind to a state of bliss, and the head of every department and every committee is working overtime devising ways and means to spend sums of money which less than a decade ago were regarded as colossal expenditures. Now it is the building of homes for the poor. Now it is the purchase of lands for the homeless. Now it is railroads. Now it is telephones. Now it is an expenditure for the Navy of the United States which, I am told, exceeds the expenditure of Germany, England, and France for almost a decade before the war. Where are all these billions and billions coming from? Now, let me tell you. I understand every eleventh man in the United States pays an income tax. I am reliably informed that that is practically the entire source of our income, looking to the future. We will have no more whisky tax; we will have no great tariff tax of consequence, for it has dropped to $150,000,000 in the last fiscal year. I am told you are going to get it by the income tax. That is where you will get the money to build this Navy. Now, my friends, there are many hard-headed business men here, and I submit to you gentlemen you must do your own thinking about this question. Where are you going to get the billions to do these numerous things? I believe we have a per capita circulation of about $55. That would make a total of $5,500,000,000. But what is $5,500,000,000 considering the activities of the Government of the United States? Are you going to take every dollar there is in the United States out of the pockets of the people every six months? Why, you ought at least to allow it to go back into their pockets again and let them feel of it three or four times before you take it away again. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, here is what you are going to do: You take an income tax from every eleventh man, and you buy a little boat or a little railroad, or build a little house for the poor, or something else, and the other 10 fellows say, "That looks to me like pretty good business." Of course the eleventh fellow feels badly about it; but naturally, as long as these incomes hold out, you are going to have every sort of paternalistic suggestion. You are going to have socialistic doctrines and Government ownership preached from every rostrum. You are going to have attic philosophers telling the people that they ought to be supported by the Government; but is that all you are going to do? Oh, no. The day is coming, and it is not going to be long in coming at the rate we are traveling, when you will milk the incomes of the United States dry. Every man with the brain and the brawn and the will to work 12 or 14 hours a day to build a fortune will be driven out of business, and you will destroy the initiative of the American spirit which has builded up this great Nation of a hundred million people, the wealthiest in the world. Gentlemen do not earn incomes merely to have them taken from them by some dreamer of internationalism to build houses for some lazy fellows who will not work enough and save enough to build their own houses. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I have inquired diligently now for several months for somebody who says this Government and this people are able to carry on these colossal undertakings and bear these colossal burdens. You go to the chairman of the committee and ask him in vain. He does not know who in this Republic says that we can carry on these colossal undertakings and inflict upon the business of this country these tremendous taxes and not bring to the people of this country the greatest panic the world has ever seen. We are inflating the currency in order to get more money so that we can tax more money from the people, and the result is that inflation means high prices of the things that folks eat and the things that folks wear. Have a care! You have used up largely the accumulated wealth of Europe by absorbing their securities. You have placed a colossal mortgage upon the future of the destiny and the property of the people of the United States. You have done that, and you have spent the money, but you can not keep on writing these first, second, third, fourth, and fifth mortgages against the property of this country. The people of the United States might as well face the question.

After all these academic speeches over the world it requires as much labor now to produce steak and pork chops and eggs and food generally and clothing generally as it did before this war began. So when you get right back to the proposition, we might just as well tell the folks that these appropriations have got to stop, or that you are going to stop business, because you will make it worthless to the man who engages in business. Do you suppose any man wants to go out and engage in manufacturing enterprises or in farming operations, or in milling or mining, to make an income, for no other purpose than to have some dreamy-eyed socialist suggest that it be spent to uplift mankind? I hope I am a bad prophet, but you are the body that under the Constitution is responsible for revenue legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. IGOE. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. You are responsible, not the President in Paris; you under the Constitution as the coordinate branch of government are clothed by the Constitution with the power to originate revenue legislation. And every Member of this body has his own responsibility, and you ought to ask yourselves and give yourselves an intelligent answer, Where are the billions to come from to pay these colossal expenses? Mark you, gentlemen of this Congress, you are doing more than expending billions, you are teaching the American people a doctrine of paternalism that will curse them and their generations yet unborn in this country. If you only threw away and wasted and squandered the billions of money taken from taxation and business, if you only brought on industrial panic, the people could recover from that. Poverty and panic are not the worst things in the world, but you are spending billions taken from every eleventh man in a way to teach the American laboring man, the farmer, the railroad owner and the telephone owner, that the Government owes them a duty to support them and to lend them money and finance their operations and take charge of them.

The Government consists of nothing except the people in the aggregate. The Government is a pauper, has not a dollar except it taxes it from the people.

We see a strange tragedy here to-day—Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Dr. Jekyll demands the people to lend him money, and Mr. Hyde is telling the people that he is going to give them money to help them out of want and poverty. Dr. Jekyll says to the people of the United States, "Buy liberty bonds and war-saving stamps, and if you do not you will have to sign a yellow card that you are not a true patriot." And Mr. Hyde says, "We are going to build homes for the farmer, buy railroads, telephones," and so forth. Wonderful consistency! Do you know we need two political parties in this country, Mr. Chairman? We need one party that stands for the Constitution and liberty by law; that stands for America and for representative democracy and for a conservative Government. Let the radicals get to themselves. The misery of this situation is, the pitiful tragedy of politics in America to-day is, that we have two political parties vying with each other as to which can offer the most to the radical vote and get it in the largest quantity. [Applause.] The Republicans proceed to enact radical legislation, and we Democrats go you one better and advocate more radical legislation. [Applause.] There comes a time in this country, with bills like this, where we appropriate money that no sensible man knows where it comes from, bills threatening the industrial safety of this Republic. You have to have a conservative party to run the Government and hold in check the radical party.

Mr. Chairman, I wish some voice might cry out in the wilderness to tell the people of this country that it is their duty to support the Government and not the Government's duty to support them. The first two fundamental principles of government, and they are worth more than all the balance combined, are the protection of life and the protection of property. If there is no protection of property protection of life is worthless, because, in the language of the Merchant of Venice, "you may as well take my life as to take the means whereby I do sustain it."

They have more liberty in socialistic Russia to-day than they know what to do with. [Laughter and applause.] A man can absolutely yell at the top of his voice in a meeting house; he can shoot; he can do anything on earth except to retire to his home castle and say "This is my citadel and I and my wife and children are safe." He can not do that. He can do anything on earth in Russia except to make a crop with the assurance that he can gather his own crop. He has all the liberty that a wild ass on the prairie has [laughter and applause] without the mule's security. [Laughter.]

What we need in this country is for the laboring man, the farmer, the banker, the people of the United States, to return to the old-time religion of Lincoln, of Jefferson, of Grover Cleveland, and the democracy of the country. Why do we not tell the people honestly and fairly that it is none of the Government's business whether they have a farm or not, it is the business of the individual to depend on himself. [Applause.] Do you know we are binding the hands and the arms of the people to their sides by the socialistic enactments. If you want a man's arm to wither, bind it by his side and give him no use of it. I think the most hateful doctrine in the world is the doctrine of socialism. I had rather have anarchy than socialism, because you recover from it more quickly. Anarchy is a good deal like a violent attack of pneumonia—the crisis may pass in three or four days; but socialism is the galloping consumption of the Nation [laughter and applause], where you linger and languish and perish away. I would say to the people who advocate socialistic legislation to rise a little earlier; if you are a farmer, save fertilizer more diligently; if you are an artisan, learn to have a little saving laid by, because depending on the Government will never get you into competency. That about completes what I have to say.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. In view of the very able speech of my colleague, is he going to vote for this three-year proposition?

Mr. DIES. Why, no; I already have all upon my conscience that I care to carry with me out into the security of private life when I retire from Congress. [Prolonged applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Navy: For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services in the Navy Department, or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, $150,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANDALL: Page 4, line 10, after the figures "$150,000," insert—

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, required to furnish the adjutant general of each State, or to the officer thereof exercising corresponding functions, after requisition therefor, the names, home addresses, and rank attained and the date and reason for termination of service of the men of such States who served in the United States Navy or Marine Corps during the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order. I appreciate the fact that it is subject to a point of order, but the object of the amendment is to enable the communities, the various cities in the States of this country, to secure the names of the men who served from the various local communities in the present war. A similar amendment, if this be permitted, will be offered to the Army bill. It requires no particular expense, but makes it possible for the local communities in the States to secure from their own adjutant general the honor roll of their own communities.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will state to the gentleman that the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma has passed a resolution requesting this same matter in reference to the Army and Navy.

Mr. RANDALL. I am informed by the chairman of the committee that these States can get this information at the present time, but I desire to say that the only information that can be secured is the names of the men who enlisted from the State, but not their home addresses or any information of a local character.

Mr. GARD. Are not those facts known in the several States?

Mr. RANDALL. They are known so far as the draft lists are concerned, but volunteers often enlist from points outside of the State.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman taken pains to ascertain what additional cost this will entail, if the department undertakes it at the present time?

Mr. RANDALL. I will say to the gentleman that I understand there is a great surplus of clerks in the War Department at the present time. There would not be any extra expense incurred in connection with it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has stated that it is his understanding that there is a surplus of clerks in the War Department. In the preparation of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill The Adjutant General appeared before the subcommittee having that bill in charge and stated that he himself would need $3,000,000 alone for clerical work in his bureau to do the work that has been planned, which he regards as pressingly needed.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman advise us what is the condition with respect to the Navy, whether their clerical force is overworked or underworked?

Mr. STAFFORD. As to the Navy, though I have not heard the chairman of the committee mention what action they have taken upon it, it was suggested that if they were permitted they would continue during the next fiscal year the employment of yeomen and yeowomen in clerical positions, and still they would not have a sufficient force unless we authorized them to employ more than provided on their statutory roll. We allowed them a lump-sum appropriation of over $1,000,000, distributed to the various bureaus for clerical services in these respective bureaus, and that was predicated somewhat upon the idea that they would continue a large contingent of yeomen and yeowomen in the service next year. They testified that they were going to go before the Naval Affairs Committee and ask for an authorization for the utilization of yeomen and yeowomen for the next fiscal year. Whether the committee has seen fit to grant that, I do not know.

Mr. PADGETT. The committee has not granted it; and on the declaration of peace the yeomen and yeowomen will go out.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to compliment the committee on taking that position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gent' from California has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think we would be justified in continuing in the service, when the war is at an end, the yeomen and yeowomen for clerical positions when there are plenty of clerks to be obtained to fill those positions from the civil-service register.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the department tells me that under this bill they are going to be exceedingly pressed for clerical help. They are claiming that they will not have help enough to do the work that will devolve upon them. This would necessitate a good deal of extra work and considerable expense. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Aviation, Navy: For aviation, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for procuring, producing, constructing, operating, preserving, storing, and handling aircraft, establishment and maintenance of aircraft stations, including the acquisition of land by purchase, donation, or condemnation for erection of a factory for lighter-than-air machines; and for experimental work in development of aviation for naval purposes, $25,000,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for drafting, clerical, inspection, and messenger service for aircraft stations shall not exceed $300,000: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay out of this appropriation the amounts due on claims for damages which have occurred or may occur to private property growing out of the operations of naval aircraft: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for maintenance of more than six heavier-than-air stations on the coasts of continental United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the language on page 4, line 25——

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order has been reserved which will have to be first disposed of before amendments may be offered. Does the gentleman insist upon the point of order?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, what is the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order partly to obtain information about some new phraseology. I wish first, however, to ascertain what is the purpose of providing $25,000,000 for aviation purposes for the Navy, now that the war is at an end. I think some explanation should be made of that tremendous amount which it is suggested shall be appropriated for the Navy for that purpose in peace times.

Mr. PADGETT. The original appropriation submitted was for $225,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was based, if the gentleman will permit, on the idea that we were to continue in the war?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I understand. Now, I will give the gentleman the history of it. When the bureau chiefs came before us they set forth in the hearings the demand and necessity as they estimated for $85,000,000, and the Secretary of the Navy in his hearing arbitrarily reduced that to $36,000,000. The committee in considering it has reduced it to $25,000,000. I want to say to the gentleman that I doubt very much if $25,000,000 will carry on the activities of the Navy with reference to the ships and the limited number of shore stations. We put in a proviso there limiting the shore stations to not exceed six in the continental limits of the United States. Now, I have a letter here from the Secretary to which I desire to call your attention. He says:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 11, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, in which you request that the committee be furnished with a full and detailed statement of the items, the usages, and purposes for which the $36,000,000 is desired in the item "Aviation—Navy," as it appears on page 11 of the first draft of the naval appropriation bill.

The following is a detailed statement of the estimate of expenditures covering the $36,000,000 recommended:

Aircraft (heavier than air):
Machines for experimenting and development purposes		$3,774,000
Engines for above		2,338,000
		6,112,000
Aircraft (lighter than air):
Craft for operation of stations now built	$2,005,000
Craft for experimenting and development purposes	7,500,000
Engines for above	701,000
		10,206,000
For development of instruments and accessories, including radio sets and kite-balloon winches	650,000
Operation of coastal and training stations already built	8,500,000
Experimental work not otherwise covered (such as Argon gas and landing attachments aboard ship	2,000,000

Clerical, drafting, and technical force	300,000
		19,650,000
Total		35,968,000
Estimate		36,000,000

It will be noted from the above statement that there is no estimate for new coastal stations, except a new station for a rigid-dirigible factory. It is impossible to construct a rigid-dirigible factory near the present heavier-than-air factory in the Philadelphia Navy Yard because of lack of space.

A larger appropriation for lighter-than-air aircraft is requested because in this respect Navy aviation is not as far developed as in the heavier-than-air aircraft.

The development of aviation and progress of the art is such that it is strongly recommended that the appropriation be made in a lump sum, as recommended, so that the department may experiment and develop aviation along lines that from time to time may seem most advantageous to the naval service.

Inclosed you will please find a copy of a report on aviation by Admiral Mayo, commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet, and particular attention is invited to the concluding paragraph wherein he cites the experiments and development in the rigid-dirigible type of aircraft of other countries.

Very sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

HON. L. P. PADGETT,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
U. S. S. PENNSYLVANIA, FLAGSHIP,
November 23, 1918.

From: Commander in Chief.
To: Secretary of the Navy (Operations).
Subject: Report on development of rigid and nonrigid airships and plans for future developments (British Navy).

1. The failure of the Zeppelins in the raids over Great Britain and the destruction of several Zeppelins over the North Sea by planes carried on cruisers, and on one occasion by a large American flying boat, has induced the belief in the minds of many officers that the lighter-than-air ship has been definitely displaced by the heavier-than-air machines.

2. Those officers who have had most to do with the lighter-than-air type contend that the destruction of Zeppelins in raids does not prove that these ships are not valuable for other purposes. They contend that Zeppelins (of the type of those destroyed) should not have been used for raiding, as, due to their small capacity, they could not climb high enough to avoid antiaircraft guns or fighting planes, and, due to the inflammable gas (hydrogen) with which the bags were filled, they were helpless against attack.

3. The improvements in lighter-than-air ship design have been such that the latest German rigid airship has a speed of about 70 to 80 miles per hour, a ceiling of 24,000 feet, and a rate of climb superior to any plane. With these characteristics a rigid is comparatively safe against attack from antiaircraft guns or heavier-than-air machines. Additional safety has been assured to the lighter-than-air ship by the development of a noninflammable gas (heliun), of which the United States possesses almost limitless natural resources.

4. The airship's chief value in naval warfare is in scouting and in keeping large areas of sea under observation. This work may be divided into two general classes:

(a) Antisubmarine and convoy-escort work.
(b) Work in scouting in conjunction with the fleets.

5. Much work of class (a) has already been done by nonrigid airships in Great Britain and in the United States. The nonrigid type of airship is not suitable for any activities where it is subject to attack by airplanes, for the construction features of this type prevent building airships of a size large enough to obtain sufficient speed, ceiling, or climbing ability. Nonrigid airships can never have a sufficient radius of action to make them satisfactory for distant scouting. The latest British nonrigid airships are probably nearly as efficient as any future design of that type for the performance of the tasks which this type is fitted to perform.

6. For work of class (a), where enemy planes or antiaircraft guns may be encountered, and for work of class (b) the rigid type of airship is essential to the highest efficiency.

DEVELOPMENT OF HEAVIER-THAN-AIR AND LIGHTER-THAN-AIR CRAFT DURING THE LAST FOUR YEARS.

7. The development of rigid airships has been even more rapid than that of heavier than air. In 1914 the average endurance of a German rigid at cruising speed was under 24 hours and the maximum full speed about 50 miles per hour. In 1918 (German L–70 class, 2,195,000 cubic feet capacity) the endurance at 45 miles per hour has risen to 177.5 hours and the maximum full speed to 77 miles per hour. The ceiling has correspondingly increased from 6,000 feet to 23,000 feet. The British R–38 class (2,720,000 cubic feet capacity) has an estimated cruising endurance at 45 miles per hour of 211 hours, 34 hours greater than the German L–70 class.

8. Tables (1) and (2) give the progress in lighter than air and heavier than air since 1914. Table (3) shows the difference in performance between corresponding lighter-than-air and heavier-than-air craft of 1918.

9. It will be seen that at the present time the largest rigids in commission have over eleven times the total lift of the corresponding heavier than air, and that the disposable lift is about eighteen times greater.

LARGE AIRSHIPS PROBABLE FUTURE DEVELOPMENT.

10. It is now proposed to consider more fully the possibilities of the large airship. Table 5 shows the approximate dimensions of a series of airships similar in form to British R–33.

TABLE 5.—Approximate dimensions of airships similar in form to British R–33.

Capacity.	Gross lift.	Length.	Diameter.
		Feet.	Feet.
2,000,000	60.7	643	79
3,000,000	91.1	736	90.4
4,000,000	121.4	810	99.5
5,000,000	151.8	872	107.2
6,000,000	182.2	927	113.9
7,000,000	212.5	976	119.9
8,000,000	242.8	1,021	125.4
9,000,000	272.3	1,061	130.4
10,000,000	303.6	1,100	135.1

11. It will be seen that although a 10,000,000 cubic feet capacity rigid has five times the gross lift and over five times the disposable lift of the present 2,000,000 cubic feet capacity rigid, the dimensions of the large ship are only one and seven-tenths times greater.

12. With a rigid of about 10,000,000 cubic feet capacity there would be an endurance of approximately three weeks at 40 to 45 miles per hour, a maximum speed of 70 to 80 miles per hour, a ceiling of some 30,000 feet, and a maximum range of over 20,000 miles, or nearly once around the world.

PAST BRITISH POLICY.

13. Great Britain first appears to have recognized the danger of falling behind in airships in July, 1913, as the following extract from Admiralty policy on the subject will show:

"Various circumstances have since arisen which have led my lords to view with considerable concern the position occupied by this country, and after full consideration they have decided that it is no longer possible to pursue a waiting policy, having regard to the safety of the country."

14. The new circumstances referred to may be briefly stated as follows:

"First. The success of the type of large airships possessed by Germany has been demonstrated by numerous flights of these vessels over sea and land. As an example, there may be quoted the case of the airship sighted on June 2 in the North Sea over the Terschelling Banks, proceeding with four torpedo-boat destroyers at full speed. These craft were again sighted 24 hours later. Also the regularity with which the passenger-carrying Zeppelins carry out extended flights lasting many hours over Germany indicates clearly how reliable these vessels are now becoming.

"Second. The introduction of the new German aerial bill, together with a supplementary estimate which provides for the establishment of a naval fleet of 10 Zeppelin airships and a number of hydroplanes, with full equipment of sheds, stores, personnel, etc. For carrying out this scheme a sum of £300,881 has been provided for the year 1913–14, exclusive of the cost of acquiring any land for the stations.

"The following extract of a memorandum accompanying the supplementary estimates indicates the view of the German Government: 'The present state of the experiments carried out with airships and aeroplanes show that the new weapon forms for naval purposes a valuable extension and adjunct to tactical and strategic scouting, and under certain circumstances can also be employed with advantage as a weapon of defense.'

"Italy already possesses several airships of a small type and is now pushing on with the construction of three larger vessels. It is understood that three airship stations are to be established along the Adriatic coast. Russia has recently placed an order for a large Parseval airship for naval purposes.

"The situation in this country with regard to naval airships is that the Admiralty are on the eve of possessing two airships of medium size, which were purchased mainly for the purpose of training officers and men in airship work. One airship station on the Medway is being established and two sheds are being erected there.

"My lords consider that, in view of the activity displayed by foreign powers, it is necessary to proceed at once on an expansion of this branch of the service."

15. Acting on the above, the Admiralty proceeded to develop airships, but the policy was finally checked by the then first lord (Mr. Winston Churchill), who, in January, 1915, canceled the building of rigid airships and ordered No. 9 (building at Vickers) to be suspended. Mr. Churchill indicated that three Parsevals, two Astra Torres, and the few other odd nonrigids of no military value would suffice the country's needs. In July, 1915, Mr. Balfour championed the cause of airships, ordered No. 9 to be re-commended and other rigids to be built, and laid the foundation for the present constructional organization.

PRESENT BRITISH POLICY.

16. While the British Admiralty airship department has made no statement concerning a definite policy in the uses of the rigid airships that are being developed for British use, it appears that regular voyages of startling length are planned for these craft. A mail and cargo service connecting the British Isles, Canada, the British colonies in Africa, India, and Australia appears to be the goal of the Admiralty policy. Surely such work is entirely within the scope of the air fleet that Britain is preparing.

17. In time of war these airships can be concentrated over any area of the seas surrounding English possessions to hamper hostile surface craft and to assist the Navy in its operations.

GERMANY'S AIRSHIP PROGRAM.

18. The results already attained have justified the confidence felt by the German Navy in its airships when used in their proper sphere as the eyes of the fleet. Their Zeppelins did much to save the High Seas Fleet at the Battle of Jutland, to save their cruiser squadron on the Yarmouth raid, and were instrumental in sinking the Nottingham and Falmouth. Had the positions been reversed in the Jutland battle and had the British had rigids to enable them to locate it, they would probably have annihilated the German High Seas Fleet.

AIRSHIPS.

19. At the present time Germany possesses apparently 50 efficient rigid airships built since 1915, in addition to a few nonrigids which she uses only for training purposes.

20. The Schutte-Lenz works, which build rigid airships, take about 12 weeks to build each ship. The maximum output of their factories is 1 ship every 16 days. Germany's total output of rigid airships would therefore appear to be 30 rigids a year, or 1 every 12 days.

SHEDS.

21. The latest information shows that Germany has 54 housing and constructional sheds, capable of holding 71 rigid airships. This surplus of shed accommodation, placed all over the country, enables ships which can not get to their base after a long cruise to make for vacant berths where the weather conditions are more favorable.

BRITISH RIGID AIRSHIPS.

22. While no other nation has done as well as the Germans in rigid airships, the British, alive to the need of maintaining sea supremacy, are closely competing. A few days ago they held acceptance trials of a 1,460,000 cubic foot ship (the R–31), which made over 55 knots and could lift 18 tons (or, say, 200 persons).

23. This ship turned in a complete circle of 0.7 mile diameter in three minutes. Another British ship now under way (R–38) will have a displacement of 2,750,000 cubic feet, a speed of about 70 knots, and a range of well over 200 hours, or safely across the Atlantic and return in any weathers except the worst storms.

24. The British, who, despite having shot down so many bombing Zeppelins, are keenly aware of their utility, are embarked upon a construction program of 16 of modern type (besides smaller, now obsolete, types already in commission and used for training); the French have a similar program, calling for 8; it is understood the Italians are to construct 2; and our joint Army and Navy rigid-airship board has recommended that we begin with 4 for the Navy.

CONCLUSION.

25. The development of the nonrigid airship is practically at a standstill, while the development of the rigid type is being pushed by Germany, France, and Great Britain. The future of the rigid airship depends upon the ability of its designers to secure for it a superiority, relative to heavier-than-air craft, in radius, ceiling, climbing ability, and an approximation to the speed of the fighting planes.

H. T. MAYO.

Mr. STAFFORD. How did the committee arrive at the appropriation of $25,000,000?

Mr. PADGETT. The committee reduced it to $25,000,000; but you will notice that we put in a provision that no part of this appropriation shall be expended for maintenance of more than six heavier-than-air stations in the continental limits of the United States. That would limit the scope of the operations for air stations. I think there are some 12 or 15 stations being operated now.

Mr. STAFFORD. In arriving at that estimate of $25,000,000, what items did the committee include and what items did the committee eliminate?

Mr. PADGETT. We did not eliminate any specifically. We reduced it to $25,000,000 and put that provision here, and it will necessarily limit the activities of the Government in aircraft.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the committee considered, in arriving at this appropriation, the expediency of the Navy obtaining motors and flying machines from the War Department, where they have a large number in excess of their needs?

Mr. PADGETT. That matter was presented; but if the War Department were to furnish them the Navy Department would have to compensate the War Department for them, and the War Department would turn the money into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the committee considered the feasibility of having them transferred from the War Department to the Navy Department?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; we did not, because we did not know how the War Department is situated with reference to them.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. SNELL. Must not they have a large amount on hand at the present time of these of all kinds?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know; but the engines of the Navy are in some respects different from the Army engines.

Mr. SNELL. I would like also to ask in reference to the acquisition of land. What land is it contemplated purchasing now?

Mr. PADGETT. The only thing contemplated is securing land for the erection of a factory for the construction of lighter-than-air machines—the large dirigible machines.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the Government own some automobile factories in this country at the present time?

Mr. PADGETT. None of which I know.

Mr. SNELL. I thought they had furnished money or had a very large interest in some of them?

Mr. PADGETT. We made a very full inquiry and they told us the Government had no place for investigating——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. We have a large station in Florida, and I think there are about 1,100 acres in that navy yard, and we have there a large factory for the construction of heavier-than-air machines.

Mr. SNELL. Could not these lighter-than-air machines be constructed in the same factory?

Mr. PADGETT. No; they said not; but it requires a large area to bring these machines down. They are tremendous machines. They are about 800 or 900 feet long.

Mr. SNELL. Then, the Government has no real monetary interest in several of the large factories where they have been producing?

Mr. PADGETT. None that I know of. We inquired very diligently if there was any place that the Government had where they could use for these lighter-than-air machines and they said positively no.

Mr. SNELL. And they have not any of these machines at present?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. SNELL. This is an entirely new development?

Mr. PADGETT. It is entirely experimental. Now, I have here, which the Secretary transmitted, a letter from Admiral Mayo, who is commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet, in which he gives a summary or a review of the heavier-than-air and lighter-than-air development abroad and our shortage of the lighter-than-air and the need of developing, experimental generally, in the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many lighter-than-air machines has the Navy at the present time, and how many are in course of construction?

Mr. PADGETT. None.

Mr. STAFFORD. What was this large airship that passed over Washington on its way from New York down to the coast a few Sundays ago.

Mr. PADGETT. They have some kite balloons and some semidirigibles, but nothing of the type that is contemplated here.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many of these semidirigibles have they in operation and how many in course of construction?

Mr. PADGETT. I could not tell the gentleman; that is not contemplated in this. They had some few of them; I think some 8 or 10 of them.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman from Tennessee has been for many years a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Fortunately or unfortunately for a number of years I have been a member of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House.

Mr. PADGETT. I think that was the good fortune of the committee.

Mr. McKENZIE. I listened to the reading of the letter a few moments ago which the chairman received from the Secretary of the Navy, and among the items, as I remember, there was something like $2,000,000 that was to be used in experimenting with argon gas and different kinds of balloons and different types of aircraft. Now, I am calling the gentleman's attention to that for this reason, that pending in the Committee on Military Affairs is the regular annual appropriation bill, and one of the items asked for in that bill is $10,000,000 by the Aircraft Board to be used for experimental purposes, and among the things with which they expect to experiment is this same character of gas and also the development of aircraft machines. Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he does not think that we have about reached the point when the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives should have some defined policy whereby these activities would be centralized, and not have two or three great concerns experimenting with the same sort of thing—for instance, gas? Is there any reason that can be given why we should appropriate a large sum of money to the Navy to experiment with a certain type of gas and another large sum to the Army to experiment along the same line?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has again expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve the point of order further for the purpose of inquiring——

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like recognition in my own right in order to answer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman. Of course, the point of order is pending.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that.

The CHAIRMAN. Or, rather, the point of order is reserved. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the chairman, in his time, reply to the query propounded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE].

Mr. PADGETT. I was going to state that you could pick out certain definite proposals or propositions where it would be well to combine them and have only one. But when we were abroad we talked with the officers of the Army in England, where they have combined the aviation activities of the Navy and the Army, about this matter, and they did not approve it. They disapproved it, and said it was not working satisfactorily. And we also talked with some naval officers, and they stated that it was not satisfactory.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think it will go without any argument that the officers in both of these Government activities would say that it would be a mistake. But I have the taxpayer in mind. Would it be a mistake from the taxpayer's standpoint?

Mr. PADGETT. The activities of the Navy in aviation are very different from the activities of the Army. This $2,000,000 that you mentioned here is, a part of it, for gas, but a great deal of it, the majority part of it, is for the development of the means of alighting on the water, alighting on the ship and off of the ship, and to develop the activities in aviation adapted to the ship, on and off. And that is one of the big items that they wish to develop. It is a very important one. It was also suggested to the committee that provision should be made for the construction of aircraft ships, in order to carry aircraft to be used in scouting in mid-ocean, and also that provision should be made to have aircraft actually on the fighting ships, so as to go along with the fleets. These matters are questions of experiment and development that the Navy alone could successfully conduct.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What about the gas? What is the Navy going to spend this money for?

Mr. PADGETT. They did not separate the item as to how much of it was for experimenting with the gas and how much of it is for the other. But in order to cut the whole thing down we took off $11,000,000 of the estimate of the Secretary, so as to limit the activities along all of those lines. He wanted $36,000,000. We reduced it to $25,000,000.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Is this experiment to be made in the manufacture and discovery of new gases?

Mr. PADGETT. We have already discovered a new gas, called argon.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Possibly they have not reached the last stage yet.

Mr. PADGETT. No; and this is for the development of it. When it was first discovered it was supposed to be so costly as to be prohibitive. They have so far developed it that when you consider the durability of it as compared with hydrogen there is very little difference now in the cost between the argon gas and the hydrogen gas.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The point on which I was anxious to get the information was whether this money is to be spent by the Navy in an attempt to develop new gases or in experiments in its application? I mean by "application" its application to the enemy.

Mr. PADGETT. It is to develop the production of it the most economically, which has already been accomplished largely, but not satisfactorily as yet. It is to experiment and develop its best uses and the handling of it and the manufacture of it, and also for the use of it and the development of it practically in the Navy.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Well, we have a Chemical Warfare Service in the Army which devotes its activities entirely and exclusively to that matter. Does the gentleman think the Navy ought to go along and do the same thing?

Mr. PADGETT. I think the Navy ought to try it. Otherwise, the Navy would be ignorant of the uses and practical application of it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I can not see why. The Chemical Warfare Service is not keeping it a secret.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Just a moment more. The Chemical Warfare Service will not keep secret from the Navy anything they discover, and they are really the people who are going to apply it at last in 99 per cent of the cases where it is applied. Now, it has occurred to me that it is proposed, in fact, to have the Army do it and the Navy do it, when, I suppose, as a matter of fact, some civil bureau in the Government is going to substantially do the work for either the Army or the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. The gas part of it is but a small part.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It depends entirely on what the gentleman means by small.

Mr. STAFFORD. Only $2,000,000.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is small.

Mr. STAFFORD. Small in the view of the naval propagandists.

Mr. PADGETT. Landing attachments aboard ship. That is embraced in there with the gas, and that is a large part of the expenditure.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman acquaint the House with the amount of the expenditure by the Navy for aviation expenses during the last year, or up to date?

Mr. PADGETT. I can not tell about that, but the appropriation was $220,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; and the appropriation the year before was three and a half millions; and now you are asking for $25,000,000, and yet the committee has no information to give us as to the amount expended out of this $220,000,000 lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. PADGETT. It has not been expended yet. It was only started the 1st of July, the gentleman should remember.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is still running and available, and you can be sure that they are going to spend a large portion of it, because it was only $3,500,000 in the beginning, and now it has been increased to $25,000,000.

Mr. PADGETT. They have been economical.

Mr. STAFFORD. You should say liberal.

Mr. PADGETT. I did not think that we ought to have a larger amount. The committee thought we ought not to cripple the aviation service, but that we ought to go ahead and develop it and utilize the lessons we learned from it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that new language found on line 25, page 4, and on lines 1 and 2, on page 5, "including the acquisition of land by purchase, donation, or condemnation for erection of a factory for lighter-than-air machines."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, that was a site that was covered.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 5, line 3, strike out "$25,000,000" and insert "$15,000,000."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, there is no use in going into details on this item. We are talking about $25,000,000 or $30,000,000, and there are less than 25 or 30 Members in this Hall.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is about a $1,000,000 apiece.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Has the gentleman from New York any information on this subject that the Committee on Naval Affairs could not give us, even if the House were full?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly, and plenty of it. I have a lot of information which I think, if we had a full House here, would be very valuable. We are asked to appropriate $25,000,000, and yet we are unable to ascertain just how this money is to be expended.

In reply to an inquiry, the chairman of the committee reads a letter from the Secretary of the Navy explaining this $25,000,000, and yet the Secretary has over $200,000,000 for aviation available for the current fiscal year.

The trouble with American aviation, gentleman, is that it has had too much money. That was our whole mistake in the beginning. We started off with $640,000,000, and I do not know how much was appropriated afterwards, and we have got less to show for it than any country in the world. And although we have the best industries, the best inventive genius in the world, we have not a motor to-day that will stand up with the French and Italian and English motors. The fact is you can not build aviation motors with press agents, and you can not build up an aviation service by politics. The law of gravitation knows no politics, and if you have not got a good machine it will not fly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman no doubt has read the address by Secretary Baker commending Col. Deeds for having perfected the Liberty motor?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; and the Secretary in his report said the biggest achievement of the war was the Liberty motor. That is absolutely incorrect, and he can not get a single human being to agree with him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is not consistent with the report made by Mr. Justice Hughes nor with the report of the Attorney General suggesting that Col. Deeds should be court-martialed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; nor is it consistent to take this motor and compare it with other motors. It is a good 400-horsepower motor; that is all. But to produce this 400 horsepower motor you stopped the industries of the United States; you stopped everything; and when they discovered that they could not use the Liberty motor in pursuit machines they said: "We will not have pursuit machines."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know that the gentleman knows all about aviation, and I knew he had read the address of the Secretary of War, and therefore I wanted to remind him of what the Secretary said in New York in commending Col. Deeds, although Mr. Justice Hughes and the Department of Justice had recommended that Col. Deeds be court-martialed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, it is an Ohio baby. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has had the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. He comes from Ohio.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That inference might be drawn from what the gentleman said. Of course I would not assume from what the gentleman said that the Ohio interests were strong enough in the matter of an expenditure of $640,000,000 to induce the Secretary of War, at variance with the Attorney General and Mr. Justice Hughes, to commend Col. Deeds in spite of the fact that he was recommended for court-martial.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Would the gentleman go further? Even now, in peace times, the gentleman will understand how they club and chum together, but in war times, when we were in need of pursuit machines, we could not get a single machine from here because no pursuit machine was being built in this country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Our friends on the other side were telling us that the time had come when we were to have quite a number of them, although we were afterwards told that we did not have in France half a dozen battle planes of American manufacture.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That was true. When the DH planes did come over they were good planes, and they did some bombing, but we did not receive any battle planes. Why? Because the Liberty motor would not fit them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are we to understand that Col. Deeds, who was recommended for court-martial by the Attorney General and Mr. Justice Hughes, and who is commended by the Secretary of War, is notwithstanding that fact a $640,000,000 baby of the Secretary of War?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If I told you what the airmen thought of it in August, September, and October, it would not be couched in parliamentary language, and could not be printed. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman from New York believe that the cherishing of Col. Deeds, who had under his control this $640,000,000, was worth that much to the aviators of the country?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I should say not—rather expensive experiment that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Now, gentlemen, we want to build an air industry in this country. Most of this money, as the committee says, is for experimental purposes. The Army is going to come in with a bill in a few days asking for millions for experimental purposes. The services are overlapping in experimental work. We must prevent waste; we must cut down expenses. We will have waste as long as we go on duplicating work and expenditures. In want to say this for the naval air service: Its organization overseas was splendid. It had an efficient executive department. Their management was good. Their cooperation with this country was much better than ours in the Army. Now, the $2,000,000 which is suggested by the chairman for experimental purposes, for landing and taking off from ships, ought to be allowed. That is now purely in an experimental stage. In answering an inquiry made a few minutes ago, I will say there is no difference between the motor for a machine that flies over water and one that flies over land. The air is just the same in both places. The best help we can give to aviation is not to squander millions. We must produce a true American motor, a true American plane. We can do it if you will give us a chance, but we will never do it when we have the Navy dabbling in it and the Army dabbling in it, and the Marine Corps dabbling in it and the Post Office Department dabbling in it.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. McKEOWN. I have been told that the motors on naval planes were slower than the motors on the Army planes. Is that true?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. One of the motors of naval planes is a low-compression motor. All kinds of motors are used for naval planes, same as land planes. It comes back to the question of the Liberty motor again. They wanted to utilize the Liberty motor for all machines. The big naval bombing machine, the coast-patrol machine, took the low-compression motor, because it was not necessary to go to such altitudes. Again, it was adapting the plane to the motor and not the motor to the plane. But when you have a light machine and do not need a 400-horsepower motor and want altitude and speed, why, of course, it will be just the same whether you fly over the land or over the water. The trouble is we are dividing this thing. We have four different departments overlapping. We took away $2,000,000 from the Post Office Department the other day. We have all these people dabbling in this, instead of having a comprehensive united air department taking up this subject for the Government and accomplishing results and developing a big aeronautical industry in this country. I submit that the $15,000,000, with what they have on hand, is amply sufficient, more than enough, considering Army appropriations. Of course, if you are going to buy fields all along the coast, if the main thing is to buy land, I do not know anything about land values. I know that we spent a lot of money for land down in Miami, Fla. The Florida people wanted an aviation station. They came up here with delegations asking for it, and now that they have got it they ask the Navy Department to take it away, because it disturbs the morning sleep of the guests at the hotels. Is the gentleman aware of that?

The Government spent thousands and thousands of dollars at the Miami station, and now the Miami people are asking the Navy Department to move away because it disturbs the sleep of their winter guests. So if you want to buy land come in here and say you want to buy land, but do not blame everything on aviation. If we take off $10,000,000 and leave $15,000,000 to develop aviation, divided up so much for planes, so much for motors, so much for experimental purposes, then we are going to have something; but as long as we appropriate lump sums we will never know where it will go and never accomplish anything for aviation. When the appropriation for that $640,000,000 came into this House I was still young in my legislative career. I wanted to talk about it, but gentlemen said. "Don't! Disloyal to do so. Beware of the Germans. Don't say a word about it," and they got away with it. And what did we get out of the $640,000,000? For every American machine that went over the lines into Germany it cost us more than it would have cost to build a superdreadnaught. That is what we got out of it. Now, we might as well start on this bill. I am going to make similar amendments when the Army bill comes in. Until we have a united air service in charge of competent technical men we must watch aviation appropriations. Let us take the money away from them until they come to their senses. When they come to their senses they will have to come together, and we will have an air department the same as England and France have. They can put it all over us in the air, from either the commercial or the military standpoint. They have got it on us. We must hustle to even catch up with European countries. Gentlemen, I urge the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the committee have disposed of the question of land, and that is no longer involved.

The question was asked a moment ago, How much is unexpended of the appropriation of last year? I did not have the figures at the time, but on page 155 of the hearings you will find it stated that there would be $90,000,000 returned to the Treasury out of the appropriation of the current year.

Mr. BUTLER. How much was appropriated?

Mr. PADGETT. Two hundred and twenty million dollars.

Mr. BUTLER. That gives them $130,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. How was that $130,000,000 spent?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know. That is for the current year, and we did not go into that.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was too small an amount for the committee to consider at the present time?

Mr. PADGETT. No; but that was the appropriation that had been already made, and we were going into the appropriation for the next year.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the committee might have followed the Committee on Appropriations in seeking to cancel some of the authorizations and to withdraw some of the appropriations that were voted for war purposes alone, now that the war is at an end.

Mr. PADGETT. I have discussed that question. The Committee on Appropriations have taken up that subject, and we left it with them. They did deal with the Navy appropriation, and re-covered into the Treasury something like $200,000,000.

Mr. BROWNING. In the original print of the bill I have it marked that they have $90,000,000 on hand. Do I understand that they will still have that $90,000,000 on hand, or did a part of it go back into the Treasury?

Mr. PADGETT. That $90,000,000 will not be expended or obligated and will go back into the Treasury.

Mr. BROWNING. Is that included in the item of the appropriation bill which we have already passed, turning the money back?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not remember whether the appropriation bill included that or not, but it will go back into the Treasury and will not be expended. Now, this is an annual appropriation. The gentleman spoke of the money that we have on hand. We are appropriating for the fiscal year 1920. This appropriation that is now current is for the fiscal year 1919. It can not be used for 1920.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If they start now, they can spend money up to July.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but this bill is from July next to the July following.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What I mean is that you could get a lot of things started between now and July.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but if they start them, they would not have any money to complete them the next year. The committee was very careful about this. The committee applied the knife to it very severely and reduced it. I hope the motion will not prevail.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the gentleman absolutely sure, notwithstanding the fact that direct reference to the land has been stricken out, that money can not be spent for the purchase of land under this provision?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; because we have a provision in here that prohibits the purchase of land with the expenditure of any appropriation in the bill.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. I noticed in the paper this morning that $4,000,000 had been paid for the purchase of land at Cape May. I wondered if that was being purchased out of the money now in the hands of the department.

Mr. PADGETT. No; I understand that it was out of the lump-sum appropriation for the President.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. I am in favor of amending the bill so as to stop the purchase of land. One of the things that will appear unwise when a full investigation is had is the purchase of land during the war. Everybody in the country who had a piece of land that they wanted to unload on the Government was able to unload it on either the War Department or the Navy Department.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I understand that I am mistaken and that the prohibition I spoke of was to another matter.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. There was stricken from the paragraph the provision for the purchase of land for a lighter-than-air-machine station. I notice the gentleman has not decreased the appropriation. Was it not the intention of the committee that money was to be spent on that?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Why is it not reduced?

Mr. PADGETT. I was going to state that I was going to offer an amendment reducing it $8,000,000, the amount appropriated for the purchase of land for a lighter-than-air-craft station.

Mr. TILSON. Then the gentleman from New York is not so far off when he moves to reduce it ten millions.

Mr. PADGETT. But the gentleman did not let me finish my statement.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The authorization is still in the bill, to be expended by the Secretary of the Navy for the producing and constructing, etc., of aircraft. Can the gentleman tell me—I am entirely ignorant on the subject—how does the Navy produce and construct these aircraft without a factory?

Mr. PADGETT. They have a factory already built and operating, which was constructing aircraft during the war for heavier-than-air machines.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Then this will limit them to the operations of that factory?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Is there anything peculiar about naval aircraft except that which enables them to float on water?

Mr. PADGETT. There is a difference between the land machine and the water machine which the Navy uses. They used a machine with much less revolutions than does the machine for the Army.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The same engine that runs one would run the other?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but you would have to reduce the speed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. But it can be done?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; it can be done.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Does the gentleman think it necessary, that being true, for each department of the Government to have a separate factory? Does the gentleman think it is economical?

Mr. PADGETT. The Navy already has and is operating a factory. I do not know what the Army is doing with reference to the manufacture of machines, but the Navy expects in Philadelphia to be able to produce the aircraft machines it needs for the Navy.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It seems to me that it is an unfortunate situation that the Navy does not know what the Army is doing and the Army does not know what the Navy is doing, but the Treasury Department knows, or will in the last analysis, what they are both doing.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What they are trying to do.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. How much did we appropriate last year for aircraft—a billion dollars?

Mr. TILSON. About one billion and a half dollars. That was the whole program and nearly five hundred million dollars has been covered into the Treasury.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That leaves a billion already expended.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is only for the Army.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It occurs to me that they could use a factory and manufacture a machine that would run fast enough for the Army and one slow enough for the Navy. [Laughter.]

Mr. PADGETT. The Navy is manufacturing its machines.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. And I suppose the Post Office Department will manufacture its machines.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know what the Post Office Department intends to do.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is the trouble, no department knows what the other is doing.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have always been a friend of aviation since Prof. Langley made his experiments. I still am a friend of aviation, and I hope also I may be a friend of the people of the United States. Here is an appropriation of $25,000,000 carried in this bill for aviation purposes. That is as great an amount as was carried for the entire Navy—for the maintenance and the whole thing—if I am correct in my impression, when I first came to Congress. That is quite a development. Now, while the war was on we spent money recklessly. We had to; we were not prepared for it, and no one else was. The war is now over, and we have got to get back to a state of sanity. You can not keep on making appropriations with the idea of borrowing money from the people and never paying it back. Some day before long the appropriations will all have to be paid by taxes, and in addition we will have to pay interest upon the bonded indebtedness.

Twenty-five million dollars for aviation would be a very large sum for the Government to expend in all of its activities along that line. But here is a proposition to expend $25,000,000 in one of the least important aviation activities. We have a large amount for the Army, a considerable amount for the Post Office, and then this huge sum of $25,000,000 for the Navy. We have so gotten in the habit of talking about billions of dollars that nobody stops to think any more what a million dollars amounts to. A million dollars is a thousand thousand dollars. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], himsedf an aviator, of whom we are all proud, proposes to reduce the sum to $15,000,000. That in itself is an enormous sum of money. Let us have some sanity. Nobody will be the loser if no money is expended in the Navy for aviation except for mere maintenance. Let us get back to bedrock and know where we stand before we expend these enormous sums of money chasing phantoms. [Applause.]

I hope that we may get the amount down to $15,000,000. I am not so sure that striking the language out of the bill on the point of order will prevent the establishment of the factory on land purchased, because the bill provides for the establishment and maintenance of aircraft stations, and they have a very elastic system of construction in some of these departments. Whether that will authorize the purchase of land for the establishment of a factory I do not know, but all of the aviation services of the Government ought in truth to be concentrated in one place, and if they can not be, then they all ought to be established upon an economic basis. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. If I have time.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Under the act we passed a year ago, known as the Overman Act, to consolidate the activities of the various departments, could not authority be given to one bureau or department to attend to the manufacture and production of aircraft?

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether that authority is in the Overman Act or not. It is not material whether it is or not, because it is not and will not be exercised if it is in this act.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is material in this, that if it be in the act, it shows that Congress at least has done all that it can do.

Mr. MANN. Congress has done all that it could do about aviation, even to indulging in flights of oratory on the subject—hot air.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; I think, perhaps, that has been overdone.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I think that all of the members of the committee can understand very readily that the use of the aeroplane by the Navy Department is, after all, only an adaptation for marine purposes of the aircraft that we have been developing on all lines in the United States and elsewhere. It is not a thing that pertains exclusively to the Navy. It is not a thing that pertains primarily to the Navy. It does not require for its development a large separate appropriation. We know, as everyone does, that the larger use of the aeroplane will be made by the Army. We know, as everyone does, that another department of the Government—the Post Office Department—is also developing the aeroplane. In my judgment, at this time, $25,000,000 would be enough for all of these departments in the development of aeroplanes and in the building of them, when we take into consideration those that we already have on hand and the present state of the art, and also take into consideration the large demand that will be made for private uses and purposes of the aeroplane. It occurs to me, and I think it will to the country, that to give now this large lump-sum appropriation, amounting to $25,000,000, to the Navy Department would be ridiculous. It would be considered a reckless expenditure of money. We have the statement by the chairman of the committee that there is no showing of necessity; that there is no itemization of amounts that will indicate where this money is to be expended. It is a temptation to needless expenditure to put this vast sum of money into the hands of the Secretary of the Navy. No man on the floor of this House could justify himself before his constituents or the country in such lavish expenditure of money.

We have always held in the House to the belief that lump-sum appropriations ought not to be made whenever they can be avoided. In this case I venture to say there is no excuse for this appropriation in a lump-sum appropriation. The Secretary of the Navy ought to have told the committee and the country how the $25,000,000 was to be expended—how much for this, how much for that, how much for every item—so that we could determine primarily and the country ultimately whether or not it was extravagant in any particular. The time has come when Congress must revert again to that salutary rule that demands statements from these various departments with regard to the expenditures of the country. Now, when we are burdened by the greatest debt we have ever attempted to carry, and when the war is over, when we ought to get back, as has been suggested here, as rapidly as possible to bedrock, let us do it by demanding of every expenditure that is asked for by any department of the Government that they shall explain particularly item by item what they want the money for.

I shall support gladly, and I believe every member of the committee ought to support gladly, the reduction of this amount to $15,000,000. I certainly hope the amendment will be adopted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question? Did the Chair understand the gentleman from Tennessee to offer a substitute?

Mr. PADGETT. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 15, insert: "And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the construction of a factory for the manufacture of aeroplanes."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

State marine schools: To reimburse the State of New York, $25,000, the State of Massachusetts, $25,000, and the State of Washington, $25,000, for expenses incurred in the maintenance and support of marine schools in those States in accordance with section 2 of the act entitled "An act for the establishment of marine schools, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1911; in all, $75,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to proceed to discuss the preceding paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that he may proceed to discuss the preceding paragraph. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the committee accepted, I think without a dissenting vote, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York cutting the provision for experimental work in development of aviation for naval purposes from $25,000,000 to $15,000,000, a direct saving to the Government and the people of the United States, who have to pay the taxes and buy the loans, of $10,000,000. In this connection I desire to call attention to the fact that for four or five days recently we discussed the river and harbor bill, to which great objection was made, and that bill was made up of a variety of items—400, 500, or 600, every appropriation specified. A contest on the floor over some of the appropriations involving as much as the monumental sum of $1,000 for the improvement of a stream took up much of our valuable time. Gentlemen tore themselves into shreds opposing suggestions that we should appropriate $5,000 for the dredging of a certain stream that might encourage the commerce of the country even in a small degree. That appropriation bill, so much opposed that the newspapers of the country actually referred to it, carried only $26,000,000; and yet there was scarcely a State in the Union—there was certainly no coast line—that was not directly interested in that bill and the specific items which it carried. Subsequently we had before us the Agricultural appropriation bill, a bill in which every farmer of the country is interested, a bill that carried paragraphs relating to the production and distribution of our food supply, a bill that interested every producer and every consumer in the land. That bill carried, if I recollect aright, about $31,000,000.

These two bills, I say, were contested upon this floor, in one instance the contest raging for nearly four days. The vast interests involved were pointed out in the bills. We knew where the money was going; we knew how it was to be expended; we knew it could be checked up, and it was checked up; yet here to-day, in a few minutes, without any discussion, apparently, with the newspapers taking no notice, in a paragraph of a few lines, it is proposed to sweep into the power of a single bureau the right to expend $25,000,000, an amount equivalent to nearly all we appropriated in the river and harbor bill, almost as much as we appropriated in the Agricultural bill, in which the entire country is interested. I think it is a duty to point out the ease with which a great department of the Government, under stress of war necessity, may work into an appropriation bill and work over the Congress a tremendous appropriation to be expended at the will of a bureau when specified legitimate expenditures are so difficult to obtain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it is important to call attention to this strange condition that prevails in a legislative body in connection with aviation, not by way of reflection upon the Navy Department, which has not been criticized, so far as I have observed, for its conduct of aviation up to date, but because of the unusual proceeding in the War Department, which resulted in the exoneration of one Col. Deeds, who had been placed in charge of a part of the expenditure of $640,000,000 for aviation for war purposes, after he had been brought to the bar by a former justice of the Supreme Court of the United States appointed by the President to investigate, and who was supported in his findings by the Attorney General. I do not hesitate to say that in the case of Col. Deeds and the expenditure of that $640,000,000, for which, according to the Senate report, we did not secure a single combat plane in France, the results were not such as to inspire congressional confidence in lump-sum appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, what I shall say is applicable to a clause of the bill which comes later; but it seems proper it should have some consideration in advance, so that the defect in the bill which I shall point out may be remedied. I am very much dissatisfied with the fact that this bill provides no means whereby the enlisted men of the Navy can get relief—whereby men who are in the Navy and, now that the war is over, have business elsewhere can get out.

A great many of these boys volunteered and went into the Navy because they did not want to be conscripted. That was their business; they should not be discriminated against because of that fact. They see that their brothers who were conscripted into the Army are being discharged by wholesale, whereas they themselves are being retained for service. And this bill gives them no relief whatever. There is no provision in it that will hasten discharges of these enlisted men, and there is no way by which they can get out after the bill is passed any more than they can get out now.

It is true that the bill reduces the enlisted personnel for the next fiscal year to 180,000, or something about like that, but it does not provide that the boys who enlisted for the war and who expected to be discharged upon the termination of the war shall be discharged. They may be retained in service at the will of the Secretary of the Navy, and may be kept as a part of the 180,000 enlisted personnel that is to be retained.

Mr. VENABLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. For a question.

Mr. VENABLE. The bill does carry a provision that those who enlisted for four years, between certain dates, shall be discharged.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The bill carries this provision:

Any enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who, since April 7, 1917, and before November 11, 1918, enlisted for the period of four years may, upon his application, made to the Secretary of the Navy on or before July 1, 1919, be held and construed to have enlisted for the duration of the war and granted an honorable discharge.

In other words, the men who enlisted after war was declared are put upon a plane of equality, if this bill is passed, with those who were permitted to enlist for the "duration of the war" only. But what I am complaining of is that all of these men, no matter of what enlistment, may be held until after peace is formally declared and the end of the war proclaimed by the President, which may be 6 or 12 months hence. All the boys who are now in the Navy, and who are marking time in an overmanned fleet, doing absolutely nothing, can be kept there until a certain period, as provided by law, after the President has proclaimed the end of the war.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman permit me for a moment?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Certainly.

Mr. PADGETT. I put in the RECORD last night, just as they were adjourning, a letter which I received yesterday from Admiral Blue, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, setting out at length what was being done and what the directions were, and you will find it on pages 2785 and 2786 of the RECORD of Wednesday. He says:

The department has up to date directed the release of 40 per cent of the reserves, 40 per cent of the men who enlisted for the war only, and 20 per cent of the regular four-year men who enlisted since the beginning of the war.

And then he says further:

In addition to this orders have gone out during the last few days to release all the Naval Reserve men and men enlisted for the war only who are now undergoing training at the training stations and at trade schools, if they so request.

We have also ordered the release of 20,000 men of the Naval Reserve and men enlisted for the war who are performing shore duties at the various naval districts.

He goes on to say that he really does not know how he is going to maintain sufficient to operate the ships and bring the ships home. And only this morning Capt. Taussig told me that if that provision which has just been read, and which is in the bill, goes into effect, he does not know how the Navy is going to operate ships in order to bring the boys home.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to the letter. Of course, we have all had occasion to take this matter up with the Navy Department from day to day. I have the occasion about fifty times a day, when boys who are my constituents write to me asking me to do something for them. Of course, I do not always actually take the matter up with the department, for things are so run that a mere Member of Congress can do little except go through the motion. But the department usually gives me a polite reply, affording practically the same information the gentleman from Tennessee has given. We have ordered substantially 40 per cent out of the Navy, but what about the other 60 per cent?

Mr. PADGETT. We can not turn everybody out. And he says here:

In case of there being more applicants than can be released under the authorized percentages, those to be released will be decided by lot.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. If that is the rule, it is a very recent one. My information is—and the gentleman speaks as though there was some doubt about those who want to get out not exceeding 40 per cent—that a month ago 70 per cent of the Navy had applied for discharges. I have no doubt that 90 per cent have applied up to this time.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman permit? Do you think we ought to discharge every man that asks to be discharged from the Navy and leave the Navy impotent and wrecked? What would we do with our ships? How would we bring the boys back? We are operating troopships for the Army, and every day we see in the papers where they are bringing back thousands of men. It is going to continue for months in order to get back the 2,000,000 men over there. Shall we discharge every man in the Navy and tie the ships up, with nobody to take care of them?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is not the only alternative presented.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, it is. We are taking in about 1,600 a week of new recruits, but they have to be sent to naval training stations and trained three or four months before they can be put on the ships.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman leads me quite a distance from what I wanted to say, but I am going back to it just as if he had not done so.

Eighty or ninety per cent have applied for release. All of these men enlisted "for the duration of the war." The war is over. They are entitled to get home. Now, the thing to do is to go out and get some new men into the Navy if these men who are there do not want to stay in it. The gentleman assumes that they have discharged 40 per cent. I tell him that 40 per cent have not been discharged. I do not know the exact figure, but I will guarantee there have not been over 25 to 30 per cent discharged.

There will be no robbing of the Navy of such of its efficiency as is required for these times—the war is over—merely because 50 per cent of the men are discharged. We had over 500,000 men in the Navy when the armistice was signed. Fifty per cent of them would be only 250,000. The gentleman must not go astray on the thought that our Navy is charged with bringing back our soldiers from France. They have nothing to do with our transport system. That belongs to the Army.

Mr. PADGETT. I would like to say to the gentleman, on the contrary——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, I beg the gentleman not to interrupt the train of my thought. The Navy is not charged with the duty of bringing our soldiers back from France. It is true that some of our battleships are being used, as I am informed, against the advice of the higher naval officers, in bringing back some troops from France. But such troops are comparatively few in number and these ships are doing little good at that use.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The discharge of 60 per cent of the Navy will not in any wise handicap the bringing of our soldiers back from France. The truth of the matter is that the Navy Department does not want to let these enlisted men of the Navy go. The Navy Department wants to keep them there. There are a thousand reasons why they should be let go and very few, if any, good reasons why they should be retained in the service. The best reason for the discharge of these men is that they enlisted with the understanding that they should go home about their business when the war was over. Now we are holding them on a legal technicality, on the ground that peace has not been formally proclaimed. Well, our Navy was overmanned when the war was on. It is still overmanned. There is no good reason whatever for keeping in active commission a great many of the vessels. We turned back to their private owners something like a thousand vessels when the war closed. I submit, gentlemen, that we could easily dispense with all of the enlisted men of the Navy down to the minimum that the gentleman has put in this bill—that is to say, 180,000—less than 200,000—and let these boys go home and no harm would be done to the Navy and the transporting home of our soldiers from France not be delayed to any substantial extent.

We ought to hurry up and make a more diligent effort to recruit the Navy. Millions of men are being turned out of the Army looking for jobs and there is an oversupply of labor the country over, and the duty is on the Navy Department to get new men and put them into the Navy in place of those boys who have got something to do at home.

It is nearly impossible to get discharges, according to the reports, and the reports that come to me are unanimous. It is almost impossible to get the boys out on account of the whims of their officers. Under the rules of the department those who apply for discharges are divided into three classes: First, those who have dependents; they are given the preference. The next class is those who have urgent business reasons for desiring their discharge; they are given the second preference. The third class is those who want to finish their education; and they also are given a preference. What about the fellow who wants to be out simply because he wants to be out? Why should he not be given some consideration? He has the same right to be discharged as anybody else, and he should not be forced to depend on the arbitrary discretion of the Secretary of the Navy or the whim of some little officer somewhere who fears that he will reduce his own importance by reducing the number of men under his command.

There are men in every port, in every station, in every office, who could well be spared, men who are practically doing nothing. They are sitting there, simply warming their chairs. I do not know why they are kept there. The men themselves say they do not know. There are men in the Naval Officers' Reserve who want to get out, and they do not know why they are held. I was told by an assistant paymaster of the Navy a few days ago, who had been trying for 60 days to get out so that he might go back to his family and his business, that when his relief finally came he told him that there were 60 boys at the same station he had come from, all graduates of the paymasters' school, who had been there for a month or more and had not done a stroke of work, and most of them were pleading for discharges.

I say that the good faith of this great Nation is pledged to let every man out of the Army and the Navy as quick as it is reasonably safe to do so. I say that the man who enlisted for the duration of the war ought to be discharged. We ought not to have accepted these men for the duration of the war unless we meant to let them go when the war was over. But we accepted them. They have the moral right to be allowed to get out.

Thousands of mothers and fathers throughout the country are urging their Representatives in Congress to help them in getting their sons out of the Navy. They have to go through an intricate formula, and supplement it with technical affidavits, and then the application may be put in a pigeonhole for months, and finally some little officer says, "Your reasons are not sufficiently stated, and we can not let you go."

That is what the boys are up against in this country. Something ought to be done. We ought to have some relief from it. Something should be done by this committee. Some provision to that end should be put into this bill by amendment or otherwise. Something should be done to keep the faith of this Nation with those who enlisted to fight the battles of the country on land and sea. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I suppose I, in common with everybody else, would like to see the boys get out as soon as possible, both in the Army and in the Navy. If we should give preference to anybody, it would be the boys who are now in France.

I wanted to ask a question. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] stated that the boys who enlisted in the Navy during the war are not to a very considerable extent being used in the transport service for the purpose of bringing the soldiers back home. I wish just to preface my remarks by saying that I think the boys ought to be kept in the Navy if it is necessary, and as long as it is necessary during the duration of the war, to get the boys back from France, and I would like the gentleman from Tennessee to give me that information.

Mr. PADGETT. It is not only necessary, but the Navy is operating the troop transports of the Army, manning them by officers and enlisted men, and operating them; and only within the last few weeks they have been notified to be prepared to officer and man between 20 and 30, as I remember—more than 20—ships recently taken over under the distribution from the Germans, to be used to bring the troops back, and they are so using thousands and thousands of men.

Only this morning I was talking with Capt. Taussig, who is in charge of the enlisted personnel in the Navy, who said they were releasing them as fast as they could, but that they were confronted with the condition that if so many got out as it appeared were going to be authorized to go out by the legislation in this bill, they would be in a situation where they would not be able to operate the ships to bring the boys back from France.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Would the result then be that the soldiers who are now in France would be required to stay there longer?

Mr. PADGETT. Either to stay there longer or the Government would have to provide other ships from other countries and bring them back in ships from other countries.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Can the Government do that last thing?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know of any way to do it except to hire ships, and whether they can get them or not I do not know. I do not think it is a practical thing, I do not think it is an advisable thing, and the country ought not to be put in the condition where it would be confronted with that situation. The letter that I put in last night, of which I read a portion awhile ago, shows that the Navy is liberally discharging these men.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I suppose I have on an average as many applications for discharges from the Army and the Navy as any man in the House, and I suppose that I have gone to as much personal trouble in looking after those applications as possibly any other man, with few exceptions, and I have had some cases that I thought myself, looking at them solely and alone from the side of the soldier or the sailor, were deserving of prompt action on the part of the department, resulting in the discharge of the men.

But I have always tried to bear in mind the fact that it was practically a physical impossibility for the department here in Washington to adjudicate and decide each individual case as it arose, that necessarily from the very nature of the problem they had to deal with these men more or less en masse. I realize, furthermore, that the problem of demobilization in the Navy is a totally different one from that in the Army. We speak of men in the Navy as being sailors. As a matter of fact they are not sailors at all. They are skilled gunners, skilled machinists, skilled engineers, skilled mechanics of all kinds, and whenever you discharge an undue proportion of men in any of the classifications of the service, you put the battleship out of commission just as effectually as if you had discharged the whole crew. If you discharge all of your gunners aboard ship, for all practical purposes it ceases to be a battleship. If you discharge all your firemen, the ship can not sail. If you discharge all of your electricians, very soon your turrets and your gunnery machinery and your lighting plant are out of commission.

Mr. PADGETT. And if you discharge enough to make any department inefficient, the same thing is true.

Mr. VENABLE. If you discharge them to the extent where you only partially disable the ship, the ship for all practical purposes is out of commission. So when applications come in for the discharge of an undue proportion of men in any line of naval activity aboard a vessel, there is not only to be taken into consideration the merits of the individual case, but also the interest of the country generally. And surely no one would urge that we should pursue a policy which would practically dismantle your whole fleet. Until hearing from my friend from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] I would not have thought that it would be argued as earnestly and sincerely and with as much seriousness as he has doubtless argued it that because there has been an actual cessation of hostilities, for that reason there is a moral obligation upon the Government to discharge these men irrespective of whether their services are imperatively needed by the Government or not. Of course when the war ends, if it is according to the terms of their enlistment that they shall be discharged when peace is declared, the Government must discharge them, because that is its contract; but I deny that there is any moral obligation upon the Government to discharge a man when it needs him and his retention is according to the terms of his enlistment. If a moral obligation arises, it arises from the existence of an agreement or a contract.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will my friend yield?

Mr. VENABLE. With pleasure.

Mr. McKEOWN. Are there not many men in the service of the Navy who are not aboard ship, and who are not being used to transport soldiers from abroad, who could be discharged, and ought not such men who have dependents to be discharged?

Mr. PADGETT. That has been ordered, exactly, in gross.

Mr. McKEOWN. But is it not true that the orders emanating from Washington are not having much effect with the commanding officers?

Mr. VENABLE. If my friend will allow me to reply to him, I think that there are many men in the service, possibly, who, on the merits of their individual cases, might be discharged, and I want to say that I believe as soon as the department can work out its plans for the discharge of those men and for the determination of the merits of those cases they will be discharged.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VENABLE. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENABLE. Now, we go down to the departments here in Washington and we present the facts of a particular case. The department here can not, to save its life, know whether the discharge of a particular man will cripple the efficiency of a ship or not. Prompted by that reason and others of a subsidiary character, it was decided to leave the determination of these questions to the commanders of the fleet; because not only must the merits of the case be taken into consideration, but also the needs of the Government. And permit me to say right here, almost anybody can get up in the Congress and express a sense of pain. Almost anybody can get up in the Congress and criticize. Almost anybody can get up in the Congress and denounce a certain course of conduct. But, permit me to say, I do not believe that should ever be done except where the Member has the facts; and then it ought not to be done by denunciation of the entire department and system, bringing condemnation upon innocent and efficient men, but by the fixing of responsibility upon the man who is at fault; because indiscriminate criticism, the charge that certain things are being done, without proof of the facts, goes forth from this body to the country as though it was sustained, although it may not be sustained by the facts. Because a Member of Congress has said so, they therefore take it as true, and you create all over the country a wave of discontent that excites prejudice against the service. The naval service of the United States is neither Democratic nor Republican; it is American. It results in harm to the service and serious embarrassment to the chief of the departments here.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VENABLE. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman think the particular thing calculated to excite prejudice against the Navy now is holding the men who enlisted during the war to perform services which have no relation to war, but are mere matters of convenience to the Government, for the purpose of keeping ships in command, not to bring troops home from France, but simply to keep them in command?

Mr. VENABLE. I have never received any proof that officials of the Navy were arbitrarily holding anybody. There may be individual cases, which I think will be taken care of as soon as they are worked out by the department.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to give the House another portion of a letter. I called up Admiral Blue and asked him to give me an official statement, which he did, and I put it in the RECORD yesterday:

> The department has up to date directed the release of 40 per cent of the reserves, 40 per cent of the men who enlisted for the war only, and 20 per cent of the regular four-year men who enlisted since the beginning of the war.
>
> In making these releases, commanding officers of ships and stations were directed to give preference, first, to men who have families dependent upon them, and, second, to young men desiring to complete their education. In case of there being more applicants than can be released under the authorized percentages, those to be released will be decided by lot. Naturally the demobilization must be handled by the commanding officers on general orders from the bureau, as it would be impossible for the bureau to handle the individual cases.
> In addition to this, orders have gone out during the last few days to release all the Naval Reserve men and men enlisted for the war only who are now undergoing training at the training stations and at trade schools, if they so request.
> We have also ordered the release of 20,000 men of the Naval Reserve and men enlisted for the war who are performing shore duties at the various naval districts.
>
> The bureau is very desirous of completing the demobilization as soon as possible, but it is confronted with the proposition of placing in commission some 38 to 40 large vessels to be used as tranports in bringing home troops from France. A number of cargo ships belonging to the Shipping Board are also being manned. As you can readily understand, the present activities of the Navy, as well as those in prospect, have to be carefully provided for, otherwise they would have to cease.
> It is hoped that by the 20th of February we will have demobilized at least half of the remaining personnel on shore after the releases above described have taken place. From February 20 to March 1 we will obtain detailed statements from all stations in regard to the number of men remaining available. This we shall have to do in order to ascertain where we stand in regard to personnel.

In the meantime we are recruiting men as fast as our facilities will permit. They seem to be coming in now at the rate of about 1,600 a week. This will of course help us out in the matter of demobilization, but naturally we will not really feel the effect of this for several months, for the reason that the new men coming in are recruits and must be trained before being sent to the ships.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. All these men spoken of there, the 40 per cent, and then those in addition may obviously be discharged with entire consistency, but what I want to know is if it can be done within 30 days why should it not have been done 60 days ago? There has not been a change of a hair in the circumstances.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes; there has; we had something like 2,000 ships in the Navy when the armistice was signed, and many of those are being turned back and gotten rid of. It could not be done in a jiffy. To carry out the proposal of the gentleman from Alabama would wreck the Navy and bring riot in this country, because we would not have men to bring back the troops from France.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired and all time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Care of lepers, etc., island of Guam: Naval station, island of Guam: Maintenance and care of lepers, special patients, and for other purposes, including cost of transfer of lepers from Guam to the island of Cullon, in the Philippines, and their maintenance, $20,000.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this: I do not care what the legal phase is, this war is over; the war between the United States of America and Germany has ceased. That Empire has made an unconditional surrender. It has yielded up all of the essential instruments of war, and that war is as much over as the war between the States is over. Now, that is the fact about it. Unless you are going to have compulsory military service without an act of Congress in time of peace you ought to turn these soldiers and sailors who enlisted for the period of the war loose. If you do not do it you hold them upon a bare technicality, because the war is over; the German flag has been lowered, its armies have capitulated with an unconditional surrender.

Congress ought to have the nerve and honesty, if it believes in compulsory military and naval service, to put it to a vote, but this thing of holding men in the Army and the Navy after the war is over, after the enemy's flag is hauled down, after the enemy's power has been exhausted, is a cheat upon the selective-draft act passed by this Congress.

Now, that is the fact about it. You have no more legislative right, nor moral right, to hold these fellows in the Army and the Navy, who were conscripted for the war, than you have a right to hold a man in prison after the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus. If you want them against their will to serve in a time of peace, pass a law for compulsory military and naval service, because every man, woman, and child in the world knows that the war between our country and Germany is a thing of the past, a thing that has passed into history. It does not exist to-day because of the unconditional surrender of the German forces and the taking away of every power to make war.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The war is not entirely over so far as the soldiers who did the fighting and won the victory are concerned, and who are now at the front. It will not be over for them until they get back home. The gentleman does not believe that the men ought to be permitted to get out of the Navy if it is necessary to keep them in the Navy in order to bring these soldiers back to the United States, does he?

Mr. DIES. No; but I will tell my friend what he ought to keep in his mind, and that is the demand of every officer to have somebody to command, the demand of every man with shoulder straps and a star to have some of his boys and my boys that he may command them, and it is the gentleman's duty to see that they are demobilized and brought back to their peaceful pursuits and not kept there in order that they may maintain rank in the Army or the Navy.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I am talking about privates, although I have no prejudice in the world against the men who held commissions. Incidentally, more commissioned men, so far as that is concerned, in proportion to their numbers were killed on the battle field than men who did not have commissions, but that is neither here nor there. Confine it to the private soldier in France to-day, who went over the top, who made the sacrifice, who suffered much more than did the boys in the Navy, although the boys in the Navy were willing to suffer. Would it be fair, would it be proper, to demobilize the Navy to-day if that Navy is necessary to bring back from France the soldiers, the privates, and let the commissioned officers remain there?

Mr. DIES. Just what figure the Navy cuts in bringing back the privates is more than I understand.

Mr. PADGETT. I just called attention to the fact that they have to man 38 or 40 new ships coming in, and they are manning and operating to-day numbers of ships for the Army, bringing back the soldiers, and they are using battleships and cruisers to bring them back.

Mr. DIES. I do not trust the officers to turn the men loose. I trust Congress to do that, to see to it that when the war is over the gallant sons of America shall come back to their homes. The man of power wants more power; the man at the head of a committee wants more appropriations and more dignity. An officer wants more men to command, and I say that these boys who enlisted in the Army and the Navy for the duration of the war ought to be demobilized and allowed to go back home, because the war is over, and every honest man knows that the war with Germany is over.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. And I would call further attention to the fact that the excuse of keeping these boys in the service of the Navy to bring the boys back from France is a mere subterfuge. There is no reason in the world, if they need men to man the Navy, why they can not go into the labor market and hire these men after they are discharged.

Mr. PADGETT. It would take three months——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. You are forcing them to do it now. Give them a chance to act like American citizens.

Mr. DIES. I do not care what you need. In time of peace, under your present system, you are entitled to keep every volunteer enlistment in either the Army or the Navy only so long as the war exists. Every man knows that the war is over and you can not honestly keep them in against their will.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] bases his whole argument, as I understand it, on the proposition that since a large proportion of the men in the Navy enlisted for the period of the war, and since the actual fighting is over, therefore the cessation of actual fighting is tantamount to the end of the war, and hence, the war being over, these men under the terms of their contract are entitled to be released; that holding them further in the service is a violation of their contract and a violation of a moral obligation upon the part of the Government; therefore the question is, Is the cessation of fighting an end of the war? I know these young men enlisted to serve their country in their country's hour of need, and I do not believe that any of them would insist on their discharge if they believed that the country still needed them, and the reason they are asking for a discharge is because they do not believe that the need any longer exists. But the question is, Does the need exist?

The testimony before the committee was that it did. Peace terms have yet to be formulated and submitted to the German Empire. We hardly think that Germany will resist, but no man knows, and a state of war exists until all of the questions in the situation which might give rise to actual hostilities have been settled. It would be a part of folly, in my judgment, because there was actual cessation of fighting to take that as equivalent peace, and to demobilize our armed forces and thus invite a renewal of hostilities by our enemy. If that be true of the Navy it is equally true of the Army. It seems to me ridiculous that this country should at once by act of Congress demobilize every soldier in the National Army in France and Germany and discharge them from any further military discipline or obligation.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VENABLE. Because if the war be over, it is as much over for the soldier as for the sailor. That is the logic of the gentleman's argument. I yield.

Mr. DIES. Does my friend from Mississippi think that the Imperial German Empire or the German Republic, or whatever government they form there, will be weaker or stronger a year or two or three or four from now than it is now?

Mr. VENABLE. I think they are weaker now.

Mr. DIES. If they are weaker now, if you keep an army there now, how much greater army will you keep there one, or two, or three, or four years in the future?

Mr. VENABLE. You will not keep any there, because you will have settled the terms of peace, and as I believe the allies will keep an army there until the terms are put into execution as far as possible.

Mr. DENISON. Suppose it should require a year before we can arrive at a settlement of this so-called league of nations, and suppose our commissioners should say that there shall be no peace until that is settled, does the gentleman think that we are in duty bound to keep these soldiers in the service until the question of the league of nations is settled?

Mr. VENABLE. We are not doing that; we are demobilizing the Army and the Navy as fast as practicable in view of the situation.

But the gentleman can not draw me away from a discussion of what I am trying to develop to a discussion of the league of nations. The argument of the gentleman from Texas was based upon the assumption that the cessation of actual hostilites was tantamount to peace; that under the terms of enlistment these men in the Navy, when peace came, were entitled to their discharge. If that is true, there would hardly be any man either in the Navy or armed force of the United States, according to the logic of his contention, who should not be demobilized at once. When you apply that conclusion to the Army in France, the unsoundness of it, in view of practical events, is immediately manifest. The same thing is true, I believe, under the facts, as regards the naval forces of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the discussion that has been going on here shows conclusively what an awful blunder the President made when he went over to France and left Congress here to flounder around in the mud.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States is now in France, and the ability of Congress to transact the business of this Government without the presidential "big stick" is now on trial. The question that confronts us now is whether Congress is able to pass legislation efficiently, effectively, and as speedily when the President is away as it does when the President is in the country and telling Congress what to do and how to do it.

That question is now squarely up to Congress.

Many Members in the past have complained that the President has dictated to Congress, has bossed Congress, and some have gone as far as to state that the President has usurped the functions of Congress.

If this was improperly done by the President in the past, now is the time to prove that it was wrongfully done, by formulating our own legislative policy.

If Congress can do business as efficiently and as effectively when the President is away as when he is here, I know of no better time to prove it than right now.

Yes; now while he is away let Congress show the country that it has policies, that it does not have to be bossed or led or driven or coerced.

If we do not pass the appropriation bills and necessary legislation before the 4th day of March, 1919, it will conclusively prove that all the criticisms that have been hurled against Congress in the past by the press of the country, by public speakers, and by the public in general is true.

It will at least show that Congress needs some leadership.

If we are to have leadership, that leadership should emanate in Congress, not outside of Congress.

If there is to be an extra session, place the responsibility for calling it upon the President.

It is our duty, our plain and imperative duty, with the constitutional notice that our lives as Members of the Sixty-fifth Congress die on March 4 at noon, to clear the legislative decks of such important matters that are expected of us by the people.

Procrastination should be sidetracked and real earnest work given to important measures that they may be disposed of before the expiration of this Congress, and the people of this country relieved of the expensive burden of an extraordinary session.

It is the duty of Congress to see to it that all legislation necessary to keep the wheels of government going is enacted by March 4, 1919.

We can not assume that the President will call an extra session.

We should not force him to call an extra session.

We should not confess our weakness by failing to enact at this session of Congress the legislation usually enacted, and legislation that necessarily must be enacted.

The people of this country will not take kindly to any conduct on the part of Congress that tends to force an extra session and keep the country in that state of unrest that usually attends a long session of Congress.

What the people of this country want is a rest from congressional activities.

It seems to me that it would be much better for the business of the country and for the labor of the country if we legislated less.

The President by virtue of his veto power is coordinate with the legislative branch, but the writers of the Constitution intended to place the responsibility of legislation upon Congress, which is the direct representative of the people.

The country wants Congress to enact necessary legislation and adjourn.

If we do not do this the people of this country will hold us responsible. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

Transportation and recruiting: For travel allowance of enlisted men discharged on account of expiration of enlistment; transportation of enlisted men and apprentice seamen and applicants for enlistment at home and abroad, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation to their homes, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentice seamen discharged on medical survey, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of sick or insane enlisted men and apprentice seamen to hospitals, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of enlisted men of the Naval Reserve Force to and from duty, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of civilian officers and crews of naval auxiliaries; apprehension and delivery of deserters and stragglers and for railway guides and other expenses incident to transportation; expenses of recruiting for the naval service; rent of rendezvous and expenses of maintaining the same; rental, maintenance, operation, exchange, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use; advertising for and obtaining men and apprentice seamen; actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage to officers on duty with traveling recruiting parties, $9,000,000.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in this discussion in regard to the discharge of men from the Army and Navy. The people at home do not realize that the question of recruiting and discharging men from the Army and Navy is an executive function. As long as peace is not actually signed there is nobody except the Commander in Chief, and under him the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, who can do anything about this matter. All that we Members of Congress can do is to make suggestions and protests.

Immediately after the signing of the armistice I sent a telegram to both the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy asking if the men who had dependent families and positions waiting for them at home might not be given a preference in the granting of discharges. Other Members of this House made the same suggestion and request. As a result the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy formulated sets of rules by which men could get their discharges. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] has referred to these regulations. We were all sent copies of them and were told to tell the boys that they must file with their commanding officers applications supported by sworn affidavits, and that then these applications would be considered on their merits in accordance with the policy laid down in the regulations. The trouble has been that the subordinate officers of the Army and Navy have not in many cases obeyed the regulations that were given them.

In this connection I desire to give the House two instances which have come to my attention here in Washington within the last few days. The other morning on my way to the Capitol a nice-looking sailor boy stopped me on Pennsylvania Avenue and asked me if I could tell him how he could get in touch with his Congressman. It was a pleasure to take him with me to the House Office Building and introduce him to his Member of Congress. On the way up he told me the circumstances of his case.

His home was in one of the far Western States. He is now stationed at one of the shore naval stations—I think at Chatham, Mass. In other words, he is not one of the men engaged in bringing soldiers home from France whom some of my colleagues have been talking about. He told me that he had a wife and three little children at home whom he had not seen for more than a year, that he had a nice position waiting for him at home, and that he had filed his application with the necessary affidavits with his commanding officer right after the signing of the armistice, but could get no satisfaction at all. He also told me that at that station 82 per cent of the discharges had been discharges of unmarried men. He also stated to me that he knew of several cases where boys asked they be not discharged because they had no home to go to and no position to return to, but that they were discharged in spite of their request, and yet at the same time men who had families and positions waiting for them at home and who had made great sacrifices by giving up positions which paid them $100 or $150 a month for the sake of serving their country at a salary of only $30 or $40 a month were utterly unable to obtain their discharges.

The other instance which I have in mind is the case of two boys with whom I happened to get acquainted recently who came from the Pacific coast. They enlisted in the marines at the beginning of the war. They went over to France, where they took part in the severe fighting on the western front. They were wounded, and returned to this country. After they were discharged from the hospital they were sent down to Quantico, and have been there for months, with positions waiting for them at home, but utterly unable to get their discharges.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to utter my most emphatic protest against this outrageous treatment of our boys in defiance of the advertised policy of the War and Navy Departments. I believe—and I know that in expressing this opinion I voice the overwhelming sentiment of the people of this country—that those men who have got dependent families and who have positions waiting for them at home, and particularly those who have actually fought and been wounded in their country's service, should be discharged immediately from the military and naval service, and there is no excuse whatever for not discharging them. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Concerning this item of $9,000,000, Bureau of Navigation, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he has any detailed information about how this money is to be expended?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; a great deal of it. It is not only for the purpose of getting new men in—and you see this afternoon what that means—but it is also to pay transportation of men discharged back to their homes to the place of enlistment. Capt. Lanning was before the committee, and he said that he did not think that even $12,000,000 would be sufficient to carry on the work——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The department asked for $12,000,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the committee cut it to $9,000,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. The Secretary, I believe, reduced it to $10,000,000 and the committee reduced it to $9,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I direct the gentleman's attention to that part of the item which provides for rental, maintenance, operation, exchange, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use.

Mr. PADGETT. That is their operation, upkeep, and maintenance.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the point; rental, maintenance, operation, exchange, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know or do the hearings disclose how much of this $9,000,000 would be expended for that purpose?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. I can not tell you. But there is a provision in the bill that prohibits the use of any part for the purchase of additional machines. And there are motor cars for official use in the different bureaus. We went into that very fully in the session last spring, and my recollection is that we had something like 450 or 475.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the city of Washington?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no; in the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have no desire to criticize the Navy Department. I am very fond of it. But this item of maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use has come to be the subject of criticism in regard to certain departments, though not necessarily the Navy Department.

Mr. PADGETT. I rather think not of the Navy Department, because I never heard any criticism of that kind.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I hope not. For that reason I was asking how much would be expended for this purpose by the Bureau of Navigation. I want to say to the gentleman frankly, and I think the committee is entitled to know, that Members of Congress themselves observe that many of these passenger-carrying vehicles "for official use" are not being used exclusively in office hours, and some of them are being used for what appears to be unofficial purposes. That is to say, my attention has been called to the fact that some of these machines, and they are very handsomely finished, they are high-priced machines, are being used by the wives and relatives of the officers of the Government, not necessarily naval officers, and that they are being used for social purposes, for which, of course, this appropriation is not intended.

I have myself observed some of these official motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles—very expensive ones, limousines, with the Government coat of arms upon them and very small letters to indicate that they were for Government use—drive up to department stores and unburden themselves of some ladies who seem to be out shopping. I understand that it is possible to find machines labeled "for Government use" drawing up to some of the places of entertainment in the city of Washington, some of them to points at which dinners are given and balls are held, regardless of the fact that they are Government machines.

Mr. PADGETT. I have not heard any criticism of that kind in connection with the Navy.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I say that I have not heard it applied especially to the Navy, but there are Members of Congress who have called attention to the fact that they have seen what I myself have seen. I saw one draw up the other morning before one of the large jewelry establishments on one of the main thoroughfares leading to the Capitol, and I saw ladies leave the limousine and go into the store, and yet I noticed that the coat of arms indicated that the limousine belonged to the Government. I do not think the committee would sanction that.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think the criticism would lie against the Navy.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Nine million dollars is a large sum of money, although not all of it is to be used for maintaining motor-propelled machines; but some of it is.

Mr. PADGETT. In the last bill last spring there was a provision limiting the number of machines to be purchased for the United States for the Navy to 115, of which not exceeding 15 could exceed $500, and were limited, I think, to $1,800, or, maybe, $2,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know the gentleman from Tennessee well enough to know that he would give me a frank answer to this question if he knew any of this $9,000,000 was being used by officers of the Government for the purpose of having the members of the family pay social calls or attend dances, or for the purposes of making purchases at department stores, and would disapprove of that practice.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, indeed; I would. I have inquired about it and am informed it has not been done in the Navy.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not being done in the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Of course it is inevitable that finally, when we enter upon this militaristic career on which we have embarked, that all these things the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] talks about will happen. Of course you can not build up a military caste in the country without having all these automobiles flying about that Members of Congress see every day. You would naturally have that. Let gentlemen console themselves. These things are crude and ordinary to start with, but finally we will polish it down to the old militaristic system that the world has become acquainted with in other days.

You take a country gentleman who has grown rich either in oil or in pork, and he moves to town; of course, he is not familiar with the customs of society, and he gets about clumsily. He gets his vestments on unhandily, and his whole movements smack of the rustican. You take a great Republic like the United States and embark it suddenly upon a militaristic career, and naturally you would expect incongruity, just as you would expect incongruity from a man who had discovered oil, you know, and had come to be a millionaire. Diamonds upon the hands of women who formerly washed clothes and automobiles for those who had formerly driven in horse carts. And, of course, you take a great Republic, like it was under Lincoln and Jackson and Cleveland, and turn it loose upon a militaristic career, and you must expect incongruous things and ridiculous things, almost. You expect men to run about in automobiles who never owned one.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is interested in the discharge of soldiers. I forgot to say, in connection with the use of automobiles for social purposes, that I have also been informed that some of these young soldiers who are competent chauffeurs are held in the service to drive these automobiles.

Mr. DIES. Oh, to be sure. That is a part of the atmosphere of the military caste. I see them down at the humble hotel where I stop. The boy probably, the son of a man in Illinois who defended the Union, or the son of a man in Mississippi who gave his life for the Confederacy, drives some little satrap up to the hotel, and he stands there with his hands behind him while his master pays his respects to some maiden or dances with some dilettante in the hall. We should expect that in militarism.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We might hasten the demobilization if we discharged some of the chauffeurs and let them go home.

Mr. DIES. Oh, no. The truth and fact for the American Congressman to know is that we ought to turn these boys loose, and if we want to have a different system let us write it on the statute books of America. This is a system of compulsion in war. Every man who believes in it ought to vote for military service in time of peace. Every man who believes in it ought to vote for it, or else he ought to say to these military satraps, "Turn our boys loose and let them go home." [Applause.]

You have got a right during war to requisition the services of the youth of this country. I voted for that. But when a war is over and you lay it down to the American youth, you have no right to keep them in the Army after the peril is passed. You may camouflage it, you may dodge behind a technicality, if you wish; but the fact remains that you are inaugurating a compulsory military and naval system in this country without the courage to put your vote down "aye" on the records of the Congress.

Now, if you believe that any man in this country ought to be compelled by law to serve in the Army or Navy without his consent in time of peace, vote for it. That is all right. That is the system that we are headed for. That is the system that Germany had. That is the system that France had. That is the system that Russia had, and that is the system that every Government on this earth ever had that ever raised an army in time of peace, and you have got to come to it, and you ought to come to it honestly and fairly. You ought not to hold a young fellow in here in durance vile by subterfuge. You ought not to impress a young man into the Army and Navy by saying, "You are held here against a menace," when you know there is no menace.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. Do you think we ought to put a provision in here that would prevent the Navy from bringing the boys back?

Mr. DIES. I take it that the Navy is not bringing so many of them back.

Mr. PADGETT. They are operating multitudes of ships, bringing the boys back and taking supplies over and demobilizing the Army.

Mr. DIES. In good truth, three months have passed, and less than 150,000 have been brought back from France.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, more than a million have been brought back.

Mr. DIES. Oh, no. I read the Official Bulletin, and only a week ago they said that 100,000 had been brought back from France. They demobilized a little over a million in the United States and Europe.

Mr. GARNER. To demobilize and to bring them home from France are different things.

Mr. PADGETT. I said "demobilized and brought back from France."

Mr. DIES. In fact you either need them to fight the Imperial German Empire or you should turn them loose, because you conscripted them for that purpose. What is the fact? The German Imperial Empire is weaker to-day than it will be next week or next month or next year, and if you can keep, under an international agreement, 400,000 boys against their consent on that western front now, when Germany is as weak as it is, you can keep 800,000 or a million there next year. This is a serious question, because the boys are entitled to come home. Those men are entitled to come home. Many of them are married men, and they are entitled to come back to the United States.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. I am planning for enough men to operate as many ships as possible to bring the Army back from France as soon as possible.

Mr. DIES. With all due respect for the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, my experience is that that committee, not under the influence but under the obsession of the people who wear the stars and garters and the epaulettes of military power—and my reading of history, from the dawn of civilization down, has convinced me that they want men to command and power, and more power—and I beg leave to differ from this committee. This Congress should say to the boys who have enlisted and who have been compelled to go into the service, "Now that the war is over and Germany is quite crushed, you are entitled to come home." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes; if my time is extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARLAND. The gentleman stated that a certain number had come back. Three hundred thousand per month were sent over during the war, and as much in tonnage of supplies. How many did the gentleman say came back?

Mr. DIES. About two weeks ago I read that we had brought 100,000 of them back.

Mr. GARLAND. After three months' time. Does the gentleman know whether they were from line troops, or Red Cross young men, or Young Men's Christian Association, or Knights of Columbus? All of them were figured in the number that came back. I make the assertion, knowing what I am talking about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the last word; and apropos of what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has been discussing so eloquently—he is always interesting when he takes the floor—I desire to read from a newspaper published in my city which has close foreign connections and which probably is as well posted on what is going on on the other side as any other paper in the United States—the Philadelphia Public Ledger. An editorial that appeared this morning is headed:

"Chumps" or crusaders—which will we be?—If we take a league-of-nations mandate over an unprofitable province overseas.

I want my friend to listen to this, which comes from what I regard as the official organ in the United States of things done on the other side:

Lloyd George is said to have shot into the ear of President Wilson one peaceful day as they sat peacefully together making peace in the peace conference:

"You're very generous prescribing medicine for the rest of us; take some yourself and see how you like it!"

That is the opening of this semiofficial statement that our President, sitting at the peace table over on the other side, instead of being here on this side, where we would value his services, is listening to Lloyd George, who says—

"You're very generous prescribing medicine for the rest of us; take some yourself and see how you like it."

What does it mean? What is Mr. Lloyd George telling our President over there? The article continues—

Of course, being a statesman—

This refers to Lloyd George—and a diplomat—

And this also refers very pertinently to Mr. George, for he has the reputation throughout the world of being a statesman as well as a diplomat, and a clever diplomat—

He did not put it quite that way. His exact words, according to the report, were—

This is Lloyd George to President Wilson over yonder—

"You are wanting everybody else to try this thing (the mandatory system) but you are not willing to take any responsibility yourself."

Again I ask what does it mean? Who can correctly interpret this situation?

Mr. DIES. I can think of only one worse system than that promulgated by the Democratic President, and that is the one promulgated by the Republican ex-President. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, the question in the gentleman's mind is that Taft may be wrong in advocating a league of nations, and that Wilson may also be wrong in demanding a league of nations before he establishes peace that will enable us to bring our soldiers home. I do not quite get the gentleman's reasoning.

I interpret this semiofficial statement of Lloyd George's attitude toward our President over there to mean that the President has advanced certain ideas with regard to entangling alliances which we did not instruct him to advance, and that Mr. Lloyd George has said, "If you want these things done that you propose shall be done over here in European affairs, where we think we have something to say, you, as the representative of the American people, will stand your share of the responsibility and the expense, and you will maintain an army in Russia, and you will tax your people, and you will create loans, and you will include yourself as bound to police the world." That is one reason why our soldiers now can not come back. Our President is over there, and until we get peace and he comes back, apparently we can not adjust this question. That would seem to answer the gentleman as to his demand for immediate demobilization.

Mr. DIES. I move to strike out the last word. You know, if I had to choose between our Democratic President and the last President the Republicans had in the White House, I would take Wilson, because he at least does not want the armed forces of the United States to police the world and to have us involved in a war without our consent. I hope he will not do that. My wish with regard to the President is that he was at his office, at his official place of abode, and that this great American Union could get back to the ideals of Lincoln and Cleveland and Tilden, and, going back further, could get back to Jefferson and the Constitution that seems somewhat obsolete now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Another great American Democrat.

Mr. DIES. Precisely. I am not partisan. I wish there was a Democratic Party. I would like to belong to it. [Laughter.] I am looking forward to the time when there will be some party without a nigger in the woodpile, or Mason and Dixon's line, that an honest believer in representative and constitutional democracy could belong to. I never take any stock in these partisan byplays across the aisle. I am always wishing that some great American might arise, greater than Mason and Dixon's line, and still greater than the old hatred that is passing away of the South to the North or of the North to the South, a man who might rise to the flag of our country and the Constitution under which we live and call the people of the South and North back to the love of representative democracy. Do you know what I think of the President being over there? Well, I kind of think he ought not to be over there.

I wish he was back home, because I do not want to entangle this great, free Republic, this owner of a hemisphere, this people sufficient within themselves; I do not want to mix them up in a card game where there are more kings and queens than there are presidents. [Laughter and applause.] You know we do not stand to get anything out of these entanglements except more entanglements. England, as has been well said, gets predominancy. France gets "revanche." Italy gets back the Adriatic. But what does Uncle Sam get, except a burden and a mortgage upon the resources of this country? And I do say, Mr. Chairman, if it is the will of the Congress, now that our enemy has capitulated, laid down his arms as abjectly as Lee laid down his arms at Appomattox, we ought to be able to get our boys home. You know the War between the States did not end for several years after Appomattox, and yet the flag of the Confederacy was as much in the dust, and the Confederate arms were as much beaten after the surrender at Appomattox as Germany's flag and arms are to-day.

I do say in common honesty if you believe in compulsory military and naval service in time of peace, you ought to be made to vote for it in time of peace and not to stand on a lawyer's simple technicality. Get that into your minds, because that is the thing you are going to have to vote for. Of course it is said among the Republicans that we are keeping the boys in this sort of service because you had the vote last November, when there was a small arousing in the country. But that was only a remonstrance, when our boys were facing the German lines; and what you will get in November, 1920, in time of profound peace, if we continue the present compulsory military service in a time of peace—oh, well, I would hate to be a rooster then if this thing keeps up. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent: Ferriage, continuous-service certificates, discharges, good-conduct badges, and medals for men and boys, including civilian employees who render conspicuous service by putting their life in jeopardy to save life or property; purchase of gymnastic apparatus; transportation of effects of deceased officers and enlisted men of the Navy, and of officers and enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force who die while on duty; books for training apprentice seamen and landsmen; maintenance of gunnery and other training classes; packing boxes and materials; books and models; stationery; and other contingent expenses and emergencies arising under cognizance of the Bureau of Navigation, unforeseen and impossible to classify, $20,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am very much impressed by the attitude of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. I think he has proved an inspiration to those of us who desire to see democracy preserved in the United States. I glory in the fact that he talks on these subjects without regard to partisan lines, and would, if he had his way, as I would, wipe out the Mason and Dixon line forever. I am glad that we have the gentleman from Texas with us, and will have him until the end of his term. He has been a useful, earnest, eloquent Member of this House, and I shall regret to see him go. During the rest of his career here it may be that by such eloquent addresses as he has made to-day, and yesterday he may help to draw the attention of the country, as he has drawn our attention, to the dangers that confront the Nation. I will not say dangers due to mismanagement, dangers due to a particular administration, but I agree with the gentleman from Texas that vast and intricate and complex problems are confronting us which we can not too seriously consider now while he remains with us.

He has indicated that the juice of the American orange has been squeezed; that we have upon our shoulders a great burden; that men whom we have loaned to the cause of civilization and humanity are now held in leash because of a system against which he inveighs. I wish the men who are still battling in the snows of Russia were here; I wish those who are still lingering in the mud of France were back in the United States. I wish we had vessels enough to bring them, but I realize that we have not yet had issued to us by the President a proclamation of peace; and until the President does issue that proclamation, we must recognize that a state of war exists.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does not the gentleman think that some of us here and abroad are overlooking the fact that the Senate of the United States has something to say about negotiations for peace?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; and I hope that the gentleman's expectations may be fully verified and that the Senate of the United States will exercise the sovereign authority it possesses to pass upon the work of the President of the United States, now seemingly entangling himself in the meshes of European affairs. He promised to give us his confidence, but up to the present time he has given us no word, save that telegram to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs urging us to pass a bill for a tremendous sum to be charged against the taxpayers of the United States to prepare apparently for a future war.

Mr. GARLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GARLAND. Does the gentleman think it entirely possible, after the settlement of peace has been entered into between the President of the United States and the leading nations, that the Senate of the United States would have the temerity to even cross a "t" or dot an "i"?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has asked a very pertinent question. My prayer is that the Senate of the United States will have the nerve to stand up against any unfair or un-American bargain made in the name of the American people without their consent. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I think that the committee and the country owe a vote of thanks to the fearless utterances of our colleague from Texas. I have been convinced for weeks that there is such a reticence here among Members upon matters of such import as have been discussed by him that we are allowing ourselves to suffer a sort of decadence, which is ultimately bound to result, through the process of atrophy, in the Congress doing nothing and saying nothing. Every time anyone makes a suggestion on this side of the aisle as to what is being done that would be better not to be done, somebody announces that it is pure partisanship, and that it is not grounded on anything like sincere utterance, but simply because the administration happens to be of a different political faith. It is immediately charged by those who feel called upon to be the mentors of the House as mere partisan attack, designed to embarrass the administration. This system of espionage has been so long employed that the Members have become timid and hesitate to make any adverse comment. If I want to be called a patriot, it seems necessary for me to indorse everything that is done. Even it is demanded that we give blanket indorsement of what may be done. If I decline to indorse some of the things, even that we know ought not to be done, because of their inevitably bad results on our Government, immediately comes the charge that I am disloyal if not treasonable. We are told that we ought not to discuss in an antagonistic manner anything that is going on in France, because it indicates that we are not patriotic. These matters are of no concern to the Congress. The country must set silent and allow the President, uninstructed but self-appointed, to do our thinking. When a gentleman from the other side of the aisle will rise and in his fearlessness state what is his conviction, and dares to question the infallibility of even the head of the Nation in matters of such vital concern, the country owes him in this hour a vote of gratitude [applause], because these things ought to be said. We have not yet reached the place where we admit "our President can do no wrong." We are entering in these days of world strife, when our President is obsessed with making world democracy universal, a stage of internationalism and entangling our feet in the meshes of European politics, by inviting our country to become the umpire of every insignificant quarrel over insignificant boundaries and other questions that are of no importance to us at all to-day.

Mr. Chairman, my office and your office become the visiting points of representatives of countries in Europe, praying to us as Members of this body to take a position in reference to some of the questions that are purely European, that have absolutely no significance in the Chamber of the American House of Representatives. I am visited, as you are, Mr. Chairman, by representatives, to be specific, of a movement in Ireland, and I am told that I shall be compelled to vote upon the question of the politics that belong to Europe and not to this country. I said courteously to the party calling upon me that I could not enter into these matters, matters purely European. I said, "You have your contests with a country that is not ours, and while I might have a sympathy for what you would want, as suggested by the policy of Gladstone back in 1884, yet it is not an American proposition; it does not belong to American legislation, and American Congressmen ought not to be asked to give interviews to representatives of European politics and European idiosyncrasies. I am not ready to turn this body into a conference for European problems. I do not think it is a proper field." And then along will come a representative from one of the mushroom republics of mid-Europe and ask that a certain pronouncement be made as a moral influence upon what they expect to win later on. While I sympathize with the ambitions and aspirations of all these new countries, we must not forget that our duty is here and not there.

Mr. Chairman, while I have been called upon to vote for the aspirations of the new republic that is growing in mid-Europe, and it is only one of probably nine, I do not think that it is the province of American Representatives to step over into the world vortex and undertake to decide what shall be the peculiar character of the government of that peculiar province, which until recently was subordinate in a sense to some other government. Those are only two instances of many that have come to every member who sits upon the floor to-day. To me it is simply an impossible situation that we should forget the nationalism that marks the American Republic, without which we are going into danger, because whenever you lose the specific morale that marks American genius and lose yourself in internationalism in Europe, the danger is not temporary; it is, I fear, perpetual. For that reason I am glad that our colleague from Texas [Mr. DIES] has had the courage to call a halt and not be afraid of being called a traitor or a disloyal man because he speaks his convictions upon the floor of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Gunnery and engineering exercises: Prizes, trophies, and badges for excellence in gunnery, target practice, engineering exercises, and for economy in coal consumption, to be awarded under such rules as the Secretary of the Navy may formulate; for the purposes of printing, recording, classifying, compiling, and publishing the rules and results; for the establishment and maintenance of shooting galleries, target houses, targets, and ranges; for hiring established ranges, and for transporting the civilian assistants and equipment to and from ranges, $350,000.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I do not know when I have ever heard a discussion which interested me more than has the discussion this afternoon. Surely, in the providence of God, the day will come in this Republic when there is no South, no North, no East, no West, but when Democrats and Republicans are going to worship our great country and the Constitution under which we live. You know these discussions are fruitful. We have as the President of the United States a man who does not believe in a written constitution. We have as a President of the United States a man who does not believe in the checks and balances established and followed by Jefferson and Washington and Madison. It is particularly important to the American people for the preservation of their liberties that now that the war in Europe is over they should understand the situation in which the country finds itself. As I said, we have a man as President who does not believe in the checks and balances of the Constitution.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman give us the authority for that statement?

Mr. DIES. Precisely. I give the President's own books themselves, in which he said that Jefferson and Madison were tyros who looked through an orrery to the skies and undertook to set up a form of government responsible to Newton, who believed in mathematics, and he said that the checks and balances of the Constitution were obsolete, and that he believed in the Darwinian theory of the growth of the Constitution, as if any sensible man ever believed that a contract could grow. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the gentleman believe in the growth of government?

Mr. DIES. Yes; but I do not believe in the growth of a contract.

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman does not believe that the Constitution ought to be amended, as it has been amended several times.

Mr. DIES. Oh, yes; it can grow by amendments, and contracts and wills can grow by codicils and changes, but this man said he believed in the Darwinian theory of the growth of the Constitution of the United States. Mr. Chairman, I speak with as much responsibility upon my head as any Member of Congress representing 300,000 people of this Republic. I want neither an office, nor a star, nor a garter, nor a diadem, but I am content to believe in the Constitution of my Government, a written Constitution, with its checks and balances, to hold in check the power of despotism. And do you know I think it is the most unfortunate thing that ever happened to this Government when our President sailed away from the shores of America to entangle our destinies with the destiny and broils and quarrels of the scorbutic society of the Old World. I wish Members of Congress would get back to a sense of their own dignity and importance. There are a hundred men in this Congress who by virtue of attainment and reading and statesmanship are better qualified to fill the Presidency than the present occupant of the White House. [Laughter on the Republican side.] In the name of God, why should we turn over the practical politics of this country to an erratic statesman, to a man who never served in a legislative capacity—and I hope you Republicans will take this in good spirit.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, the hilarity upon this side, I think, was due to the thought that perhaps the present occupant of the White House should be the gentleman who is acting as the Secretary to the President of the United States.

Mr. DIES. There is one thing I find about the Republicans in my 10 years' service here, and that is that they have bid louder for the radical vote than we Democrats have bid, even to the extent of their vocal powers to bid. But what we need here is a Congress under the Constitution which is one of the three coordinate branches of the Government. This Government is composed of three branches—the legislative, the judicial, and the executive—and the executive, under our present President, has usurped all the powers of government, and you and I and the balance of us sit here exercising no power. Somebody said that somebody said that somebody said that a cablegram had come from Europe that we should do thus and so with the people's money, but we sit supinely in our seats, and let it go at that. Mr. Chairman, if this Government is to be saved to the people as representative democracy, these men fresh from the people must rise in their dignity, not as Democrats and Republicans, but as American representatives of the American people——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DIES. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DIES. I once had a joint debate with a socialist. He was the accredited organizer for the State of Texas, and I asked him a question in debate, and his answer to my question almost broke up the meeting. That question was this, "Seeing that all things are comparative by comparison, do you know of any government that ever existed in the world that gave more liberty, opportunity, hope, and freedom to the people than the Government of the United States under the Constitution?" Well, he floundered around and finally said he did not know of any such government. And I asked my friend, the Socialist Member from New York, MEYER LONDON, who, by the way, is a very intellectual socialist, the other night in a private debate if he knew of any government in the world that had ever existed in all the history of the world that by comparison was as good and afforded as much liberty, hope, and opportunity as this Government of the United States under the Constitution. He said he never heard of any. Well, is it not passing strange that upon this hemisphere our fathers have erected this great Republic of liberty, transcending all that the Greeks and Romans have done, transcending every effort of men to erect free government all over the world, and yet this President, this man, elected by the people says that the checks and balances of the Constitution render it unworkable, and that its only hope is in the Darwinian theory of evolution.

I would rather go back to my farm on Turkey Creek than sit here like you sit, having abrograted your functions as one of the three coordinate branches of the Government of the United States. It is the duty of this Congress, it is the duty of those who have sworn to support the Constitution, it is the duty of men coming fresh from the people to rise and demand that the Congress of the United States, and not any other function, should control the revenues of the Government and perform its legitimate function. [Applause.] Do you know there is a wonderful similarity between the decay of this Republic and the decay of the Roman Empire? I wish some Members of Congress would go back and read not what the good Roman Emperors said but read the history of the Caligulas, the Tiberius, those who followed the good Roman Emperors, who stifled and oppressed the rights of the people. My friends, if you want to answer the Bolsheviki, and it has a propaganda in this country; if you want to answer it, you answer it by saying, "Liberty by law, not liberty by man." I respect no man who would force power—and men love power and men abuse power—I respect liberty by law, and that in this country is the Constitution of the United States. I love it. It is the bulwark of the liberties of the people. What is Roosevelt and Wilson and Taft and Bryan and all the balance of them who come and go? It is the Constitution that divides the power between the legislative, the executive, and the judicial, and that is the written law of the land, and you ought to support it, and in supporting it you ought to do your legislative duty, which is to control the fiscal policy of the United States. And this very bill is an insult to the American Congress, because the chairman of the committee says, in effect, that the President has whispered to the Secretary of the Navy and he has whispered in an undertone to the chairman of the committee and he has passed the word along to the members of the committee and they let it percolate out by pinches, nods, and grunts to the Congress. In the name of Almighty God, it is the first branch of the Government that ought to have the respect of the people of the United States. [Applause.] You ought to know everything that is going on in Europe to-day. You should demand your rights and you should demand the rights and dignity of the people of the United States. You should legislate, you should veto some, you should assert yourself more, because if you do not do it, there are other gentlemen who will take your places who will do it.

Mr. HEFLIN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is recognized.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I always enjoy my genial friend from Texas [Mr. DIES]. He and I differ very greatly about the President of the United States, as the people of America differ with him on that great subject. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] always take delight in criticizing and nagging at the President, but prior to the recent election these gentlemen and all Republicans were loud in proclaiming that they were supporting the administration better than the Democrats were and that they would continue to support him, and it would be really better for the administration to have Republicans than Democrats. And since they have been elected they have been sitting up of nights devising ways and means to annoy and belittle the great President of the United States. The President of the United States at the close of the most colossal war in all history, when the earth was fairly drenched in human blood, and millions of human beings in God's image had been slaughtered by the machinery of war—at the end, I say, of the greatest war of all the world, when the civilized forces of mankind met in Paris to bring about conditions that would prevent war, the President went from the United States to where 2,000,000 American boys in uniform had gone, where thousands of them poured out their blood in battle, and where thousands of them sleep their last sleep in the soil of France. He went, I say, in person, representing the greatest Government on the globe, to speak for this mighty people in the interest of permanent peace. [Applause.]

He is criticized now by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]; he is criticized now by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] for sitting at the peace table in Europe and trying to prevent war, with all its horrors.

I trust that all of our boys who died in France will be brought back by the Government, and that at home, in the quiet churchyards of the country, with that flag wrapped about their caskets, the Government will lay to rest the forms of these brave boys who died for Old Glory in France. [Applause.] I trust that the President of the United States will stay there and urge with all the power of his brilliant intellect, with all the power that this Government can give him, and speak against war, work against the recurrence of such a war in the future.

If this Government permits this occasion to go by without going upon record as against war, and preventing war, we have been false to our generation. We have committed a crime against posterity. This Government can not afford to let that opportunity go by. I sit here in shame when I hear you on that side or this side decrying and belittling the great President of the United States. [Applause.] I have no patience with it. And I want to tell you that the American people have no patience with it.

You on that side, who promised to support the administration, what will be your answer at the judgment bar of the people two years from now, when the people ask you how you conducted yourselves during this very trying time? How will it be with gentlemen on this side, who are doing all they can to embarrass the President, when they stand at the judgment bar of the people at election time in their districts? You are going to have to face this, gentlemen. As sure as you live and I live, and God reigns, the mothers of America are against war. The fathers of America are against war, the young men and young women of America are against war, except as an absolute necessity, and if we have it in our power to prevent war and will not do it, we commit crime against human beings the world over. [Applause.]

I believe that we can form a league of nations and prevent war. But gentlemen coming from great States that manufacture the implements of death, the mighty machinery of war, decry our efforts to prevent war. I am in favor of protecting the blood and lives of the American people above the idea of putting money in the coffers of the manufacturer of implements of war.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. This naval bill would put this money in the coffers of the manufacturers of implements of war, would it not?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am not talking about this bill. I am talking about the attack on the President of the United States.

Mr. KEARNS. I thought we were considering this bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am now considering the attack on the President of the United States.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman believe that a criticism of the President's books, in which he speaks of the checks and balances, is a criticism of him?

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman criticized the President for going away from the country. I think if the boys of my district and relations of mine can be taken by the strong arm of our Government and can go to the battle fields in France and achieve victory for our country and civilization, that the President can go there and sit at a peace table in the interest of our country and humanity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. DIES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama this question: If the executive head of the British nation and the executive head of the French nation and the executive head of the Italian nation are willing to send delegates to the conference to act for them, and also the executive head of the Japanese nation is willing to send delegates to act for him, does not the gentleman think the President could have found, as they found, other men to sit at the table without moving the office to Paris?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not at all. We are not patterning after Great Britain or Japan or Italy or France. We are the greatest democracy in the world. [Applause.] And the great democrat of America broke all precedents and went himself to speak for the democracy of his own country. It was proper for him to go. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. I would like to suggest to the gentleman that the real executives of the French, of the British, and of the Italian nations are with the President at the peace table.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is true.

No, gentlemen; you had better get up something else to talk about. Let me tell you, the people who have boys in France, who have had them die on the fields of France, and who hate war, are with the President of the United States and what he is doing to prevent war. Do not doubt that. Mr. Taft is trying to keep you gentlemen from getting into a hole. Every day he is writing in favor of a league of nations, and he is the greatest Republican living—William Howard Taft. [Applause.] Not only that, but he is liable to be your nominee for the Presidency, and if we have to have a Republican as President I would rather see him elected President than any other one I know.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I can not yield.

There are some pretty good Republicans, but I do not think there is any man in this House, or any 20 men in this House, who can fill the position of the Presidency as well as Woodrow Wilson can.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. DIES. If under the present administration the annual expenditures of the Navy have been increased from $140,000,000 to $746,000,000, the amount carried in the present bill, and the standing Army has been increased from 50,000 to the present standing Army of 500,000, how long will it be under this administration of world pacifism and benevolence until we get back to the old days?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have not seen the cablegram that the President sent. I do not know what his reasons were for making that request. But I am willing to trust him and the American people are willing to trust him in all his work at the peace table. This program can be held up by a Congress succeeding us, and instead of giving him whole-hearted support and letting the people of the world know that we are back of him, men have their butcher knives out and are trying to stab him to death, here and in another body, and playing politics at the cost of their country's welfare, when the President, the greatest man who walks this earth to-day, is laboring for the peace of the world.

The historian of the future, long after those who slander and traduce the President have passed into silence and pathetic dust, will record his greatness. Long after they have gone, this man Woodrow Wilson will live, not only in the history of America but in the history of the world; and the historian of the future will put him down as the greatest apostle of world liberty and democracy that ever appeared on the earth since Jesus Christ walked the dusty highways of Judea preaching the gospel of democracy, "Unto the least of these, my brethren." [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the gentleman desire to interrupt me?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I wish to follow the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Very well. I have been up in the gentleman's country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DECKER. I do not know that I want to take all that time.

Mr. Chairman, I had intended before leaving this body permanently to prepare a short speech presenting my views on some of these questions that have come up this afternoon, but I am moved to speak extemporaneously by the remarks made by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], for whom I have a profound respect. And more especially am I moved to speak by the universal applause that I heard on the Republican side following his remarks.

The gentleman from Texas appeals for the exercise of independence by the legislative branch of this Government. I have a right to speak for that doctrine, for I have not only preached that doctrine but I have practiced it from the beginning of my congressional career. You may say that I have been wrong in my judgment, but you can not say that I have truckled to Executive authority.

Let us review a little history now. Back in the days of the McLemore resolution, around the cloakrooms and in the lobbies of the hotels two-thirds of the Representatives of this House on both sides, Republicans and Democrats, talked in favor of warning Americans against riding on the armed ships of belligerent nations. You Republicans who applaud the gentleman's appeal for congressional independence now when the danger is over and 50,000 American graves are marked in Europe, how did you answer the roll call on that fatal day? [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DECKER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman knows how I voted.

Mr. DECKER. You voted as I did.

I am not saying I was right. Oh, no. I am saying that the majority of the men on both sides of this aisle thought that I was right then, but when the roll was called many of them yielded their judgment to the judgment of the Executive.

And then talk to me about your independence! Why, you Republicans solicited votes last November on the ground that you had followed Woodrow Wilson more loyally than Democrats had followed him, and now you ridicule and criticize the President and boast of your independence.

Oh, how some men rant and rave, and how they sneer, and how they pour forth their villification and abuse against our great President to-day. And there are some Democrats who do it as well as Republicans. I am not speaking as a partisan now. They do this because of his 14 points. Oh, how they sneer about that league of nations. Oh, how they sneer about "open covenants openly arrived at." Oh, how they sneer about self-determination and the rights of little peoples to have a say in what shall be their future destiny. If you were so independent, if you had so much courage, gentlemen on that side and on this side, if you thought so much of the Constitution, if you understood so well what were the duties of the Representatives of the American people, why did you not sneer and why did you not stand up and voice your opposition when Woodrow Wilson, the spokesman for America, enunciated his "14 points"? [Applause.] Why did you not speak then? Oh, you may smile. There was one Republican that had the courage to speak out at that time. I heard him. I listened to him; and I want to say to you, call him traitor as you may, denounce him as pro-German as you may, I have more respect for him than I have for Democrats and Republicans who now sneer at Woodrow Wilson's 14 points, including the league of nations.

I refer to Senator LA FOLLETTE, who stood in the Senate of the United States like a lion. Not now, when there is no danger politically, oh, no, I will say to the chairman of the Republican congressional committee; not now when the election is over, not now when the war is won and when the dead are counted by the thousands, and the crippled and the maimed are coming back home; no, no, LA FOLLETTE did not wait until the war was over to sneer and bemean and abuse and villify Woodrow Wilson; but in the hour of danger he stood like a man before the world and said it was the duty of Congress to say by solemn enactment what was the purpose of this war. If you did not believe in Woodrow Wilson's "14 points," why did you not stand up then and say what the points should be? Why did not the Republican chairman of the congressional committee who has just spoken stand with Mr. LA FOLLETTE then? If he did not have the courage to stand with LA FOLLETTE then and have Congress state its "points," it strikes me it is a little late now, when the war is over, to sneer at the President's points and to talk about the independence of the legislative body. [Applause.]

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DECKER. Yes; I will always yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. I was going to ask my friend from Missouri if he does not recognize a difference in the right of criticism when our country is at war and when we are at peace?

Mr. DECKER. No. It is the difference between courage and cowardice. That is the only difference. If you believed your country was being guided onto the shoals of destruction, if you believed that danger lay ahead, was it then your duty to be silent when Woodrow Wilson, as leader of America, proposed to adopt a certain policy? I have differed from him. I have differed from him openly and earnestly. I indorsed his 14 points then. I indorse them now. If you thought your country was endangered by his policies, then was the time to speak. Why not?

Oh, I know it was dangerous. You might lose your office, indeed. There are boys from my district who will never hold an office. They sleep under the lilies of France. They sleep amid the poppy fields of Flanders. They died for our country. Could not you and I afford to speak and vote for our country?

Now, do not misunderstand me. Let me recount my record. I did everything in my power to keep my country out of war. I knew war meant entangling alliances when my country went to war. I did everything I could to uphold the hands of Woodrow Wilson as the constitutional leader of our Army and Navy in time of war.

I did this because I thought it was the surest way to win the war. The war has been won, but our responsibility has not ended. At the cost of blood and treasure we helped to destroy the German Government and its power for evil. We have helped to shake the foundations of autocracy in Europe. Have we no right, have we no duty, to help to build something better in its place? We can no longer say we have no interest in European affairs. We are to-day bound to European nations by bonds of interest and sentiment. These bonds were welded in the white heat of war. It is idle to talk longer of our grand isolation.

This is a strange doctrine to come from the source it does—to come from men who voted to send our boys to Europe, who voted to tax the children yet unborn in order to participate in the European struggle—and I am going to grant for the sake of the argument that you were right and I was wrong—it is a strange doctrine to come from you, now that this great country, after it has done all this, should have no participation in the affairs and destinies of European nations. Is there a man here who believes that when another war comes, another great war, that it will be possible for us to refrain from entering that war? Is there one? Ah, we boasted of our isolation, we were proud of our freedom from European entanglements.

But what will happen when the next war comes? Will we enter it? Of course we will enter; we will enter it quicker than we went into this war. Then I stand as one to declare the doctrine that if the boys of our country must die in the next great war that starts across the seas, if our children's children yet unborn must pay the bonds and share the burdens of the next world war, then I want my country to have something to say about the starting of that war. I want my country to be in a position at least to try to prevent that war. [Applause.]

League of nations? Yes; I am for it. League of nations? Yes; I believe it will be the greatest step that was ever taken in all the history of mankind. You sneer at mandatories. I do not know exactly what they mean, but I will tell you what I believe: I believe in a league of nations that has got a "bite in it," a league of nations that will have the power to enforce its decrees, a league of nations that will have the power to say to a Government like the rotten, corrupt, despotic, and inefficient Czardom Russia, and to a despotic, brutal, and powerful Government like Germany, if such a Government shall ever rise again, "Thus far shalt thou go and no further." [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DECKER. I yield.

Mr. DIES. Is the gentleman in favor of compulsory military service to enforce the decrees of a league of nations?

Mr. DECKER. I believe in compulsory military service in time of war. I said that the night that we declared war against Germany, and I say it now.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman think we should have compulsory military service to settle the war between France and Italy?

Mr. DECKER. That is the same as what we have had, and I voted for it, and so did the gentleman from Texas. He voted for conscription to settle this war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DECKER. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion? I want to suggest that the independent legislators who were against conscription, in the Military Affairs Committee, voted against it and spoke against it in the committee, but came out and voted for it and spoke for it on the floor of the House.

Mr. DECKER. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to have spoken then than now—I do not mean safer? [Laughter.] I am for legislative independence in this body. I think this House affords opportunity for as great service as any place on earth. I do not think that the man ever lived that was big enough to completely fill his seat in this House. I do not care how great a man he may be; I do not care how much his learning, how much his courage, how much his foresight, he will never get too big to hold a position in this legislative body, and he will have more than he can do when he gets here if he does the work. I am for the independence of this body. I was for it before the war. I am for it now.

Mr. DIES. I did not quite get the response of the gentleman to my question.

Mr. DECKER. They interrupted me.

Mr. DIES. In the event of the league of nations and in case of a quarrel between, say, Italy and France, would the gentleman from Missouri be in favor of compulsory military service in the United States to make our boys go over there and settle that dispute?

Mr. DECKER. That is a fair question.

Mr. DIES. I think so.

Mr. DECKER. I thank the gentleman for suggesting it.

We ought to meet those things; we ought to meet them as legislators. We ought not to be talking so much about standing by the President. He needs no defense from me. He will be remembered long after you and I have been forgotten. His place in history is already made. The kinds of things that we should consider here are questions like the gentleman from Texas has asked me, and if you will give me time, I will tell you what I think about it.

Mr. DIES. It ought not to take long to answer that.

Mr. DECKER. Longer, my friend, than you dream of. [Laughter.] Let us go back to fundamentals. Who has the right to declare war? Our Constitution says that Congress has the right to declare war. If every Congressman would stand in his place and vote on that question of peace or war as he thought the people of his district wanted him to, you would get a pretty good reflex of the sentiment of the country at the time war was declared.

Then if a majority of the people wanted war, then I am for compulsory military service. To be frank with you, the man who is against compulsory military service in time of war, and who says that it is not democratic, confuses this proposition. It is not democratic to conscript people to go to war when the majority of the people of a country do not want the war. I admit that. But if a majority of a people of a country want war, then there is no way so democratic as compulsory military service.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DECKER. Oh, wait just a minute. Three of us are in a boat. We are out on a stormy river. Two think we ought to go across. Two vote to cross the river, and I vote not to go. The majority rules, and we start across. Do you not think that they have a right to make me pull my oar?

That is what compulsory military service in time of war means. It is the right of the majority to make the minority pull its oar when the boat is in danger.

If the people of this country, through honest representatives or through a referendum by the people, declare in favor of a league of nations of the world, then there can be no war between Italy and France. That war must necessarily be between Italy or France and the rest of the world.

If my country, by the will of a majority honestly registered, should enter a league of nations in order to prevent war and maintain international order, then in order to carry out the decree of that league of nations I would vote to conscript the last man and the last dollar. We do the same thing in a county when we empower a sheriff to summon any and every citizen to assist in the capture of a murderer.

Mr. DECKER. Then I would vote to conscript the last man and the last dollar to carry on the war to prevent a war. Gentlemen, you can sneer at Woodrow Wilson all you please; you can talk about his 14 points, and you can sneer about the affairs of Lithuania and Esthonia and Jugo-Slavia and the rest of those words we never heard of before the war. The only little country I knew about over there before the war was Ireland. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DECKER. When I am through with this idea I will answer the gentleman. Oh, be ye not deceived! You gentlemen on both sides of the aisle can get up here every day and read letters full of complaints about the conduct of the war. Yes; most of them are just.

When you Republicans get full control of the House you can start your investigating committees to grinding, and you will find some corruption, just like there was when you ran the Government in 1898, just like there always will be when a country goes to war, a democratic country. That is one reason I am in favor of a league of nations to stop wars. That is one reason I would be willing to vote for a league of nations to prevent war, for the reason that I do not believe that democracies can endure and have a war like the present war once every 50 years. It is a human impossibility, and you know it. War means militaryism, militaryism means despotism. It means corruption, yes. It means inefficiency, yes; and you knew it all the time; you knew there would be when you voted war—every one of you.

You knew it always had been——

Mr. DENISON. No——

Mr. DECKER. Well, then, you have not read the history of this country and the history of other countries. Let me tell you Republicans something: After you have picked around over the many mistakes of the War Risk Insurance Bureau and talked about Mr. Hoover and the price of wheat and the price of other things that the people are not satisfied with, do not forget this, that the people of this country know these things themselves, and still they are backing up the Government and the flag. [Applause.] You can pick many flaws, but the people of this country have not forgotten what the war was about. Some of you would rather sneer at world democracy and put the war solely on the ground of national rights.

That may be ground enough; but the mothers whose boys sleep on the other side, the boys who stagger home maimed and blind—they are not caring so much about the questions of international law, whether a merchant ship has a right to be armed fore and aft for defensive purposes; but I will tell you what the boys are thinking about. I will tell you what their mothers are thinking about. They are thinking about the glorious fight for humanity and for the emancipation of the world. [Applause.] I will tell you what they are thinking about. They are thinking about the war to end all wars. They are not thinking about whether Mr. Lansing was right when he said that the right to arm merchant ships under certain circumstances was "a doubtful legal right." Men hesitate to go to war. I mean go themselves and fight for legal technicalities. Courts might change the law before they get back home.

But on the question of human liberty, on the question of the freedom of the world, on the question of making the world safe for democracy, on the question of ending wars, mothers may well be proud to give their sons and men may well be proud to die. Sneer and scoff as you may about the idealism and theories of Woodrow Wilson, but I believe that the thing that will most console the mothers, whose boys will not come back, the thing that most will ease the pain of those who limp from wounds or grope in blindness, the thing that will be the greatest pay and bring the greatest pride to the heroes of this war, is a league of nations to enforce peace, the highest effort at least to end all wars.

The Clerk read as follows:

Outfits on first enlistment: Outfits for all enlisted men and apprentice seamen of the Navy on first enlistment at not to exceed $100 each; for civilian clothing not to exceed $15 per man to men given discharges for bad conduct, undesirability, or inaptitude; in all, $10,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, we have had a helpful discussion this afternoon, innocently started by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], carried on by the gentleman from Ohio, and delightfully wound up by the gentleman from Missouri. I do not believe, however, that this discussion should continue to a point where we should lose our tempers or immediately determine the affairs of the Nation, at home and abroad. My distinguished friend from Alabama, however, has helped to lift the gloom that has settled over the House, and his speech has cheered. He has given us one of those exhibitions of his fire and eloquence which gentlemen are permitted to enjoy only when he is thoroughly aroused in defense of the President of the United States. I am relieved now that he has spoken, as I was troubled before he spoke. I was in great concern when the eloquent gentleman from Texas, vieing in his attractiveness, if not in vehemence, with the gentleman from Alabama, ventured upon the new, bold, and almost untried field of democracy with the thought that we should get back to normal. I admire the gentleman from Texas, who made a frank statement that if a few more brave and courageous Democrats should take the stand that he did it might help to draw the attention of the country to the fact that many things are done in this House in the name of patriotism, and sometimes at the instance of the President, that ought to be brought to their attention. I was troubled as the gentleman from Texas was troubled and as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] was troubled with regard to entangling alliances into which we seemed to have entered without the consent of the people of the United States. I was troubled lest the clever diplomacy of the experienced diplomats of Europe might outwit even the wit of the President of the United States, who undertook in his own person to transact abroad the business of this country in the name of the Congress and of the people.

But, oh, I was gratified when my good and handsome friend from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] again entered the lists and came to the rescue. When the gentleman from Alabama was speaking, when he drew attention to the steel interests of Pennsylvania, when he endeavored to draw in the chairman of the Republican congressional committee and besmirch this splendid discussion with a political stigma, I could not help but think that if his demand was for peace he should not be sustaining this presidential bill, which proposes to tax the people more than $700,000,000 to increase the implements of war and to perpetuate in the world the spirit of hostility which he decries.

I sent to my office while the gentleman from Alabama was speaking——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs if he proposes to proceed with this bill to-night?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. I think it will be necessary to proceed until about 10 o'clock. I was hoping that at the conclusion of this the House would be satisfied with this discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, after the gentleman has his five minutes, I shall object to anything further.

Mr. PADGETT. We shall proceed to the consideration of the bill and limit debate. We have been very liberal to both sides in allowing this discussion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has been very liberal. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank also the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], although his interruption came at that particular part of my address which was most inopportune. But I expect he will let me get to it in due course. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is my "mutton." I ask the attention of that gentleman, because I have been wondering, lo these many weeks, if his eloquent voice was to be stilled; if it had finally come to pass that the President had no defender upon this floor. But he has spoken. We are reassured. The messenger to my office has brought me the tribute a constituent, who is very close to me, has desired I should pay to the President's gallant defender.

Listen, my colleagues:

TOM AND TUM.

When the President is tourin'
And the country's feelin' blue
And the boys are kind a-worryin'
Not knowin' what to do,
It's just a bit refreshin'
And it thrills you thro' and thro'
To know that Tom is on the job
And Tumulty is, too.

[Laughter.]

The fellers out there on the farm
Who heard their daddies tell
About the great George Washington
And Liberty's old bell
Have done a sight a' kickin'
'Cause the President has slid,
But they didn't know that Tom and Tum
Was sittin' on the lid.

[Laughter.]

It don't make any diff'rence
What the Constitootion says,
So long as we don't get mixed up
With all them foreign jays;
But even if our President
Should slip a cog or two,
We've got our Tom and Tumulty
To fall right back onto.

[Laughter.]

There may be cause for grievin'
When the boss is "over there."
His taking House and Hurley
Kind'a left us in the air;
But no matter if the eggs
Is in one basket, like, you see,
We've got a couple good ones
Left in Tom and Tumulty.

[Laughter.]

And while we had a better sight
Kept Creel upon this side
To keep the truth a-goin'
And to stem t' insurgent tide,
The cables is a-workin'
And the mails is in the bag,
And with Tom and Tum a-watchin
There ain't nothin' going' to lag.

[Laughter.]

'Nother thing: It 'taint in order
Much for us to criticize,
When without exactly knowin'
We should be infernal wise;
What the President is doin'
He is doin' as he said.
And it's up to Tom and Tumulty
To keep it in their head.

So, if anyone's been thinkin'
'Bout alliances and flukes,
And tanglin' Independence up
With Princes and with Dukes,
Remember, while the boss is
Speakin' langwidge to them kings,
That Tom will run the Ship of State
And Joe will pull the strings.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I probably would not have attempted to say anything here this afternoon had it not been for the speech of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER]. It seemed to me that he tried to leave the impression that every Member of this House who voted to lay the McLemore resolution upon the table did not vote his convictions and that all such were cowards when they cast their vote that way. I want to say that I was one of those who voted to lay the McLemore resolution on the table. The reason that I cast my vote that way was because I believed that American citizens had the right to travel on the high seas. [Applause.]

He said the reason we went to war was to save the world for democracy. Have the Members of this House forgotten the sinking of that great steamship, the Lusitania, when it was torpedoed in the dead hours of the night, when without any warning 1,200 innocent souls went down into a watery grave in the Atlantic Ocean—men, women, and defenseless children—a great many of them American citizens? We can still hear the cry of the little babe clutched to the breast of its mother when it came up through the icy waters of the Atlantic in the dead hours of the night when the Lusitania went down. Do the Members of this House forget how Kaiser William called the captain of that submarine boat to his side and pinned on his breast the iron cross and commended him for that dastardly deed that he had committed? Oh, we can still hear the so-called ministers of the gospel in their pulpits in Germany justifying the sinking of the Lusitania and glorying in it.

Why did this country go to war? On January 31, 1917, the Imperial Government of Germany informed President Wilson that on the very next day—oh, they were very liberal; they gave us 24 hours' notice to take our boats off the high seas—on the very next day, the 1st day of February, they would sink every American boat flying the American flag in certain waters of the Atlantic Ocean, where we had a perfect right to go. To have accepted that proposition would have meant the surrender of American sovereignty upon the high seas.

That is why this country went to war. We did not go to war to save the world for democracy. Our armies went to France to lick Germany, and we did our part in helping to lick Germany. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] says the fathers and mothers of this great land of ours to-day are praying for a league of nations. The fathers and mothers are not concerned about a league of nations. Their boys have done their part; they have licked Germany. What the fathers and mothers want now are their sons returned to their homes in this land. Yet the President of the United States would have us, a great Republic, entangled with all those fighting, snarling, snapping little nations of Europe, and keep the boys over there to police those countries during all their troubles.

I for one do not subscribe to that sentiment. We have done our part. Let us bring our boys home, where they belong. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MANN. This item carries an appropriation of $10,000,000 for outfits on first enlistments. What was the amount available for the current fiscal year?

Mr. PADGETT. Nearly $25,000,000.

Mr. MANN. How was that carried? On a deficiency bill?

Mr. PADGETT. In the original bill there was $9,975,000 and in the deficiency bill there was $15,000,000, and they said they would be able to turn back into the Treasury about $5,000,000 on account of the cessation of hostilities.

Mr. MANN. Well, this sum is used practically, I take it, for paying the cost of the outfits of enlisted men?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. It is estimated that $50,000 will be needed for civilian clothing and discharged men—$15 a suit. You will notice there is an item there for that.

Mr. MANN. That provision is for civilian clothing, not to exceed $15 per man, to men given discharges for bad conduct, undesirability, and inaptitude?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Certainly the Navy does not discharge 50,000 men?

Mr. PADGETT. I said $50,000.

Mr. MANN. The $10,000,000 is practically paid for the first outfits?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That contemplates $100,000, first outfits in the next fiscal year?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; on account of the large number of men going out and the new recruits that have to come in.

Mr. MANN. What is the Navy going to do? Is it going to let the men out of the service who went in supposedly for the period of the war, but who were in fact induced to sign a 4-year enlistment?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy stated and the others stated that they thought these men ought to be treated alike, and that they did not want to keep in the service a dissatisfied personnel; and the disposition is that wherever a man makes an application that is founded upon a good ground, to discharge him.

Mr. MANN. Now, this is the fact: The naval recruiting stations throughout the country, when the war commenced, solicited men to enlist in the Navy, stating to them that it was an enlistment for the period of the war.

Mr. PADGETT. A great many say that they so understood it.

Mr. MANN. I am not talking about how they understood it. I am talking about what the naval recruiting officers told the men. It is not a question of understanding. Do not let us mix it up. They told the men it was for the period of the war. Then when the men were transferred to the point where they signed their enlistment papers, they were handed papers to sign, enlisting for four years, and they signed them. What else could they do? Now, the question is whether the Government is going to keep good faith with them, or hold them to the technical enlistment?

Mr. PADGETT. I stated that the Secretary, as well as the others——

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman said the Secretary stated it, but that does not answer the question.

Mr. PADGETT. And then we have a provision in the bill here providing that those who enlisted after the declaration of war, for a period of four years——

Mr. MANN. You have a provision that the Secretary of the Navy may discharge them. He can do that now. The provision in the bill does not amount to I O U. There is nothing to it. He can discharge them now, and there is nothing to it except this one thing, possibly: He said for a long time that he could not give them an honorable discharge. All you provide is that he may give them an honorable discharge, but that does not require him to discharge them. Now, if the good faith of the Government requires it to settle contracts which are not legal in form, or requires it to pay money to men solicitous to invest in mining operations, if the good faith of the Government requires it to do these things for men who gave materials to the Government, I should like to know whether the good faith of the Government does not equally require it to keep true the statements made by the recruiting officers who induced the men to enlist.

Mr. PADGETT. I have stated that that was the purpose and the policy of the Secretary and of the Bureau of Navigation.

Mr. MANN. That is what they say, but they do not do it. What is the use?

Mr. PADGETT. They say they are doing it very rapidly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows they are not discharging these men rapidly. They say they need the men in the service. The gentleman said this afternoon that they needed the men in the service.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Very well. That is not the question. The question is not whether they need men in the service but whether they will keep faith with the men who went into the service.

Mr. PADGETT. The men who went into the service during the war are still in the service under their contract. The war is not yet ended; but the department, as rapidly as it can do so consistently with the safety of the Navy, is discharging them. The gentleman would not have these men discharged in a body and leave the ships so that they would be unmanned and could not be operated.

Mr. MANN. If I had made an agreement with a young man enlisting in the Navy, and had asked him to enlist for the period of the war, I would let him out at the end of the war if the heavens fell.

Mr. PADGETT. But the war is not yet at an end.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I know; but I am trying to find out what the Navy is going to do. Technically the war may not be over, but it is really over, and the Navy Department have not announced any such policy. On the contrary, they have said they propose to hold the men to this four-year enlistment contract.

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; because the Secretary of the Navy has already directed 20 per cent of them to be discharged.

Mr. MANN. Then the other 80 per cent are to be held contrary to good faith?

Mr. PADGETT. No; because numbers of them enlisted for four years, intending to remain four years.

Mr. MANN. Of course that is the paper they were required to sign.

Mr. PADGETT. No; others went in there to stay four years.

Mr. MANN. If they are willing to stay, let them stay; but if they want to get out the good faith of the Government ought to let them out.

Mr. PADGETT. Where they entered that way the department is dealing with them that way.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will give me his attention, on page 18 of the bill is a paragraph intended to cover the situation the gentleman complained of, and which I think he correctly complained of. That provision provides that a man enlisted for four years shall be held to be construed to have enlisted only for the duration of the war, so that it is not optional on the Secretary of the Navy to keep them in for four years after the bill becomes a law.

Mr. MANN. Well, let us speak. I will read the paragraph; it is on page 18; and then I will ask the gentleman's construction of it.

Now, if the gentleman is willing to change the word "may" to "shall," it will accomplish the purpose; but it means nothing as it stands.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It should be changed to "shall."

Mr. IGOE. Does the gentleman mean that the men shall get a chance to do this. Our experience has been that when orders are given of this kind men never get at it. Why not say that those who want to stay may apply?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. After the war is over and peace officially declared this language will accomplish what the gentleman from Missouri desires. The word "may" should be changed to "shall."

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Home, Philadelphia, Pa., pay of employees: One secretary, $2,200; 1 foreman mechanic, $2,200; 1 superintendent of grounds, at $1,080; 1 steward, at $1,200; 1 store laborer, at $660; 1 matron and office assistant, at $720; 1 beneficiaries' attendant, at $480; 1 chief cook, at $660; 1 assistant cook, at $540; 1 assistant cook, at $480; 1 chief laundress, at $420; 2 laundresses, at $360 each; 3 laundresses, at $300 each; 1 chief scrubber, at $420; 3 scrubbers, at $360 each; 1 head waitress, at $480; 4 waitresses, at $360 each; 4 waitresses, at $300 each; 1 kitchen attendant, at $540; 7 laborers, at $600 each; 5 laborers, at $540 each; 1 stable keeper and driver, at $660; 1 master at arms, at $900; 2 house corporals, at $600 each; 1 barber, at $600; 1 carpenter, at $1,200; 1 painter, at $1,200; 1 painter, at $1,020; 1 engineer, $1,080; 4 laborers, at $720 each; 3 laborers, at $840 each; 1 laborer, at $600; 1 chauffeur, coal truck, at $960; 1 chauffeur, small truck, at $840; 1 chauffeur, governor's car, $840; total for employees, $40,820.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read. I wish to inquire what the policy of the committee was as to the increase of salary providing for the various officials and employees enumerated in the paragraph just read.

Mr. PADGETT. There was an increase for each one of them. These salaries are very low and they are paid out of the interest on the Navy pension fund. The Navy pension fund was established many years ago by the sale of naval prizes, and this constitutes a trust fund, and this institution is supported out of the interest on that fund.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that each one of the various officials and employees will receive $240 flat allowances that Congress is disposed to vote to all employees of the Government?

Mr. PADGETT. I suppose they will.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to the increase of the lower salaries of employees. I wish to ask whether, in the increase of salaries, the committee took into consideration that they would receive the additional allowance that is going to be paid to the employees of the Government generally?

Mr. PADGETT. We thought that they would get the same bonus that the others get. All of these salaries are very low.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am asking whether the committee, in arranging the increases, took into consideration the fact that they would also receive the additional allowance?

Mr. PADGETT. I stated I so understood—that they would get the same benefit that others get under the general law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here we have—and I am more concerned about the two higher officials—a secretary who is raised from $1,800 to $2,200 and a foreman of mechanics from $1,800 to $2,200. Each one would receive, in addition to the $400 increase, $240, which would make $640. Does not the gentleman think that that is a large increase in one year?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but these salaries have been distressingly low heretofore.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think that in view of the allowance of $240 the salaries carried in the bill for the secretary and foreman of mechanics should be fixed at $2,000?

Mr. PADGETT. These were recommended by the governor of the home, who is very familiar with the institution.

Mr. STAFFORD. If reduced to $2,000 then they would be $40 more than the governor of the home recommended.

Mr. PADGETT. He did not include the bonus which would be $240. The committee thought that that was reasonable and as they are paid out of the interest on the trust fund which is a pension fund we thought it a reasonable allowance.

Mr. STAFFORD. Owing to the fact that the Congress has taken the position in favor of giving $240 net increase to all, and the fact that the governor of the home recommended a maximum salary of $2,200 to these employees, would not the gentleman agree to have the salary of these two employees fixed at $2,000 which would make $2,240 salary?

Mr. PADGETT. If the House did that upon a motion, well and good. The committee thought this was a reasonable salary as a basic salary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course if the gentleman is not willing to give to these employees $40 more than the governor contemplated in his recommendations, I shall feel constrained to make the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. I suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw the point of order and make a motion to reduce the amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will that be supported by the gentleman?

Mr. PADGETT. I shall not oppose it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order and offer the following amendment, to strike out in line 21 the figures "$2,200" and insert "$2,000" and in line 22, strike out the figures "$2,200" and insert "$2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 12, line 21, strike out "$2,200" and insert "$2,000"; page 12, line 22, strike out "$2,200" and insert "$2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Navy is hereby temporarily increased until June 30, 1920, from 131,485 to 225,000 enlisted men, so that the total number of enlisted men of the Navy, regular and temporary, shall not exceed a total of 225,000 men: Provided, That the phrase "authorized enlisted strength" as applied to the temporary enlisted personnel for purposes of computations based thereon for temporary officers shall be 181,485 men: Provided further, That of the total authorized temporary enlisted strength of 225,000 men there is estimated and included 82,000 men for the operation of the ships of the Army transport service and for the operation of the ships from the Shipping Board, and in the event the operations of such ships do not require the full number of 82,000 enlisted men, the number of men less than 82,000 not so required shall be discharged from the service out of the temporary increase herein authorized.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph just read. I remember in the general debate and in the discussion under the five-minute rule that the question of the permanent enlisted ranks of the Navy was adverted to. I remember the gentleman's explanation as to the policy to authorize only this maximum strength of 225,000 men upon the contingency that a certain number, 82,000, I believe, would be used by the Shipping Board in the transport service.

Mr. PADGETT. Will be used by the Navy in the operation of the ships for the Shipping Board and the Army transports.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire whether this would not recognize for all time the permanent enlisted strength of the Navy at 225,000 men.

Mr. PADGETT. Not at all, because it says that the authorized strength is increased from 131,000 temporarily to June 30, 1920, and it is limited to that time by express words. It would have to be increased after July, 1920, by act of Congress. Otherwise, it would go back to the permanent authorized strength, 131,485, plus the 6,000 enlisted apprentice seamen and the Hospital Corps of about 5,700. That is all that is provided by permanent law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has any testimony been furnished to the committee as to the number of men that will be needed when the present Navy program is completed and put in commission?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Capt. Lanning insisted, and the Bureau of Navigation sent in a report for 217,000 and odd, but the committee did not think it would require that many for the reason that they were putting it on a basis of a larger complement of ships.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was that basis on a full complement or the active warfare basis?

Mr. PADGETT. They were estimating that the complement of the ships should be the full complements on all of the ships.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I think he misapprehended the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin. As I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin, he inquired whether any estimate has been made of the number of men who would be required when all of the ships heretofore authorized were finished. Personally I do not know of any such estimate.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was my question, as to the number of men that would be required to man our ships when the present authorized program is completed.

Mr. PADGETT. No; for the simple reason that we only went to the ships that would be in commission up to the 30th of June, 1920, the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. STAFFORD. And it was estimated that 207,000 would be required for a full complement of those ships?

Mr. PADGETT. Two hundred and seventeen thousand.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That included 20,000 men to man the transports?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, the men required to man the transports are expected to be withdrawn after the end of the next fiscal year, and that would mean 197,000 men. Is that on a basis of a full complement for the fighting ships on a war basis?

Mr. PADGETT. Not on what you would call a war basis, because on a war basis they have an extra allotment for casualties and for training. It would be on the full complement, but not as heretofore called the peace complement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, I remember in the discussion before we entered the war that there was complaint made by the Navy officials that the various naval ships were only equipped with some 60 to 75 per cent of the necessary men required.

Mr. PADGETT. This is known as the reserve complement. In the peace complement, for instance, take a battleship and it can be operated, say, with 1,050 men. In war times that ship would have perhaps 1,550 men upon it. They estimate that for the full complement in keeping it in activity there would be, say, 1,400 men. Now, in making our estimates and putting it at 225,000 we have gone on the supposition that in the distribution in peace times 1,050 men would be sufficient on a ship instead of 1,400, and on what is known as the war complement or in actual warfare there would be, say, 1,550.

Mr. STAFFORD. With 197,000 required to man ships that will be in commission at the end of the coming fiscal year would it be a rash estimate to say 300,000 men would be required when all the vessels that are now under contract are put in commission?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I think that would be excessive. I do not think it will require that many.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the recommendation of the Bureau of Navigation of 197,000 men for the regular ships of the Navy was thought excessive by the committee and that is why we did not increase the authorized strength of the Navy above 143,000 as provided by existing law.

Mr. PADGETT. We wanted to leave that so as to make it permanent if it is to be increased, so that when it is gone into it can be done under more quiet times than now, on a more natural, normal peace basis.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say further to the gentleman from Wisconsin that is what the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation provided for keeping the destroyers in commission and all of the Ford boats—Eagles—and a lot of the other craft that could reasonably be put out of commission or in reserve in time of peace.

Mr. STAFFORD. And it is the policy of the bureau, as recommended by the committee, that a large number of destroyers will be placed in reserve? How many have we in all?

Mr. PADGETT. Three hundred and forty-two.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It would seem that would be an economical and proper course.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman will understand the department has put no promise on that. It is only talk among ourselves.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The authorized enlisted strength of the Marine Corps is hereby increased to 26,297 men, distribution in the various grades to be in the same proportion as is now authorized by law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph just read. I would like to have some expression on the part of the chairman of the committee or some other member as to what the policy of the committee is as to the temporary force and the permanent force of the Marine Corps.

Mr. PADGETT. Under existing law the permanent authorized strength of the Marine Corps is 17,400. Under the temporary strength the Marine Corps is 75,500. This legislation proposes to increase the permanent strength from 17,400 to 26,294 and to increase until June 30, 1920, the temporary strength to 50,000 instead of 75,000, as it now is. That is the next paragraph.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order? If not, I will make it. I do not think it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think it is, either.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to know the reason for this policy to increase the permanent force of 17,000 to 26,200.

Mr. PADGETT. In the naval bill last year, which was approved July 1, by a Senate amendment the permanent strength of the Navy was increased to 131,485.

They did not put anything in the provision for the increase of the Marine Corps. That was left unprovided for and, not being in the amendment, was not in conference, so that the conferees could not deal with the question of the increase of the Marine Corps. The increase of the Navy was agreed to. There has been a sort of general understanding that up to a certain point the Marine Corps would be one-fifth of the Navy, and this puts it at one-fifth of the 131,485. The commandant of the Marine Corps submitted a detailed statement, which appears in the hearings, recommending a permanent increase to 33,000. The Secretary of the Navy did not approve of that, but very earnestly recommended and approved an increase to 26,297.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman withdraw the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. I suppose a point of order will not lie against this paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdrew the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. I know. I will renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania renews the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. He agreed with me that he does not think it will lie.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think it would lie, because of the provisions of the act of 1908. Therefore, I am not going to impose——

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the provision of the act of 1908?

Mr. PADGETT. The increase of the Navy and the increase of the Marine Corps are in order on the appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER. The act of 1908 reads:

Provided, That hereafter the number of enlisted men in the United States Marine Corps shall be such as the Congress may from time to time authorize.

Mr. PADGETT. The point of order is not made. Let us read ahead.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no. We are not going ahead with this. This means $78,000,000, and you gentlemen who are sitting here should know it. I want you, when you vote for this, to understand what you are doing.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania make the point of order?

Mr. BUTLER. I will make it for the purpose of having the Chair rule on it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send the provision to the Chair?

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman who is now occupying the chair understands the rules of the House as well as any Member, and consequently I hand to him this in order that he may rule upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The language which the gentleman sends to the Chair is:

Provided, That hereafter the number of enlisted men in the United States Marine Corps shall be such as the Congress may from time to time authorize.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, Congress has to appropriate for the number, and it has always been treated and dealt with in the appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Has this question been passed upon before?

Mr. BUTLER. It has not. There has always been a dispute in the committee about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Legislation is not in order on an appropriation bill. Merely the expression "shall be such as the Congress may from time to time authorize" does not necessarily mean that it can be authorized upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER. The Congress could, if they saw fit, I think. There is another provision following it, passed eight years later, which provides that the officers of the Marine Corps shall be based upon the enlisted force of the Marine Corps, as provided by Congress, anticipating quite clearly that the object of the language and purpose of the language is to divert the question of the size of the Marine Corps to Congress. It is not provided there that they shall be the number of men that Congress shall appropriate for. This is not a legislative bill, but an appropriation bill. I have always had my doubts about the authority.

The CHAIRMAN. This seems to be a somewhat important proposition and, to the Chair, an entirely new proposition. The Chair is very anxious not to make an incorrect ruling upon this.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I suggest to the chairman of the committee that he pass by the paragraphs relating to the Marine Corps and give an opportunity to the Chairman to look up the law?

Mr. BUTLER. Let me have a little——

The CHAIRMAN. The law is here and the rules are here.

Mr. PADGETT. What was it the gentleman from Pennsylvania wanted to do?

Mr. BUTLER. I wanted to have a little talk with the gentleman from Tennessee. Now, I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee, in view of the enormous increase of the appropriation that will be required if we pass that, if it should not be deferred to a later date and reorganize permanently this Marine Corps? Now, I would have no objection to the chairman of the committee making a temporary increase in the Marine Corps to about 50,000 men. In the next paragraph he has authority to do it. If the Chair should hold that this paragraph is in order upon this bill and it should be passed, it means an increase of an enormous number of officers for the Marine Corps, which I do not believe we will need in time of peace.

I do not want to argue that. I have no stroke at the Marine Corps. I care for it as I do for my own child. At the same time, I want the gentleman to understand that this is an increase from $13,000,000 to $78,000,000 for the Marine Corps, as much money, almost, as we appropriated for the Navy in past times.

Mr. PADGETT. This does not increase to that extent.

Mr. BUTLER. I am willing to go in for a temporary increase. This will increase it from $10,000,000 to $12,000,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Not that much.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, yes. It is eight or nine thousand.

Mr. PADGETT. Let the Chair rule on it.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; let the Chair rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. SLOAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska desire to be heard?

Mr. SLOAN. It was a question with me whether the authority lies in that statute. If it does not, it does not authorize them to be increased in this bill. It authorizes them to be increased by Congress, and it is assumed that will be done in an orderly way and not in a way that is not orderly.

The CHAIRMAN. Yet it seems to be a very strange thing that that provision should have been put in the law——

Mr. BUTLER. It is surplusage——

The CHAIRMAN. Unless it was intended to apply to an appropriation bill. It says:

Provided, That hereafter the number of enlisted men in the United States Marine Corps shall be such as the Congress may from time to time determine.

Of course it may be——

Mr. BUTLER. It seems like a repetition or an addition, Mr. Chairman, if you will permit me, of language that need not be there. As the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] has just said, it does not authorize Congress to do what it does not have the right to do. It does not authorize Congress to do something in violation of the rules.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that that language has no meaning whatever unless it was the intent of the Congress at the time it was passed that the number of men in the Marine Corps should be limited by the appropriations made by Congress from time to time. We can limit the number now and the amount of money we appropriate for the Marine Corps. If you do not give it that construction it has no meaning at all, because the Congress that enacted that provision of law certainly knew that future Congresses might change the substantive law affecting the Marine Corps.

Mr. SLOAN. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri if he does not think that if Congress intended that the number of men should depend upon the size of the appropriation Congress would have put it in those words instead of this language?

Mr. ALEXANDER. If I had framed the language I would have done that.

Mr. BUTLER. If it had said, "The number of marines that Congress shall hereafter appropriate for," there would be no doubt about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is going to sustain the point of order.

The Chair will state that probably on an important matter like this some reason ought to be given. The general rules of the House prevent legislation upon an appropriation bill or anything that changes existing law. Here is a proviso in this act of 1908 which would appear upon the surface to undertake to make law, and it does make some sort of law, but it does not seem to be intelligent law. The Chair thinks the safest course is that we rely upon the general rules of the House, in view of the uncertainty of the meaning of the language that is involved in the act of 1908, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Marine Corps is hereby temporarily increased until June 30, 1920, from 26,297 to 50,000, distribution in the various grades to be in the same proportion as is now authorized by law: Provided, That as and when the number of the enlisted personnel of the Marine Corps serving with the American Expeditionary Forces is reduced below the number of 23,703 the temporary enlisted personnel shall be reduced by the difference between 23,703 and the number still serving with the American Expeditionary Forces.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. PADGETT. I wanted to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is why I reserved the point of order. I presume the gentleman wishes to change some of these numbers.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. On line 7, page 16, strike out "26,297" and insert "17,400."

Mr. BUTLER. That will give us the whole temporary force?

Mr. PADGETT. That will give us the whole temporary force. Then below——

Mr. STAFFORD. In line 12——

Mr. PADGETT. I suppose we had better leave that other just as it is, because that is the estimated number that might be in France.

Mr. STAFFORD. How did you arrive at that?

Mr. PADGETT. They have 25,000 in France.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose the number "23,703," which I find in lines 12 and 13, is obtained by deducting 26,297 from 50,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. If you are going to amend the "26,297" to "17,400," why should not that number be increased by inserting the number "32,600"? In the logic of mathematics that would follow.

Mr. PADGETT. That will be all right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 7, strike out "26,297" and insert "17,400" in lieu thereof.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, may I now ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. If this amendment should be adopted and the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin is adopted, changing those figures, the result will be by the passage of this paragraph that we temporarily increase the Marine Corps to 50,000 men, with temporary officers only?

Mr PADGETT. Yes; and the temporary officers are limited to the grade of major.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. PADGETT. In line 12, page 16, strike out "23,703" and insert "32,600."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers a further amendment. There are two amendments pending. The Clerk will report the second.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PADGETT:
On page 16, line 12, strike out "23,703" and insert in lieu thereof "32,600."

The CHAIRMAN. Is it desired by the gentleman from Tennessee that they be put together?

Mr. PADGETT. The other one has been agreed to. I want to come to line 14. In lines 14 and 15 I want to strike out 23,700 and insert 32,700.

Mr. STAFFORD. Thirty-two thousand six hundred.

Mr. PADGETT. On second thought that will not do, for the reason that we are providing that the temporary force shall be 50,000. There are only 25,000 in France now, and that would simply mean that we were increasing it to 42,000 men, because the difference between 25,000 and 32,600 is 7,600, and instead of 50,000 you would only have 42,400. It would be better just to put the first one 17,400, and the other one is based on the number in France.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. I will withdraw the other amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 7, strike out "26,297" and insert "17,400" in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Now I withdraw the other amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I was going to suggest to the chairman of the committee that if he would offer an amendment changing "23,700" to "25,000," the exact number we have in France, and then put 25,000 in line 15, the language would be absolutely correct.

Mr. PADGETT. There are a few in excess over 25,000 in France.

Mr. BUTLER. Make it 26,000.

Mr. PADGETT. We had better make it 25,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman a further amendment to propose?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; in lines 12 and 13 strike out "23,703" and insert "25,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, lines 12 and 13, strike out "23,703" and insert in lieu thereof "25,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman purpose to change the number in lines 14 and 15?

Mr. PADGETT. I do. I propose to make it 25,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, in lines 14 and 15 I move to strike out "23,703" and insert in lieu thereof "25,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, lines 14 and 15, strike out "23,703" and insert in lieu thereof "25,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first word. It is a peculiar pleasure to do anything we can for the marines. The gracious courtesy that has governed their conduct toward American citizens and the gallant chivalry they have exhibited on the battle field are worthy of the best eras and the best efforts of the soldiers and sailors of the Republic in this and all wars. They have treated the question of sending their men home with so much consideration for the wishes, the interests, and the needs of the taxpayers that if there is anything this Congress can do for the marines, within its powers and limitations, I think it ought to do it. I am very glad to have the opportunity to say that.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

All officers comprising the probationary or temporary officers of the Marine Corps and officers of the Marine Corps Reserve on active duty, and permanent second lieutenants holding temporary appointments in higher grades, shall be eligible to fill vacancies hereby created by transfer to the permanent Marine Corps in the grades held by them on the date of transfer in the proportion not to exceed 42 in the grade of captain, 42 in the grade of first lieutenant, and 56 in the grade of second lieutenant. Transfers so made shall be made without regard to age in grade, and if not found qualified in said grades to lower grades after qualification: Provided, That no transfers so made shall be to a higher grade than captain, and all officers so transferred shall establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, under such rules as he may prescribe, the mental, moral, professional, and physical qualifications to perform all the duties of the grades to which transferred: Provided further, That 25 additional marine gunners and 25 quartermaster clerks are hereby authorized.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. My purpose is to inquire whether it is not necessary to reduce the number of officers authorized in this paragraph by reason of our failing to increase the permanent enlisted strength of the Marine Corps?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. I think not. They wanted 200, and the committee reduced the number to 140.

Mr. STAFFORD. They desire 200 officers on the permanent enlisted force for 22,600 men. The House has adhered to the present enlisted strength of 17,400.

Mr. PADGETT. This is not an increase of the authorized number. The law of August 29, 1916, fixes the number they are entitled to in different grades. This is only to allow them to take into the service men from the temporary service who can qualify under the authorizations already allowed. Instead of giving authority to fill it all up, this is to allow a limited number to come in from the temporary force who can qualify. It does not add to the number of officers that are authorized if they had the men to fill them.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the purpose in the last proviso?

Mr. PADGETT. The last proviso does add some clerks, but that is because they are short of the number required for the efficient operation of their guns.

Mr. STAFFORD. It does not relate to the enlisted force of the Marine Corps?

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendments which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 17, page 16, strike out the words "probationary or." In lines 19 and 20, page 16, strike out the words "and permanent second lieutenants holding temporary appointments in higher grades." And in line 6, page 17, change the word "the" to "their." In line 10, page 17, insert after the word "twenty-five" the word "additional."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The 200 officers, as I understood, were for 33,000 marines instead of 26,000; therefore ought this not to be reduced?

Mr. PADGETT. No; they are short of officers under the organization. The number they have in each grade is fixed by law. There is a certain percentage—4 per cent—of enlisted personnel, and this is simply to allow this many temporary officers to come in and qualify. It does not add to the total number of authorized officers. It gives an opportunity for 140 officers that are in the temporary service to qualify and come into the permanent service to fill up the gap that exists there. It does not add to the number in the permanent service.

Mr. McKEOWN. I had an impression that the 200 officers requested were on the theory that the Marine Corps would be 33,000, and your committee has reduced it to 26,000.

Mr. PADGETT. No; it was a question of how much we would take in of the temporary force.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enrolled members of the Naval Reserve Force and of the Marine Corps Reserve, other than commissioned and warrant officers, who have performed active duty during the war, may, upon their own application, be transferred to the regular Navy and Marine Corps, respectively, to serve the unexpired term of their enrollment in such rating or rank as they may be found qualified under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe: Provided, That such transfers may be made not in excess of the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy or Marine Corps: Provided further, That members so transferred shall be entitled to and receive at the time of transfer the same pay, rights, privileges, and allowances in all respects as though regularly discharged and re-enlisted immediately upon expiration of their full four-year enlistment in the regular Navy or Marine Corps.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. Let me state to the gentleman what the purpose of this is. We have enrolled men in the Naval Reserve Force in the Navy and in the Marine Corps who have been serving during the war. When the war ends they go back to inactive duty, but they are in the Naval Reserves. In order to encourage enlistment in the Navy and in the Marine Corps this simply allows a man to count as a part of his four years' enlistment, when he comes in to enlist regularly, the time he has actually served in the war. He counts it as service in the Navy and the Marine Corps instead of in the Reserve Corps. He has been serving in the Navy and the Marine Corps under the designation of reserve. This simply allows him to get the benefit of that as a part of his four years' enlistment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, before the Clerk begins to read, may I ask the chairman of the committee how late he proposes to stay, so that we may answer gentlemen who come here with a similar inquiry?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I have stated to a number of people that if it became necessary I would ask the House to stay as late as 10 o'clock, but we are running along nicely now, and I think that we can get to a point in the bill much earlier than that where we can quit, and be able to finish the bill by to-morrow night.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think the gentleman will be able to finish it to-morrow night.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, I think we can.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman indicate the place in the bill where we might read to and then rise?

Mr. PADGETT. I think if we read along through these items that are not disputed we might go down to the Marine Corps, which is on page 43.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the gentleman does not expect to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning?

Mr. PADGETT. I wanted to.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is asking a very unreasonable thing if he expects us to go to-night to page 43 and then meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. GARNER. There is no contest about any of these items.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman from Texas will examine the bill he will see that we are now considering everything that is new legislation, which demands explanation, and which has not been made in general debate by the chairman or anyone else.

Mr. GARNER. We will be through with the new legislation in two or three pages.

Mr. BUTLER. I want very much to accommodate the gentleman from Tennessee for two reasons: First, he ought to be accommodated, and, second, he is always trying to accommodate somebody else; but I have been sitting here continuously since 11 o'clock this morning, and I am 63 years old.

Mr. PADGETT. So am I.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman ought to indicate some page before that.

Mr. GARNER. We want to get through to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is impossible, with the fight there is on the naval program.

Mr. PADGETT. I think we can.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is indulging in idle dreams.

Mr. GARNER. There is no dispute about a lot of this along here.

Mr. STAFFORD. The amounts carried are thirty and forty million dollars, increased threefold over what it was two years ago.

Mr. BAER. Have we covered the appropriations for submarines yet?

Mr. PADGETT. Submarines are all mixed up with everything else. I suggest that page 39 will be a good place to stop.

The Clerk read as follows:

All enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps having war service and who may hereafter be discharged or who have been discharged from the service since November 11, 1918 (other than a dishonorable discharge), and before the expiration of their full enlistment shall receive, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, an honorable discharge, and shall be furnished with transportation to their homes, with subsistence and transfers en route.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, so as to ask about the words "war service."

Mr. PADGETT. They mean those who have been serving in the Navy during the period of this war.

Mr. McKEOWN. That will cover all persons?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. In connection with the inquiry of the gentleman from Oklahoma, does the gentleman from Tennessee think that what he has said will be in anyway controlling in the application of this bill when it comes to some body who interprets it?

Mr. PADGETT. I think so. It is carrying out the recommendations of the department. They want to have this that way.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am very glad to have the assurance of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not this existing practice and the law?

Mr. PADGETT. No; under existing law a man gets an honorable discharge only if he serves out the full four years; in other words, completes his contract.

If he gets short of the four years he gets an ordinary discharge. There is nothing dishonorable about an ordinary discharge, but the ordinary discharge does not carry with it transportation and it is not an honorable discharge. Now, these boys who entered, many of them, for four years, intending for the war, if they get a discharge they do not get an honorable discharge, but an ordinary discharge. This is to give them an honorable discharge and their transportation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Any enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who since April 7, 1917, and before November 11, 1918, enlisted for the period of four years may, upon his application made to the Secretary of the Navy on or before July 1, 1919, be held and construed to have enlisted for the duration of the war and granted an honorable discharge: Provided, That said enlisted man is otherwise entitled to an honorable discharge.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. BROWNING. I was going to make a motion to amend.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the point of order to see whether we can secure an agreement on the suggestion to be made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] to insert the word "shall" instead of "may."

Mr. PADGETT. There is no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on line 11, page 18, by striking out the word "may" and inserting the word "shall."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 11, strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall."

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was proposed some time ago. I do not think it is worth while to say very much about it. It was the intention of the committee when that passed that this should not give the Secretary of the Navy the privilege of "may," but that they "shall" be discharged.

Mr. PADGETT. The only thing I want to call attention to is that when you put the word "shall" it makes it exceedingly drastic, and by operation of law all four-year men who come in from that time go out with the men who enlisted for the period of the war and you leave the Navy bankrupt of men.

Mr. BROWNING. I want to make it drastic; it is my purpose to make it drastic. If these men want to come back, they can reenlist.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Just a moment, will the gentleman from New Jersey yield?

Mr. BROWNING. I yield.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I want to ascertain why this difference between the Navy and the Marine Corps. Releases from the Marine Corps are comparatively simple. I understand every application of men in that corps must be presented to the Marine Corps headquarters here, but when it comes to some one in the Navy, why, then under a comparatively recent ruling that matter must be handled by the superior officer of the man who asked to be released from the Navy; but in the Marine Corps the only man who can discharge another, unless I have failed to follow these varying changes of orders, is that in the Marine Corps the last appeal is to the headquarters here. I am very glad that is the case. Will the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] give me some information as to how the difference exists between the Navy and the Marine Corps?

Mr. BROWNING. I do not know, in answering the gentleman's question, just what particular difference he has reference to. I only want to say in this instance there seems to have been a misunderstanding with a great many young men who enlisted in the Navy. It was stated on the floor sometime ago that a great many of these young men had enlisted for the period of the war, but when they came to sign their papers it read they should enlist for four years. Now, the object of this amendment is to allow these men who enlisted for the four years to get out of the Navy.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit me to pursue this inquiry?

Mr. PADGETT. We would like to make progress.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am inclined to make progress, but I would like to know something about this particular proposition.

Mr. PADGETT. The difference between the Marine Corps and the Navy is that——

Mr. DUPRÉ. With regard to releases?

Mr. PADGETT. The Marine Corps is like the Army. It is on an Army organization. There they do not have charge of ships and vessels, and a man could be discharged from the Marine Corps without reference to the ship. When a man is on a ship you have to consider what condition it is going to leave the ship in when he is discharged. For instance, if you reduce the number of gunners, the number of machinists, the electricians, or any others of those on a ship, below a certain point, you destroy the efficiency of the ship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have his time extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] has the floor. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New Jersey be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The situation, as I understand, is this: With regard to releases from the War Department, it has been made quite clear—and even the Chief of Staff has finally made it clear—that requests in that regard must be made through the military channels and transmitted to the superior officer of the man who is in the military service. Very good. I have no complaint to make in that regard. With regard to the men who are in the Navy, I understood that previous to the order that issued from the War Department a similar announcement was given from the Navy Department. Is that true? I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. PADGETT. I thought the gentleman was addressing the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING].

Mr. DUPRÉ. I was trying to get information. I do not care from whom I obtain it.

Mr. PADGETT. What was your question? I was reading here and not listening.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I was asking if it had not been true until very recently, and is it not true now, that the only way for one who is in the naval service—I am not talking of the marines, because I have that in reservation—is it not true that the only way one in the naval service can secure release is to make application through his immediate commanding officer?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; he has to make it there.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Very good. And there is nothing to be done through the Bureau of Navigation or by appeal to the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I understand if it is refused by the commanding officer he can have it renewed by the Bureau of Navigation.

Mr. DUPRÉ. That is very good so far. Now, we are coming to the Marine Corps, which was the matter we were discussing. I understand now that if one is in the Marine Corps and seeks to get relief that, not as was the case in the Army, not as was the case in the Navy proper, it is still vested in the major general commandant of the Marine Corps?

Mr. PADGETT. I think it is both ways.

Mr. BROWNING. It is both ways, but the gentleman forgets that there is no such situation in the Marine Corps in their enlistment as to time. They are either enlisted for the war or four years. In this case it seems to be the case of young men who have enlisted in the Navy being fooled.

Mr. PADGETT A man can apply direct to the commandant of the Marine Corps, I understand.

Mr. DUPRÉ. That is what I wanted to bring out. I understand the condition is this: Whenever he is in the Marine Corps it is permissible for him, or somebody else having an interest in him, to present his claim to the Marine Corps for release?

Mr. PADGETT. I so stated. He could present it directly to the commandant.

Mr. DUPRÉ. So, if that is the case, why may it not be done to the honorable Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know why the difference was made. You would have to get that from the Secretary of the Navy. I do not know why he made the difference.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] has expired.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I ask time in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman from Tennessee should find out from the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. Daniels, why this distinction is being made between the men of the Marine Corps and men enlisted in the Navy.

I would like to know why this differentiation exists between the Navy and the Marine Corps in that regard?

Mr. PADGETT. I stated to the gentleman that I did not know why it was; that the Secretary made the difference, but I could not tell the gentleman why he made it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I repeat my inquiry in that regard, and it seems to me that the chairman of the committee, who comes here and asks us to swallow a lot of things that gag a great many of us, should be able to answer a simple question like that. Will the gentleman seek to ascertain the reason?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I will try to find out.

Mr. DUPRÉ. And will the gentleman put it in the RECORD when he finds out?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I will try to put it in the RECORD if I find out.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Well, that does not quite satisfy me. [Laughter.] The gentleman said he would seek to ascertain, and then seek to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. PADGETT. I said I would seek the information and put it in the RECORD if I ascertained it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman put it in the RECORD in that event?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, what was the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. GARNER. To strike out "may" and insert "shall."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. GARNER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 0.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PADGETT: Page 18, line 14, after the word "discharged," insert the words "on his arrival at a home port."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee just what that means?

Mr. PADGETT. It means this: Under the language it says he shall be granted an honorable discharge. Suppose a fellow is on a ship in China or somewhere else. He ought not to be discharged over there. He ought to be discharged when he arrives at a home port.

Mr. BROWNING. But suppose, Mr. Chairman, he is down at Guantanamo Bay or in San Domingo. Has he got to wait until he comes home?

Mr. PADGETT. I think so.

Mr. BROWNING. I am opposed to that.

Mr. PADGETT. I will withdraw it, Mr. Chairman, rather than have any controversy over it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee withdraws the amendment. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do that in order to find out about the application for a discharge. I would like to inquire of the chairman whether or not under this language the application must be made directly to the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. It should be addressed to him, but it would come through military channels. It would be forwarded.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It does not say anything about that. But if you go to the Secretary of the Navy and ask to have a man discharged he will tell you that his application must be made to his commanding officer.

Mr. BROWNING. The gentleman will understand that there are a whole lot of rules that we do not put into the law. The Secretary of the Navy can make his own rules. There is no trouble about that.

Mr. DUPRÉ. He will make his rules to suit himself.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. You say the application will be made to the commanding officer, but it will be forwarded to the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. He will make his rules and regulations for carrying it out.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Under this clause that we are now on, a man who is not entitled to honorable discharge would not get any kind of a discharge until the four years are up, would he?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Where is the language authorizing that?

Mr. PADGETT. This simply provides that he shall be held and construed to have enlisted for the duration of the war, and will be granted an honorable discharge, provided he is entitled to an honorable discharge.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The way the bill is drawn, though, does not the question go not only to his honorable discharge, but to the question that he is held to have enlisted only for the duration of the war?

Mr. PADGETT. No. He is held to have enlisted for the war, and he would be given an honorable discharge, or an ordinary discharge, or a dishonorable discharge; but this gives him an honorable discharge if he would be entitled to it otherwise.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. So it is the intention of the committee to draw this bill so that, irrespective of whether he is entitled to an honorable discharge, he is held to have enlisted only for the duration of the war?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Suppose the term of enlistment of a man in the Navy expires when he is out at sea. Just what happens?

Mr. PADGETT. He is always brought home and discharged here.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. So there will be no trouble about this then?

Mr. PADGETT. None at all. The only reason I offered it was because they said they thought it would clear up the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps who enlisted for the period of the war may, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, extend such enlistment for a period of one, two, three, or four full years and shall be entitled to and receive the same rights, privileges, pay, and allowances in all respects as though regularly discharged and reenlisted immediately upon expiration of a full four-year enlistment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on this important paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. The purpose of it is this: Here is a man in the Navy or Marine Corps who enlisted for the period of the war. He served, say, a year and six months, and he wants to get into the Navy or the Marine Corps permanently. This is to allow him to extend his enlistment so as to make it the full term of four years, counting the time that he served under this temporary enlistment as a part of his full enlistment. It is along the same lines as the preceding paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I read it—though I do not read it with the full knowledge that the chairman of the committee has—I should think this really provides for the extension of enlistments for one year, two years, three years, or four years, as the enlisted seamen may elect.

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly; but it says that he shall have the same benefits as if he had reenlisted upon the expiration of a full four-year term. Now he has to serve a four-year term in order to get the benefit of a four-year term; but during the war a man may have served two years, and he would extend his time for two years to make up a full four-year term. Another man enlisted for three years. He would extend it, adding to what he had already served enough to make it a four-year term.

Mr. STAFFORD. What benefit will he receive, if this paragraph is agreed to, by an extension of his term of enlistment?

Mr. PADGETT. He would get the benefit that the two services would be added together, and at the expiration of the four years the two together would be counted as a full term.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then this does not give him any benefit or increased pay by reason of enlistment.

Mr. PADGETT. Not when he now reenlists; but if at the expiration of the four years he reenlists he would get the benefit provided on a second enlistment.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is certain that he will not receive any benefits by reason of reenlistment for this extended period when it does not exceed the four-year period?

Mr. PADGETT. We made that inquiry, and it was so stated.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS: Page 18, line 23, after the word "enlistment," insert as a new paragraph the following:

"In time of war or national emergency boards for the selection of officers of the Naval Reserve Force of and above the rank of lieutenant commander for promotion to the next higher grade or rank as now authorized by law shall be composed of not less than five officers of the Navy, senior in rank to the officers to be selected for promotion."

Mr. PADGETT. I reserve a point of order for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish the gentleman would reserve it long enough to permit me to state my case.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. My amendment is in the precise language of a recommendation made by Secretary Daniels to the House of Representatives, and by the Speaker transmitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs on, I think, the 11th of January, 1919. There are 990 Naval Reserve lieutenant commanders. Many of these men have been in the naval service since the outbreak of the war. Many of them have rendered extremely valuable service. A former Secretary of the Navy, now a Senator elect of the United States, is one of the 990. Not a single reserve lieutenant commander has been promoted to the rank of commander during the war.

The naval appropriation act for the current year, approved July 1, 1918, contains the following paragraph:

No officer of any class of the Naval Reserve force shall, in time of peace, be promoted above the grade of lieutenant commander, but in time of war or other national emergency officers of the Naval Reserve force of and above the rank of lieutenant commander in active service shall be eligible for selection for promotion to the next higher grade or rank by the same board of officers that select officers of the United States Navy for promotion to such higher ranks and grades, under the same rules and regulations as apply to the selection for promotion of officers of the United States Navy.

The Secretary of the Navy, in spite of that authorization in the naval appropriation act, has never taken advantage of the opportunity and has never caused to be examined for promotion a single Naval Reserve lieutenant commander. A selection board for the regular Navy met in July, 1918, but no reserve officers were considered for promotion. In August, 1918, the Bureau of Navigation notified the reserve officers by circular letter that selection boards for reserve officers of the rank of lieutenant commander would meet in January, 1919. In December, 1918, reserve lieutenant commanders were invited to submit any information which should be considered with reference to their promotion.

A selection board met last month and selected officers for the regular Navy, but the Secretary of the Navy declined to sign an order which would authorize the board to consider reserve officers.

Secretary Daniels has stated that the reason which led him to decline to allow that board to pass upon the promotion of reserve lieutenant commanders was that the board for promotion in the regular Navy which was made up of nine admirals was so very much overworked in considering regular Navy promotions that it had no time or opportunity to pass upon reserve promotions. And therefore the Secretary of the Navy in transmitting the exact language that I have just offered wrote to the Speaker of the House of Representatives as follows:

Attention is respectfully invited to the fact that the law quoted requires that the board for selection of officers for promotion in the Naval Reserve Force must be the same board of officers that selects officers of the regular Navy for promotion. The regular Navy selection board is required by law to be composed of nine rear admirals. This board is charged with the selection of officers for promotion in the higher grades of both the regular Navy and the Coast Guard.

The addition to the duties of the board of selection for promotion of officers of the higher grades in the Naval Reserve Force therefore adds an almost overwhelming amount of extra work on the board. All members of the regular board, as is natural and unavoidable, fill high administrative and executive positions and commands of the greatest importance. This addition to their duties of selection in the Naval Reserve Force in its practical working out makes it impracticable, if not impossible, for the members of the board to properly perform their regular duties, and under existing conditions will tend to threaten the efficiency of the Navy as a whole.

There is, therefore, inclosed herewith a proposed draft of a bill to authorize the appointment of a separate board for the selection of officers for promotion in the Naval Reserve Force; and in view of the patent urgency of this measure, as above set forth, it is requested that same be enacted, if practicable, before the close of the present session of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I have no information as to the reasons which led the committee to disregard the urgent recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy. Clearly, these lieutenant commanders of the reserve force, 1,000 in number, many of whom have been in the Navy and have done splendid service for a year and a half or two years, should be given an opportunity at least to present their case for promotion. There is not a single case of promotion up to this time. My amendment is in the words of the Secretary of the Navy, and creates another instrumentality which would allow meritorious lieutenant commanders of the reserve force to be promoted after proper hearing and investigation. I hope that the chairman of the committee will be induced to withdraw his reservation of a point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the law provides a remedy now—the same remedy provided for regular officers—nine admirals, six of whom must agree, but this is a provision to change it and substitute a different board of five officers, who instead of admirals shall be officers just above the grade of captain. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The act of April 16, 1918 (Public, No. 129), granting, under certain conditions, to every commissioned officer of the Army the right to quarters in kind for their dependents, or the authorized commutation therefor, including the allowances for heat and light, shall hereafter be construed to apply to officers of the Navy and Marine Corps only who are serving in the field as part of the American Expeditionary Forces under the jurisdiction of the War Department.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. Do these men get this allowance now?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What is the necessity for the legislation?

Mr. PADGETT. This is the limitation upon the allowances under that act of October 6, I think it was, when there was a provision put in the law allowing commutation of quarters for officers who were serving, engaged in the war, and the Comptroller of the Treasury held that the Marine Corps and the Navy were entitled to the benefit of it. An officer who is serving at sea gets 10 per cent additional pay instead of commutation of quarters. Under that law he is getting the 10 per cent for sea service, and then he is getting the commutation of quarters in addition. This applies generally to the officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps and provides that it shall be cut down to those who are serving in the field in foreign service and not the men who were serving at sea here in the United States or across the waters back and forth. This provision will save about $11,000,000, which otherwise under existing law would have to be paid in the way of commutation of quarters.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, it would save the $11,000,000 if the men are not kept over there.

Mr. PADGETT. That is what the estimate is; that the service that will be performed and the number of officers who will get it will save about $11,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. If they are kept in France.

Mr. PADGETT. No. Under existing law they get it whether they are in France or not in France.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman state that in time of peace the Marine Corps and the Navy officers are serving with the War Department?

Mr. PADGETT. No; the marines are serving with the War Department over there, and the Navy is not serving with the War Department.

Mr. WALSH. It provides that it shall hereafter be construed to apply to officers of the Navy and Marine Corps who are serving in the field as part of the American Expeditionary Forces under the jurisdiction of the War Department.

Mr. PADGETT. Those are the only ones who would get it hereafter, which comprise a very limited number, whereas all of them are getting it now.

Mr. WALSH. Of course they are getting it now because of this former act and because there is a war.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. This provides that that act shall be construed to apply to this limited number and not to the whole of them.

Mr. WALSH. It must be rather a high limit if there is a saving of $11,000,000.

Mr. PADGETT. It is. When you come to pay commutation of quarters for rooms and heat and light, it amounts to a heap of money.

Mr. WALSH. Does it embrace within its provisions any of the naval aviation force?

Mr. PADGETT. It includes everyone who is with the Navy who gets the benefit of it.

Mr. WALSH. I assume that it includes those that were included within it.

Mr. GARNER. Under that act everybody got the benefit of quarters and 10 per cent while at sea. Under this provision only those in France will get the benefit of it. That is the difference.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Texas has stated it very concisely and briefly, but I should like to know if this includes within its provisions officers of the naval aviation force who are in the Expeditionary Forces?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; the Navy does not separate officers. They are detailed to the aviation duty. The man may be serving in aviation to-day and be transferred to some other duty to-morrow or next month.

Mr. WALSH. Then, as I understand the gentleman, if this is permitted to become a law, it will save $11,000,000 for the reasons stated by the gentleman, supplemented by the reasons stated by the gentleman from Texas, but it will only constitute that saving in the event that these officers are kept abroad as part of the Expeditionary Forces. There will not be any Expeditionary Force after they come home.

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. WALSH. There will not be any pay; it will not be any saving.

Mr. PADGETT. This is putting a limit during the fiscal year when the Navy is operating, and it saves it when he is here at home.

Mr. GARNER. It does not save anything while he is in France, but when he comes from France he can not have the 10 per cent and commutation both. There is the difference.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GARNER. That is the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. WALSH. Those who are serving in the field as part of the American Expeditionary Force.

Mr. GARNER. That is the exception. The general law gives them, according to the Comptroller of the Treasury, and allows them 10 per cent while on sea duty, and also an allowance for commutation and quarters while on sea duty. They get both. This only makes exception of allowance and commutation to those people who are with the Expeditionary Force in France. None will get it when they come from France except those on sea duty.

Mr. WALSH. When they come from France, the American Expeditionary Forces, what will the saving be by reason of not having to pay this?

Mr. PADGETT. They would not get any then.

Mr. WALSH. Then there will be a further saving?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; they will save still more.

Mr. WALSH. How much?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The rates of pay prescribed in section 15 of an act entitled "An act to temporarily increase the commissioned and warrant and enlisted strength of the Navy and Marine Corps, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1917, are hereby made the permanent rates of pay of the enlisted men of the Navy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the whole thing about it is this: Sometime last year we passed the act of May 22 providing that during the war the pay of the Navy should be added to by $15 a month to the fellow who got up to $21 a month. I have the act here and I will read it:

That commencing June 1, 1917, and continuing until not later than six months after the termination of the present war, all enlisted men of the Navy of the United States in active service whose base pay does not exceed $21 per month shall receive an increase of $15 per month; those whose base pay is over $21 and does not exceed $24 a month, an increase of $12 per month; those whose base pay is over $24 and less than $45 per month, an increase of $8 per month; and those whose base pay is $45 or more per month, an increase of $60 per annum: Provided——

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the substantive part of it.

Mr. PADGETT. This simply makes it permanent pay of the Navy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under existing law, which the gentleman has just read, the pay will continue for at least six months after the termination of the war?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. That will be well into the next fiscal year. The seamen now enlisted in the service will receive those rates of pay. If we grant this increase, a permanent increase, it will naturally affect the policy of the War Department. I think it is far better, in view of the fact that their pay is secure for nearly a year hence, when Congress will be in possession of full information as to what should be the permanent pay of the enlisted men in the Army and also the seamen in the Navy, that it should be deferred, and therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Before the gentleman makes the point of order I want to say I do not believe that if you make the point of order, and that remains the pay, you can get men to enlist in the Navy at the present pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why, the present pay is that which is now prescribed by law.

Mr. PADGETT. Here a man comes along and enlists for four years, and if his pay will drop down $15 in three or four months from now he will not enlist.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me, please?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. The point of order has been sustained.

Mr. BUTLER. This is talking after the thing has happened.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. We all want to insist on young men who belong to us and the people we represent coming out of this Navy. But we must have other men to take their places, as the Chairman has said to-day. We will not, in my judgment, be able to enlist these men to take the places of the young men we are now endeavoring to have released from the service unless we increase this pay.

Mr. PADGETT. They are turning them out by the wholesale, and you are going to have a barren Navy.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman realizes——

Mr. BUTLER. I know it will cost a good deal of money.

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). It prescribes virtually the pay of the Army, and yet the gentleman has not conferred with the Committee on Military Affairs at all as to what the pay should be. For the present I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order two or three times. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 1 of the act entitled "An act to increase the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy," approved December 20, 1917, is hereby amended so as to read as follows: That hereafter there shall be allowed at the United States Naval Academy five midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, Delegate in Congress, and Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, and five for the District of Columbia, 15 appointed each year at large, and 100 appointed annually from enlisted men of the Navy, as now authorized by law.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order. What is the necessity for this authorization?

Mr. PADGETT. Just a question of fairness. Under existing law each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress is entitled to five midshipmen at the Naval Academy. Porto Rico is entitled to only one, and the District of Columbia to two. It occurred to us that it was entirely fair that the District of Columbia, that has as many people as any congressional district, or more, should have as much representation as a congressional district, and Porto Rico should have as much representation as Hawaii or Alaska or the others. And to that extent it changes existing law.

Mr. BUTLER. Just for the two places?

Mr. PADGETT. That is all. It gives the District of Columbia five instead of two; it gives Porto Rico five instead of one, and puts them on an equality with the congressional districts of the country.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] permit me to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall be delighted.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Did I understand the gentleman to say that each congressional district was entitled to have five appointees?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUPRÉ. How are they prorated?

Mr. PADGETT. Whenever you have a vacancy you have the right to fill it. If you have five vacancies you appoint them all at once, and if you have one you just appoint for that one. You have to keep five there all the time.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I would like to know if there is any sort of pro rata in the way of districts whereby this matter is handled?

Mr. PADGETT. None at all. Whenever you have a vacancy you have a right to make an appointment.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Did I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to say that the practice is that he may withhold his appointment and then throw five at a time on Admiral Eberle, or on the new superintendent?

Mr. PADGETT. Admiral Scales.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Are you going to throw five at Admiral Scales at one time?

Mr. PADGETT. I fill them as they occur.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I do that, too, but I would like to know how the thing is worked, if the gentleman has time to explain.

Mr. PADGETT. Whenever there is a vacancy you make an appointment. If you would appoint five at once, and none of them died, resigned, or dropped out, you would not have another appointment until they graduated.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am very glad to find out how you are advised about these vacancies.

Mr. PADGETT. I always fill mine, and I would advise you to fill yours.

Mr. DUPRÉ. How is a Member of Congress advised of these five vacancies?

Mr. PADGETT. As they happen he gets notice from the Bureau of Navigation. They send him a letter telling him of the vacancy, and send him a nomination blank on which to nominate the young man whom he wishes to appoint.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Calvin Willard Gilfillan is hereby authorized and permitted to take the examination for the Naval Academy in February, 1919, and, on satisfactorily passing the examination and being otherwise qualified, to enter the academy at the usual time in 1919.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. This is rather an unusual provision.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; it is a rather unusual case. I will explain the circumstances.

Up until last year, some time in 1918, the law was to the effect that in the case of nominations to Annapolis by Members of Congress—Senators and Representatives—candidates must be not less than 16 years nor more than 20 at the date of taking their examination. Now, then, they were holding two examinations a year, the first one in February and the second one in April, about the third week in April, somewhere about the 20th. Last May, I think it was, we passed an act changing the law, providing that the candidates must be not less than 16 years old nor more than 20 on the 1st day of April of the year in which they are to enter the academy, fixing the time at a definite date.

At the time of the passage of that act this young man had been nominated to Annapolis; he had gone to a preparatory school, and was attending a preparatory school in order to enter. If the law had not been changed he could take the February examination and would be within the prescribed age, but as the date was changed from the time of taking the examination to a fixed date he was 15 days too old on the 1st of April, so that had the law not been changed after his nomination he could have taken the examination in February and would have been within the age limit. But the law being changed, making it the 20th day of April, he became 20 years of age about the 15th or 16th of March, so that he became 15 days too old by virtue of this change of law after he had been nominated, when he was preparing to take the examination and expecting to take it. There is only one case, and none other can arise under the law.

Mr. WALSH. Where is he from?

Mr. PADGETT. From the State of Texas. He was nominated by Mr. McLEMORE.

Mr. WALSH. When will he take the examination?

Mr. PADGETT. This coming February.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says this is the only case. When this special act was under consideration, as the gentleman will recall, on its first presentation I pointed out the very condition which has arisen.

Mr. PADGETT. I changed it to a later date.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the second time it was called to the attention of the gentleman I stated that it would affect other young men, who would be deprived by reason of age from availing of the opportunity of taking the examination if they reached the required age on the second Tuesday of February.

Mr. PADGETT. It can not occur again.

Mr. STAFFORD. There may be many others of these young men similarly situated.

Mr. GARNER. Undoubtedly if there were many others Members of Congress would know about it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Perhaps Members of Congress would say to their constituents, writing to them about it, that the law had been changed, and that they are barred.

Mr. WALSH. I recall having made such a statement in my correspondence.

Mr. STAFFORD. It would bar them.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not see how it could.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think this is the proper language to accomplish what he seeks to do for this young man from Texas?

Mr. PADGETT. I think so. I submitted it to the Secretary of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I still further reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PADGETT. I submitted it to the Secretary of the Navy, and he replied that he had no objection to it and approved the language.

Mr. WALSH. Well, there is only one gentleman of that name in the United States, and possibly that is right. What is meant by the language on page 20, line 1, "on satisfactory passing the examination"?

Mr. PADGETT. He must pass the examination, just as anyone else has to do.

Mr. WALSH. Is there any such thing as an unsatisfactory passage of the examination?

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman used the wrong word. It should be "satisfactorily."

Mr. WALSH. The word ought to be "satisfactorily," but I can not understand why you say "satisfactory passing the examination" if he passes it.

Mr. BARKLEY. He may pass the literary examination, and he might be found deficient on the physical examination.

Mr. PADGETT. The word "satisfactory" is perhaps surplus there, but it does not change anything.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts insist on his point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I am inclined to withdraw the point of order; but I think if the gentleman thinks this is the only case he is mistaken, because I have no doubt many Members have had young men write them who have been nominated or wanted to be nominated and prepare for this examination. Somehow or other this young man from Texas is the only one who has had his case brought to the attention of the Naval Affairs Committee, and we are going to legislate him into the Naval Academy, because that is what it amounts to.

Mr. PADGETT. This young man had been nominated and his nomination had been approved, and he had received papers from the Bureau of Navigation permitting him to take the examination this coming February.

Mr. WALSH. Before the law was passed?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; before the law was passed; and then he found himself 15 days too old.

Mr. GARNER. He had a good case. The date in this provision ought to be changed from February to April, because you are not going to pass this law in time for the February examination.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I do not know. The Secretary of the Interior went ahead with some miners recently, and entered into some moral obligations in anticipation of the passage of a law. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. There is a difference in the print of the bill. In the bill that I have before me the word in line 1, page 20, is "satisfactorily." In the other print it is "satisfactory." I move to strike out the word "satisfactory" and substitute the word "satisfactorily."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 1, strike out the word "satisfactory" and insert "satisfactorily."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out in line 1, page 20, the word "February" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "April." This bill will not become a law so that this boy can take this examination in February.

Mr. PADGETT. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 1, strike out the word "February" and insert in lieu thereof the word "April."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the amendment. Of course, we are given to understand that when the ship of state makes its voyage from the shores of sunny France back to the United States, it will very shortly thereafter turn around and hie itself again to foreign shores. Now, if we change this to April, the Executive who has to sign the act may be abroad, and the courier who may be sent abroad with the necessary papers and fountain pens for the signature to be affixed may not get there until after the date of the examination. As long as you have made an exception, why not give this young man from Texas a little further time and set the date of his examination at July 4?

Mr. PADGETT. This bill must become a law before the 4th of March or it will not become a law at all.

Mr. GARNER. July 4 would undoubtedly be in keeping with the boy's patriotism.

Mr. WALSH. And it would be a monument to the patriotism and industry of the gentleman who got the paragraph inserted into the naval bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment on my own responsibility. This is not a committee amendment, but it is a matter that was sent down to me within the last day or two. I have not had an opportunity to submit it to the committee. I will make an explanation of it after it is read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, after line 3, insert:

"That hereafter chief machinists, when their total length of service as machinists, warrant machinists, and chief machinists is equal to or more than 12 years, and chief pay clerks, when their total active service as paymasters' clerks, pay clerks, and chief pay clerks, is equal to or more than 12 years, and chief pharmacists, when their total length of service as pharmacists and chief pharmacists is equal to or more than 12 years, shall receive the pay and allowances of a lieutenant (junior grade), and when their total active service is equal to or more than 18 years they shall receive the pay and allowances of a lieutenant."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. PADGETT. I think it was in the act of August 29, 1916, that we provided that warrant officers should receive, after 12 years, the pay of a lieutenant, junior grade, and after 18 years the pay of a lieutenant, the service to be from the date of commission. It happens that in the case of chief machinists, chief pay clerks, and pharmacists, they were not given commissioned grades until a number of years after other warrant officers were given them, so that we have some warrant officers who are given this pay 12 years from date of commission and 18 years from date of commission, while in these ranks men who have been serving 26 years will still have to serve two more years before they get it, because this commissioned rank was not created until later. A gentleman from Pennsylvania came in to see me the other day who has been serving 26 years. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] was present.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. This man has been serving 26 years.

Mr. PADGETT. And he would have to serve two more years before he would get it, because the existing law provides that it shall be 12 years from the date of commission. These ratings were provided for about six years after it had provided for other ratings, and it discriminated against the three ratings in the warrant ranks.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this subject of granting consideration to men by reason of back service, and giving a commission, has been up here several times from the Naval Affairs Committee. I am informed by a member of the committee that this matter has never been submitted to the full committee.

Mr. PADGETT. I so stated as fully as I could.

Mr. BUTLER. But the committee has talked about it.

Mr. PADGETT. We reported two years ago a provision which we thought covered the whole matter, but by making it read "date of commission" instead of "date of warrant" it cuts out the long-term men who had been serving for years before the commission rank was created. The men who come in in other ratings who had commissions granted in these ratings six years before, got the benefit of this pay although they have served years less than these men.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall last year the gentleman reported a bill providing for that kind of service, and now he is bringing in an amendment that has not received the consideration of the full committee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE AND ORDNANCE STORES: For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ordnance material; for the armament of ships; for fuel, material, and labor to be used in the general work of the Ordnance Department; for furniture at naval ammunition depots, torpedo stations, naval ordnance plants, and proving grounds; for necessary improvements at and maintenance of proving grounds, powder factory, torpedo stations, gun factory, ammunition depots, and naval ordnance plants, and for target practice; for the maintenance, repair, or operation of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes at naval ammunition depots, naval proving grounds, naval ordnance plants, and naval torpedo stations, and for the pay of chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and naval ammunition depots: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, watchmen, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, naval ordnance plants, and naval ammunition depots for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, shall not exceed $2,000,000; in all, $30,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. What is the gentleman's point of order? This is the regular appropriation for the work of the Bureau of Ordnance; there is nothing new in it and no change of language or purpose; it is the working appropriation of the Bureau of Ordnance.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman says there is nothing new in it. Does the existing law contain the language "naval ordnance plants"?

Mr. PADGETT. No; that is the change of a word. The present language is "an armor and projectile plant." That is a building being built at Charleston, W. Va. It is just a change of name to ordnance plants from armor and projectile plants. It is a name better suited to it.

Mr. WALSH. I notice here it says "for the maintenance, repair, or operation of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles to be used only for official purposes in the naval ammunition depots, naval proving grounds, naval ordnance plants, and naval torpedo stations." Is there any regulation or pronunciamento on the part of the naval department as to what constitutes "official purposes" for the use of automobiles which are bought by the score and operated by men in the service?

Mr. PADGETT. Only by men in the service when engaged in the work——

Mr. WALSH. Of riding in them.

Mr. PADGETT. On official business. For instance, in the navy yards, going from one place to another on official business and not social.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order and move to strike out the last word. I would like to get the gentleman's views on that phase of the question. He states that in using the automobiles they do not use them socially. Does the gentleman think that the use of a Government automobile by a naval officer, driven by an enlisted man or chauffeur in the service, attending theaters, dinner parties, and dances after hours, is making use of that machine for official purposes?

Mr. PADGETT. I think not.

Mr. WALSH. I am sure that such a practice does not meet with the approval of the chairman of this committee.

Mr. PADGETT. It does not, and I have not heard of anything of that kind in the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. Nor has the gentleman observed it?

Mr. PADGETT. No; and the Secretary has issued orders prescribing that they must be used strictly for official purposes and that a violation of them would subject the offender to court-martial.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but, of course, it is a fact that the Navy automobiles are not labeled with large letters in the manner of those used by the War Department.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that they are lettered with letters an inch and a half in size.

Mr. BUTLER. I thought they were 4 inches.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman must have been using his long-distance glasses if he saw letters 4 inches high.

Mr. PADGETT. The committee understood that they were all marked in that way.

Mr. WALSH. Sometimes it is difficult to tell, where a machine is not marked, and you see it driven by a naval officer—operated by apparently a man in the naval service—whether it is the property of the Government or not.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that all of the machines belonging to the Government in possession of the Navy are marked in large letters. A great many naval officers own their own machines and ride in them.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman seen any of those machines about Washington with Navy marks upon them?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not looked; I do not know.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman, I believe, is shortsighted.

Mr. PADGETT. I have not seen them; I do not know.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad, touching upon this subject covered in this paragraph, that the Secretary of the Navy, or the authorities having these machines in charge, has issued strict orders that they shall be used only for official purposes, because we all know that in other branches of the service these machines are not being used upon official business only, and are being used for pleasure, and that they are being used in ways that ought not to get the approval of those authorities having the machines in their custody and control.

Mr. PADGETT. Permit me to read to the gentleman the part of an official order signed by the Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Acting Secretary of War:

> Noncompliance with these instructions shall be regarded as disobedience of orders and a misuse and application of Government property. The department further directs that immediate steps be taken to place the following legend in appropriate letters on both front doors of each Government-owned car, letters to be in a contrasting color to the car color and not less than 1½ inches high:
>
> "This car is used for official Government business only."
> The department, in bringing this letter to the notice of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, which has cognizance of the purchase and operation of the motor vehicles, has directed that suitable steps be taken to see that this order is carefully and fully observed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. The appropriation for ordnance and ordnance stores as recommended by the committee is $30,000,000, in all $522,000 less than that carried in last year's bill.

Mr. PADGETT. There was a deficiency of $11,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the deficiency of $11,000,000, making it $11,000,000 less for the coming fiscal year than in war times. All through this bill the appropriations for the fiscal year are comparable with and approach the appropriations carried in the last naval appropriation bill, and they are usually three and four times the amount of the appropriations that were provided in the bill of the year before, when we were on a peace basis. In this item two years ago we appropriated $6,204,000. There may have been some deficiency appropriation, but that in large numbers was the amount carried during peace times. We are carrying throughout this bill now virtually the appropriations which were carried when we were at war. I had thought that if in anything we had stored up property as a result of preparedness during the year and six months we were at war, it was in ordnance and ordnance stores.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, this is not for the shooting part of it. This is the operating part, the maintenance, the upkeep of the ships.

Mr. STAFFORD. The very first sentence in the paragraph provides for procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ordnance material.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will read a part of a letter. I asked the Secretary about it. The letter says:

> Although in my hearings I stated it was the intention of the department during the next fiscal year to keep in full commission about 16 battleships from the South Carolina down, yet there will be ordnance work in the way of labor and materials required on 32 battleships. It is contemplated that this appropriation will have to care for the upkeep in ordnance of 150 destroyers, 23 cruisers, 8 armored cruisers, 32 battleships, 37 gunboats, 87 submarines, 5 transports, 50 subchasers.

The item of labor alone that was estimated in the various navy yards in working on the production of guns and gun carriages, and so forth, was estimated by the bureau chiefs at $30,000,000. They submitted an estimate of $53,000,000, but the committee has reduced it to $30,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Originally they had $75,000,000 in the estimates.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand; but I am talking about the revised estimates.

Mr. STAFFORD. That estimate was predicated upon continuing in war.

Mr. PADGETT. Talking about conditions before the war, we have three or four times as many ships to take care of and repair and upkeep in ordnance and ordnance materials and supplies. This is not for powder.

Mr. STAFFORD. This appropriation and its growth only exemplifies what we may expect if we are going to pursue the extravagant policy as recommended by the committee, true, with a string attached to it, whereby it has been estimated that in 1924 this country will be burdened with a charge of $750,000,000 for the maintenance of that program.

Why, if we continue on this policy, Mr. Chairman, there will be such a burden upon the present generation that they will not be able to shake off the yoke. We talked of going into this war for the purpose of civilization, and yet, by reason of this heavy load upon the shoulders of humanity which you are proposing in this bill, you are loading down humanity so they are going to quake until some time there may be such a protest that they will sweep everything before them. Talk about this great program in time of peace? We went into the war in order to escape from the burdens of the armaments of European countries, and now, when we thought there was a ray of sunshine and we would be relieved of those great burdens here in the territory of the United States, isolated as we are and protected as we are from foreign assaults, we have taken upon us the yoke of militarism from which the peoples of the Old World have tried to free themselves for the last half century. That is the message of this bill.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment—page 21, line 2, strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$1,000,000" and strike out "$30,000,000" and insert "$29,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 2, strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$1,000,000" and strike out "$30,000,000" and insert "$29,000,000."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, before I discuss this I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if this $2,000,000 item does not cover the laboratory of the gas experimental station? Where is that located?

Mr. PADGETT. No; that does not relate to that at all. This is ordnance, for pay of clerks——

Mr. WINGO. No; pay of chemists.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; in connection with the production and analysis of powder——

Mr. WINGO. But where is that laboratory?

Mr. PADGETT. We have not any. Those are the yards.

Mr. WINGO. Where in the gentleman's bill does he take care of the experimental gas station?

Mr. PADGETT. There is nothing in here about the experimental gas station.

Mr. WINGO. The Navy had one and the initial appropriation for it when established was $200,000, so I was informed. You have a plant that was down east of here; where is it and how do you carry it in this bill, in what item?

Mr. PADGETT. We have an experimental station down at Annapolis, with an appropriation of $160,000, I think it is, that is under the Bureau of Steam Engineering, which comes in a little later on.

Mr. WINGO. Well, it is more than that. Here is what I am trying to get at. The Navy has a station where they are investigating explosives and gases for the Navy. That is comparable to the experimental station out here at the university that was taken from the Bureau of Mines and turned over to the Army. That is the kind of plant I am trying to locate in the gentleman's bill.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know of any particular place of that kind.

Mr. WINGO. Well, the gentleman will remember——

Mr. PADGETT. There was an appropriation several years ago for the erection of a large experimental station which cost about a million and a half or two million dollars.

Mr. WINGO. As I now recollect, about the time we went into the war the Appropriations Committee included an item of $200,000 for this station, for the purchase of land and starting an experimental station on the same line of work that they are doing at the university. Now, I may be misinformed——

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know.

Mr. WINGO. I looked the matter up——

Mr. PADGETT. This $2,000,000 is to pay for the clerical force in all of these yards and naval stations and could not be reduced. It is not an additional appropriation.

Mr. WINGO. I will state to the gentleman, while I am on this subject—I will withdraw my amendment—that, while I have raised the question, I will give the gentleman what I had in mind, then possibly he can locate the provision in the bill.

I have been informed that this is the situation. A short time before we went into the war we had a fine gas experimental station out here at the university that they called the University Experiment Station, under the control of the Bureau of Mines. It seems that the gentlemen in charge of the Bureau of Mines were men of vision, and they came to the conclusion that it would be something remarkable if we kept out of the war. So six months before we went into the war they commenced experimenting in gases, and they conducted some very successful experiments. And finally, after they had perfected and made such wonderful progress, the President made an order that took that gas experimental station out of the hands of the Bureau of Mines and vested it in the Gas Division of the Army, with Gen. Sibert at the head.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know of anything of that kind.

Mr. WINGO. I understand that recently the Army—and I have not had a chance to investigate it since I received this information, but I am going to do it—wanted to do away with this plant out here, and they proposed dismantling it, and asked for an appropriation to establish a new station, just as I thought, from the information that I received, the Navy had asked.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know of any the Navy had.

Mr. WINGO. I am trying to investigate this matter, and when the military bill comes up I am going to oppose the establishment of a new plant. I am going to be in favor of turning back that work to the Bureau of Mines, for this reason: If you have a separate plant for the Navy and a separate plant for the Army, doing the same kind of work, you will necessarily restrict these experiments to two different lines, or, rather, to one line, and that will be along military lines—military explosives and gases—but if you maintain the old station you had and conduct the old experiments that were being carried on, which were not only of value from a military standpoint but from a scientific standpoint, this Government, pursuing its policy, will certainly maintain an experimental station for scientific purposes.

I thought it would be the part of economy if you had one station that conducted the experiments with these gases and explosives that could do the investigating not only for scientific but for military purposes; and I am opposed to turning it over to the Army, opposed to turning the matter over to the Navy, because you will have an extravagant expenditure of money that will be limited to only one branch of the investigation. Those experiments carried on out there—as you know, who have investigated it, and those who have not if you will take the time to investigate it—by that establishment won the admiration of the scientific world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. They got the cooperation of the leading scientists and men in the laboratories of the leading universities of the United States, and they rendered a great service to humanity, and during that six months they perfected and brought the gases that were used by our Army up to a high state of perfection. And that experiment station is entitled to all the credit for the work that was done, because their plant and their experiments were taken over after they had performed the labor and achieved the success. So the gas division was given a perfected plant with plans all perfected. I think it ought to be turned back to the same management.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman know it has been recommended that the Chemical Warfare Service be abolished in the Army, and that only an appropriation for the experimenting and testing of such gases as that is going to be asked for by the Army?

Mr. WINGO. They proposed to abolish this out here, and then go and buy land and establish a new experimental station, which would be the height of folly. I have been told that when they got ready to dismantle out here they overlooked the fact that they did not own the land and were going to sell the land there. I do not know what authority they had to sell it, anyway. As a matter of fact, the gas division ought to be abolished. They proposed to take out to the ocean and dump all the TNT. One Army officer said that that would be a useless waste; that that stuff could be utilized in this country for domestic operations.

Finally they abandoned that proposition. If you turn this over to the Army they will look at it from a military standpoint. I say this not with any reflection upon the Army officers. Their training has been such that they do not look at it from the commercial or scientific standpoint, but only from the military standpoint. You should put it back into the Bureau of Mines, and not establish two separate plants, one for the Army and one for the Navy. If you do, you will have to spend on each one of them each year more than it will cost to maintain the plant out here that you already have.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DYER. I do so, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of getting a little information. Will the chairman of the committee state as to the probable number of civil-service employees, if any, who are employed under the Bureau of Ordnance?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I can not. This takes in, you see, every navy yard in the country—New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Norfolk, Portsmouth, Newport News, the torpedo factory, and Columbia, S. C., and New Orleans, and Key West and Pensacola, Fla., and Mare Island, Cal.

Mr. DYER. As a matter of fact, a great many of these men are employed in those places, and an immense number of them are enrolled in the civil service, are they not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. And the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation limits the number that can be employed, and this is just a limitation on the amount that can be paid out of this sum.

Mr. DYER. Well, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill contains a provision to the effect that former employees under the civil service who have resigned their positions to enter the military service shall be put back in their positions.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. DYER. That rule would not apply to these employees, would it, in the opinion of the chairman?

Mr. PADGETT. I think it would; and the department wants to take them all back, where they can get them, where they are experienced and trained men. They hated to give them up.

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman that some of them have been having serious trouble in getting back.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer, at the end of this paragraph, an amendment similar to the one which I offered and which was put on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill and also to the deficiency appropriation bill, with reference to men of that character.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] withdraws the pro forma amendment and offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 2, page 21, insert:

"Provided, That no part of any appropriation herein shall be used unless all former Government employees who have been drafted or enlisted in the military service of the United States in the war with Germany shall be reinstated on application to their former positions appropriated for herein if they have received an honorable discharge and are qualified to perform the duties of the positions."

Mr. PADGETT. For the present, Mr. Chairman, I will reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. DYER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that this is the same amendment that was presented twice and was favorably ruled upon in the committee.

Mr. PADGETT. I see that it is a limitation. Go ahead.

Mr. DYER. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order is withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order withdrawn?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. I want to call attention to this fact: We put this provision into the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and the Senate committee has reported that bill to the Senate with a provision substantially like that of the House, but much stronger, in my judgment, and stronger than we could put it in here under our rules on account of its being subject to a point of order. The Senate committee has changed it so as to provide that all former Government employees who were drafted or enlisted in the military service of the United States in the war with Germany shall be reinstated on application to their former positions if they have received an honorable discharge and are qualified to perform the duties of their positions. They have reported it making it mandatory upon all the department heads. If that is written into the law as the Senate committee has presented it—and I have no doubt it will pass the Senate in that form—I feel sure the conferees on the part of the House will accept it, because it will end the conditions we have had during the past, in my judgment, with reference to these matters. A great many soldiers and sailors who entered this war and who were civil-service employees either here in Washington or elsewhere on returning have found their positions filled, and when applying for reinstatement have been told that there is no position open to them, and the result is that they have had to cling to their only hope, which was the order issued extending the time to five years in which they could apply for reinstatement.

In other words, they have been told that they could go out and find a place if they could, and that they would be put back. Now, this Senate amendment makes it mandatory upon the executive to put these men back into their positions. I have had a number of cases of this kind. Here is a letter which is a sample of complaints that I have received and I include in my remarks. It is as follows:

Referring to letter from the Civil Service Commission addressed to you and which you forwarded to me, wherein the commission refers to the fact that the War Department and its various offices are undoubtedly entirely filled up with clerical workers, and stating that I had the privilege of entering any other department of the civil service where there were vacancies. In this connection, Mr. DYER, I wish to thank you for the efforts you extended in my behalf and incidentally to inquire as to whether or not further action can be taken.

The Quartermaster General's office also returned my request for reinstatement to me, containing practically the same information as the Civil Service Commission apparently gave you. For instance, the Quartermaster General's office suggests that I communicate with all the different zone supply officers in the country, stating my qualifications, etc., and if a request comes to them for my reinstatement from any zone they will gladly approve same. Now, Mr. DYER, doesn't this appear on the face of it a most absurd and impossible suggestion; first, because I have no way of ascertaining where the various zone supply officers are located, and, second, as I have learned from past experience, if I were fortunate enough to personally know any officer from the grade of, say, captain up, who perchance might be located in any zone, then, I say, I should experience no difficulty in getting placed; but unfortunately I do not possess this information. This would in particular apply to the zone supply office located at St. Louis, Mo. Then, too, if the zone supply office in St. Louis could take on clerical workers and later on transfer them to various zones who had made requests upon this zone for men, why did not they do it in my case? This I know absolutely they have done. Further, if such transfers are being made from zone to zone, why does not the Quartermaster General acquaint himself with these needs, and doing so he would not have to turn down the request of an experienced employee in Quartermaster Corps work? The Government asks cooperation from corporations all over the country in replacing returned soldiers, yet they do not require cooperation from their various departments. Col. Williams states to me that there is no vacancy, yet since I have put in my request for reinstatement over 200 men have been taken on in various capacities at this zone supply office located in St. Louis.

Nor does the Civil Service Commission offer me but little more encouragement. If the Civil Service Commission is aware of the fact that the various departments of the War Department are filled up, why do not they suggest my name being placed on an eligible list to the secretary of this ninth civil-service district for call to fill any vacancy that might occur in this district in any civil-service capacity? As I stated on my application for civil-service examination, I was willing to go anywhere, but, of course, preferred the district of Missouri; however, if not in Missouri, then, of course, anywhere, as I took this examination with a view of remaining in the civil service and not merely for the very good salaries they were compelled to offer in competing with civil corporations during war times.

I submit this for your information, Mr. DYER, and in the hope that you might be able to advise me further; also, that I may be successful in again becoming a civil-service employee.

Mr. PADGETT. Let me suggest to the gentleman that instead of putting it in as a limitation on an appropriation he offer it as a piece of legislation directing that it be done, instead of doing it by indirection.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman agree to this language: To strike out the words "no part of any appropriation herein shall be used unless" and make it read, "Provided, That all former Government employees," and so forth?

Mr. PADGETT. That is what I am suggesting.

Mr. DYER. I am glad to have that suggestion.

Mr. PADGETT. I never like to do things by indirection.

Mr. DYER. My amendment was offered in that form only for the purpose of making it in order.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that.

Mr. DYER. I ask unanimous consent to strike out the words "that no part of any appropriation herein shall be used unless."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as suggested. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. And I ask unanimous consent that further on down the words "appropriated for herein" may be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, these words will be stricken out. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. WALSH. Let us have the amendment as modified reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment offered by Mr. DYER: Page 21, at the end of line 2, insert:

"Provided, That all former Government employees who have been drafted or enlisted in the military service of the United States in the war with Germany shall be reinstated on application to their former positions if they have received an honorable discharge and are qualified to perform the duties of the position."

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, section 9 of the civil-service law provides that not more than two members of one family may be employed anywhere in the civil service of the Federal Government. That section did not originally apply to the employees of the navy yards, but the mechanics, laborers, and clerks in the navy yards were by Executive order placed under the provisions of section 9 several years ago. Now, there are probably 200 or 300 employees of the Mare Island Navy Yard and the Benicia Arsenal who have gone into the Army and Navy of the United States. Their places probably have been filled by others than members of their own families, but I know of a number of instances where two members of the family of a man in the Army or Navy are at the present time employed under the civil service of the Federal Government. I should like to know if this amendment would provide for the reinstatement of those soldiers and sailors who gave up their remunerative jobs to go into the Army and Navy to fight for their country without one of their relatives being required to resign or being discharged from their civil-service position?

Mr. PADGETT. That is what this provides.

Mr. CURRY of California. I have tried to have the navy yards taken out from under the provisions of this section 9, but have received no reply from the Navy Department as yet. I would like to have this amendment positively cover those cases.

Mr. PADGETT. This would cover the cases of the men who are in the military service, but it would not cover the case of two in a family. If two members of a family had left the civil service to enter the military service they would put the two of them back; but if a new one has gone in to take the place of a soldier, the soldier coming back might put the other man out. I do not know what the provision of the civil-service law is, and I would not want to undertake by an amendment on the naval bill to change the general civil-service law without knowing what its purpose, context, and application are. The effect of this is to take back the soldier who gave up his job and is now coming back and wants it.

Mr. CURRY of California. Yes; but the two members of the soldier's family are, perhaps, on the job given up by the soldier. They are employed by the Government under the civil-service laws of the United States. Are you going to discharge one of them to give the soldier back his job or are you going to keep him?

Mr. PADGETT. This does not affect the civil-service law. This puts the man back on his job, which he gave up to go into the war.

Mr. CURRY of California. I would like to amend the amendment, Mr. Chairman, by inserting at the end of the amendment the words "Section 9 of the civil-service law shall not apply to such cases nor to the members of the family of soldiers and sailors who are at the present time employed under the civil service of the United States."

Mr. PADGETT. I make a point of order against that as not relevant and not pertinent.

Mr. CURRY of California. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he can not make the point of order against that unless he makes it against the whole amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, I can.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CURRY of California offers an amendment to the amendment, as follows:

"At the end of the amendment insert: 'Section 9 of the civil-service law shall not apply to such cases, nor to the members of the families of soldiers and sailors at present employed by the United States.'"

Mr. PADGETT. I make a point of order that that is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he thinks the word "military" will be construed in its broad signification or whether it will be held to include the Army and not the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. I suppose it will be construed in its broad sense. It might be well to add "military, naval, and marine."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer an amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. PADGETT: After the word "military" insert the words "or naval."

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he thinks this amendment would include the Coast Guard Service?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; it would include them, because in the war they are in the naval service.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Would it include the marines?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I am quite sure on investigation that the word "military" would cover both branches of the service, but I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent to insert in lieu of the words "being drafted or enlisted" the words "who have entered."

This might not be construed to include officers and we want to provide for men who have been commissioned as well as those who have entered the service otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by striking out the words "being drafted or enlisted in" and insert in lieu thereof the words "who have entered."

The Clerk reported the modified amendment, as follows:

Strike out the words "being drafted or enlisted in" and insert in lieu thereof the words "who have entered."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, do I understand the purpose is to provide for cases of officers who may leave the military service?

Mr. DYER. This is to provide for anyone who has entered the service and has been honorably discharged.

Mr. WALSH. Are there some officers who want to get out of the military service?

Mr. DYER. I have a number who have been trying to get out.

Mr. WALSH. That is a hopeful sign.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not know whether we ought to adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman. There are many instances which have been called to the attention of the committees of Congress where persons filling civilian positions in the War Department were given majorships, and even higher positions, merely for the purpose of increasing their pay, while continuing to perform civilian duties. Certainly the gentleman does not intend to allow those men to revert back to their original positions. The purpose of the gentleman's amendment originally was to provide for enlisted men.

Mr. DYER. Absolutely; but some men have been officers, and they gave up their positions, and if they go back and are ready to accept their civilian positions, and are qualified, at the same salary, I do not think there should be any objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Anyone who enlisted and rose to a commission naturally would be taken care of under the original phraseology of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. DYER. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the gentleman from Missouri? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, let me see if we can not reach some agreement in regard to reading further. Suppose we read to the top of the next page and then I move to rise?

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman means to continue the session until we reach that point?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. And then the gentleman will move to rise?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. With the understanding that we will meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] shakes his head.

Mr. WALSH. That was not in the agreement.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Tennessee told me that if we rise now or at the end of this reading we could meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow; otherwise some one would make the point of no quorum and we would have to call the roll and stay here until late. It seems to me that if we rise now we ought to be able to meet at 11 to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman would move to rise now, it would be agreeable to me.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] will not object to our meeting at 11 o'clock if we finish this page.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder, $2,500,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee in regard to this item. It seems to me rather a large item, in view of what must have taken place in the Navy. Surely, during a year and a half of war there must have been a considerable manufacture and accumulation of smokeless powder.

Mr. PADGETT. The Navy has a supply of smokeless powder, but not a large surplus. This is simply enough to keep the powder factory at Indianhead running during the year on one shift a day. That is all we put in for that purpose.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman say that the Navy has not a considerable surplus of smokeless powder?

Mr. PADGETT. They say not.

Mr. TILSON. It seems that the Army has a very large surplus of explosives. It is said that the Army has on hand 100,-

000,000 pounds of TNT, and that there is talk of dumping it into the ocean.

Mr. PADGETT. That was a different kind.

Mr. TILSON. I understand.

Mr. PADGETT. This is for big guns.

Mr. TILSON. I understand, of course, that it is a different explosive from the other.

Mr. PADGETT. This is only to keep the factory running one shift a day instead of three, as it was running during the war.

Mr. TILSON. So it takes two and a half million dollars a year just to keep the smokeless-powder factory running?

Mr. PADGETT. To keep up the supply, and then this will not more than keep it up for the needs they will have.

Mr. TILSON. Even in peace times?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. TILSON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Torpedoes and appliances: For the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes and appliances, to be available until June 30, 1922, $1,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. As I understand it there was $10,000,000 appropriated in this item last year to be available until June 30, 1921. Now, you propose to appropriate $1,000,000 to be available until June 30, 1922. What is the reason for having this appropriation continue available so many years in advance of the expiration of the life of the bill?

Mr. PADGETT. It is only two years. It has been carried that way for years for the simple reason that in the manufacture of torpedoes they can not always figure they will get their machinery and parts together and complete them within a year, and Congress has always allowed this to run for two years. The other one was for 1921, and before that it was made to 1920, and this is just as it has been for a number of years without any change of policy or plan.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Bureau of Ordnance: For miscellaneous items, namely, cartage, expenses of light and water at ammunition depots and stations, tolls, ferriage, technical books, and incidental expenses attending inspection of ordnance material, $25,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. FOSTER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15539, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman expect, by meeting at 11 o'clock to-morrow and sitting late, to finish this bill to-morrow night?

Mr. PADGETT. I am hoping to finish the bill without having to sit late.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose that perhaps the gentleman's hopes and expectations are the same, but I am asking him if he expects to sit to-morrow evening late enough to finish this bill providing he did not finish it by 2 o'clock or 3 o'clock or 4 o'clock in the afternoon?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I would sit until——

Mr. BUTLER. The chairman has accepted an invitation from me to-morrow night, and I am going to hold him to it. I only wish I could invite you all.

Mr. PADGETT. I would say at least until 7 o'clock, anyway.

Mr. BUTLER. So we can be at the place by 8 o'clock.

Mr. PADGETT. I would be glad if the gentleman could fix the arrangement for 9 o'clock, so as to let us have a little leeway.

Mr. BUTLER. No——

Mr. PADGETT. Say 7 o'clock to-morrow night.

Mr. BUTLER. I am much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Whether the bill is finished or not?

Mr. PADGETT. Of course it will not run after 7 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 7, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 7, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, with the duties pressing upon us, with the divine call ringing in our hearts for the advance of the interests of Thy people, with the solemn sense of our responsibility to Thee and to our fellow citizens, we begin the service of this day. As we lift our hearts to Thee, as we open them to Thy presence, we pray Thee to fill us with Thy divine spirit that we may properly discern between the right and the wrong, that we may lead as Thou dost lead us, that we may commit ourselves and our Nation solely to Thy purpose. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when on request of Mr. KING and by unanimous consent the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present the credentials of Hon. MEDILL MCCORMICK, duly elected by the people of the State of Illinois a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1919, which I ask to have read and placed on the files.

The credentials were read and ordered to be placed on the files, as follows:

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 5th day of November, 1918, Hon. MEDILL MCCORMICK was duly elected by the people of the State of Illinois a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1919.

Witness: His excellency, our governor, Frank O. Lowden, and our seal hereto affixed at Springfield, this 5th day of February, A. D. 1919.

FRANK O. LOWDEN, Governor.

By the governor:
[SEAL.]

LOUIS L. EMMERSON,
Secretary of State.

TRIALS BY COURTS-MARTIAL (S. DOC. NO. 380).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, in response to a Senate resolution, which will be inserted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

The communication is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 4, 1919.

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the Senate resolution of January 27, 1919, which directs the Secretary of War "to send to the Senate the number of individuals who have been tried and convicted by court-martial proceedings since our entrance into the war, April 6, 1917, together with a brief statement of the offense charged and the nature and extent of the punishment inflicted upon or assessed against each."

This resolution is interpreted by the department to refer to the major offenses tried by the general courts-martial and not to the minor offenses tried by inferior courts. Under the interpretation thus placed upon the resolution, it will be necessary to examine about 22,000 records and approximately three weeks will be required to prepare the report. If the resolution be construed to apply to all minor offenses tried by special and summary courts, it will be necessary to examine about 350,000 additional records in this country and in France, and the preparation of the report will require several months and will necessitate the services of a very large clerical force.

In the belief that the interpretation which, as above stated, has been placed upon this resolution by the department is both in accordance with the intent of the resolution and is necessary in order that action may be taken by the department without undue delay, I have directed that the report to be prepared pursuant to this resolution cover only the approximately 22,000 records of cases tried by general courts-martial.

Trusting that this action will meet with the approval of the Senate, I am,

Respectfully, NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the Assistant Secretary of Labor (S. Doc. No. 383), the Acting United States Food Administrator (S. Doc. No. 382), and the Assistant United States Fuel Administrator (S. Doc. No. 381), transmitting in response to a resolution of December 23, 1918, a list showing the number of civil employees in their respective departments on January 28 and the number discharged during the previous two weeks, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REPORT OF NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the National Academy of Sciences for the year 1918, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

CONDITIONS AT ARMY CAMPS IN FRANCE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to present the following telegram, which I received from New York:

[Telegram.]

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 3, 1919.

Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE,
Washington, D. C.:

Hundreds of wounded soldiers returning complain of insanitary living conditions and of disciplinary measures at American Army classification camp at St. Aignan, France. Boys say they have to stand in mess lines for hours in mud and water over boot tops. Some report wounded dropped dead in lines. Latrines 10 feet from tents. Camp built for 8,000 has 25,000. Guardhouse full of men who violated minor rules. If one-tenth of what returning men say is true, place is hell hole and disgrace to Army and to United States. Boys call it Camp Agony. Urge investigation at once that will assure country something more than a whitewash.

JOHN J. BUSH,
President Michigan Society of New York.

I have the original telegram here, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I trust they will inquire into the condition of that camp.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, on the 2d day of January I introduced a resolution asking for an investigation of certain conditions reported to exist at the camp at Brest, France. The resolution was objected to by Senators on the other side of the Chamber on the ground that an investigation had already been undertaken by the Secretary of War. Since that there has been no communication, to the Senate at least, and no statement given to the public by the Secretary other than the published statement from Maj. Gen. Harbord a day or two after the 3d of January, in which he stated, in response to a telegram sent by the Secretary of War, that while the conditions at Brest were bad, they were improving. That was the general purport of his telegram. Since that, if anything whatever has been done with reference to the improvement of conditions there, no statement of it has ever been given either to Congress or to the public.

I send to the desk and ask that the Secretary may read the following from the Washington Post of this morning, taken from a statement in the New York Telegram of yesterday. I will merely add that within the last 48 hours I have talked with Army officers who left the port of Brest as late as January 17, who, without knowledge of this article at all, have told me of the conditions there, and their statements bear out the statements printed in this article.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reading the article?

There being no objection, the Secretary read as follows:

BREST CAMP "VILEST"—COST LIVES OF 3,000 UNITED STATES SOLDIERS, SAYS ARMY OFFICER—"PLAYING POLITICS" BLAMED—BARRACKS BUILT FOR 4,000 FRENCH TROOPS MADE TO ACCOMMODATE 12,000 AMERICANS, IT IS ALLEGED—OFFICER WHO ASSERTS "SCANDAL" IS DUE TO INCOMPETENCY.

NEW YORK, February 6.

Based upon information given by a Regular Army officer of high rank, who declares the camp for American troops at Brest "the vilest hole in France," the Evening Telegram prints a six-column article describing the deplorable conditions at the camp.

3,000 UNNECESSARY DEATHS.

The Telegram's article, in part, says:

"The so-called rest camp for American troops at Brest is 'the vilest hole in France.'

"More than 3,000 American soldiers died there as a result of improper housing and sanitary conditions, and many of these were officially reported as 'killed in action.'

"Regular Army officers, playing politics and thus dominating National Guard officers, deliberately refused to correct the conditions, which menaced life and caused indescribable hardships.

"One Regular Army officer who had been grossly negligent while in charge at Brest was honored with an important diplomatic mission after the armistice had been signed, while another officer who had done everything in his power to correct conditions at Brest and protect the lives of the men who were obliged to 'rest' there was removed from active command after he had been personally appointed by Gen. Pershing."

MADE BY HIGH ARMY OFFICER.

These charges and many more are laid deliberately before the Evening Telegram by an officer high in rank in the Regular United States Army who has just returned to this country after having spent more than nine months in the midst of the conditions he describes.

Through the whole story told by this officer, whose name is withheld for obvious reasons, runs a plaint regarding the "powers at Tours," where, he intimates, it appeared to be the belief that the Regular officer could do no wrong.

It was to Tours that a certain major was sent "with a whole nest, including a young Austrian who had been raised from cook in the American Army to lieutenant," after charges had been made against him in Brest, only to be given an important task, raised in rank to lieutenant colonel, and the young lieutenant made adjutant of a casual officers' depot.

CONDITIONS LONG A SCANDAL.

The Evening Telegram's informant charges that Brest has been a scandal from the very day it was selected as a rest camp and debarkation port; that an incompetent officer was sent there to organize it and made a miserable failure; that opportunities to obtain or renovate proper buildings for the care of troops was wholly neglected while the men were forced to sleep in "pup tents" without floors, on filthy, muddy ground; that barracks erected by the French for 4,000 troops, and which were terribly overcrowded when 8,000 Russian troops were placed in them, were made to accommodate 12,000 American soldiers.

When Brig. Gen. Nathaniel F. McClure finally was put in charge of the camp, the officer continues, he took over an old slaughterhouse and made it habitable for the troops as they debarked, but as soon as Gen. McClure had been ordered away the renovated slaughterhouse was abandoned and the men once more were sent out into the muddy fields with their floorless pup tents.

READY TO FACE COMMITTEE.

While the officer making these charges would not permit his name to be used, he said that he would be perfectly willing to appear before the Military Affairs Committee of either the House or the Senate at Washington, where his statements would be, or at least "could be," substantiated by reports which now are on file in the War Department, or should be there.

He is certain that a congressional investigation into the conditions at Brest, at least as far as they existed up to last November, must result from the reports which already have been forwarded to Washington. It is said that several officers recently returned from France have been summoned to Washington, and it is believed they will be asked to throw what light they can on the conditions at Brest, which are described in the official reports.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts for just one second? I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, if it meets his approval, to add in his request to have a copy of the telegram which he had read sent to the Secretary of War? I think instead of waiting for the Military Committee, which has much work to do——

Mr. LODGE. I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. LEWIS. Will not the Senator add to his request to have a copy sent immediately to the Secretary of War?

Mr. LODGE. It has been published, and I should be delighted to have it sent to the Secretary of War, but it is wholly useless, if experience is to be any judge.

Mr. LEWIS. I can not accept the latter conclusion. I would regret very much if any Senator felt that he should judge the Secretary of War even before he had an opportunity——

Mr. LODGE. I have not.

Mr. LEWIS. I request the eminent Senator to have a copy sent to the Secretary of War, because I am in receipt of a communication from the Secretary of War, in replying to a complaint that I sent, begging me to assure the Senate that in response to letters such as the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] had received he would be exceedingly pleased if Senators would send these complaints direct to him in person, so that he could immediately start the investigation of every one.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I am only too delighted to have a copy sent to the Secretary of War, and I have no doubt that the committee will send it, although if he is deeply interested he can probably read it in the daily press or in the RECORD, in which it will appear. I appeal to the committee for an investigation, because I hope and believe it will make an investigation, but I have seen so many cases of references to the War Department which have resulted in suppression and whitewashing that I want something that will tell us the truth.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I would like to make a suggestion. It seems to me that while it is perfectly proper to send a copy of this telegram to the Secretary of War, of course the Secretary of War ought to be informing the Senate in regard to the conditions at the Army camps rather than waiting for newspapers and for the Senate to inform him. The Secretary of War of all men in the land, unless it is the President of the United States, who is Commander in Chief of the Army, ought to know the conditions at these great camps in France.

Mr. NEW. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. I call the attention of the Senator from Washington to the fact that the course now suggested by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is exactly the one that was recommended with reference to the resolution I introduced on the 2d day of January. That was brought to the attention of the Secretary of War in the same way, but so far as anyone in Congress or out of it knows, that was the end of that matter.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator from Washington will allow me to say——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one moment if the Senator please, and then I will take my seat.

Mr. LEWIS. I do not ask the Senator to take his seat. I only wish to respond that the information brought out by the Senator from Massachusetts seems to be a telegram from the President of the Michigan Society setting forth matters which no doubt he must know about in the form of complaint. It will be impossible for the Secretary of War to know of the different complaints which have been made until they are made to him. He could not know these conditions and the subject of the complaint until some one had complained.

Therefore, I think the Senator will realize that the only way he could get information would be to have the complainant send it as quickly as possible, and when it comes to a Senator who puts confidence in the writer, and he presents it to this body, I think the Secretary of War would attach much more importance to it than a newspaper article which we know we read every day ourselves without attaching great weight to all of them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The matter of these camps in France does not depend entirely upon newspaper articles.

Mr. LEWIS. I am referring rather, may I add, if I may be pardoned, to the telegram of the Senator from Massachusetts. As to the Senator from Indiana, the camp in France not only should be investigated, but it seems to me that from January until now some response could have come, and I join in a regret that officers there have not complied with the request of the Secretary of War with that facility, that quickness, they could have done, for it must be apparent they have not made response, because I am sure the Secretary of War would have sent it to us if there had been any made.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The assertion is made in the article which was read by the Secretary at the request of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] that an Army officer of considerable rank is authority for the statements contained in it, and these statements have been made from so many different sources that it becomes almost a matter of public knowledge. That statement includes the information that 3,000 men died as the result of insanitary conditions. It is very circumstantial in the account that it gives of the effort which was made by the commander, who was temporarily in charge of certain features of the camp, who had commandeered the buildings and given accommodations in them for troops. He was sent elsewhere and the troops taken out of those buildings in order to go into tents without floors on the wet and mud of the camp which is complained of.

I only rose, however, to emphasize what seems to me to be the principle that ought to govern the conduct of these affairs. My observation is that the Secretary of War rather resents information in regard to failures of the War Department.

Mr. LEWIS. I assure the Senator he has been misinformed as to that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, I may be; but I have observed that, notwithstanding the exposures that have been made by the legislative branch of the Government, sometimes under the leadership of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who is a loyal Democrat, and the report made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] in regard to airplanes that exposed their bad condition, I do not think it can be successfully contradicted that there was gross inefficiency and a great deal of self-seeking in the conduct of the Aviation Service of the War Department, with the result that the war ended, and after we had been in it considerably over a year, and this great manufacturing country, the richest and the most efficient in the world, had not produced one plane of attack, but had depended entirely upon our allies—now, I believe that I can make this statement without fear of contradiction, that there can not be produced by the Senator from Illinois or by anybody else a single word from the Secretary of War condemning that colossal scandal. On the contrary, he defended it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one second. My impression is that the Secretary of War first, of all the citizens of this country, ought to condemn it and to excoriate it and expose it and punish the men who are responsible for it; but the attitude that he has taken is an attitude of justification and excuse and defense where he ought to be the agent of punishment and the exposer of truth and of inefficiency; but he depends upon the legislative branch of the Government to inform him, the head of the department, of conditions which he first of all ought to know.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I present a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution [J. Res. No. 19, A] relating to the tobacco industry and requesting the Federal Trade Commission to report on such industry.

Whereas during the fall of 1918 the price of tobacco was approximately 40 cents per pound at a time when all the markets of the central powers and most of the markets of the neutral powers were not being supplied; and

Whereas upon the cessation of hostilities, and continuing to the present time, the price of this product dropped to 20 cents per pound, notwithstanding the fact that world commerce had opened up and the tobacco markets of Europe were waiting to be supplied; and

Whereas the tobacco farmers of Wisconsin, while of the opinion that such a decline in the price of their product is not justified by existing conditions, desire to be properly informed, so that if such decline is based upon good reasons continued good relations may exist between buyer and seller; and

Whereas the matter is of the most serious consequence to all business interests in our State, due to the fact that the decline in price, if continued, would mean a loss of approximately $8,000,000 to the producers: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly, the senate concurring, That the Federal Trade Commission be respectfully requested to at once investigate the conditions of the tobacco industry and to make a report to the present legislature with all convenient speed, such investigation and report to be of such nature as to fully advise the tobacco producers of the true causes of the present market conditions: And be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the chairman of said commission at Washington, D. C., to each of the two Senators, and to the Congressmen from this State.

EDWARD F. DITTMAR,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNDON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
RILEY S. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I present a resolution unanimously adopted at the regular meeting of the Manufacturers' Association of Wilmington, Del., held in their office Wednesday, February 5, 1919, relative to a bill now pending before Congress carrying an appropriation of over $14,000,000 for the purpose of perpetuating and enlarging the United States Employment Service, which was created to aid the Federal Government in coordinating the interests of the country for war production. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOSES. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire, relative to the extermination of insects and pests, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by the New Hampshire Legislature February 5, 1919.

Whereas a new, important, and exceedingly dangerous insect pest known as the European borer has gained foothold in certain areas in eastern Massachusetts;

Whereas this new pest if not controlled is expected to cause extraordinary damage to our most valuable field crops and vegetables throughout the entire United States and may render unprofitable the growing of such important crops as field corn;

Whereas such opportunity as may still exist for suppression of the pest will speedily disappear as the insect spreads beyond the present limited territory: Be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States is hereby urged to make immediate appropriations whereby adequate measures of suppression of this pest may be undertaken without delay by the proper Federal authorities.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the Minnesota Independent Telephone Association, of Minneapolis, Minn., praying that Congress fix a definite date for the return of the telephone lines to their owners, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from A. G. Rugles, State entomologist, of St. Paul, Minn., praying that an appropriation of $500,000 be made for the extermination of the corn borer, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Growers' Association of Minnesota, of St. Paul, Minn., praying that the so-called "market reporting service" be continued and that provision be made therefor in the Agriculture appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a memorial of Local Union No. 871, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Battle Creek, Mich., remonstrating against the operation of the Federal employment system as now constituted, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the Woman's Literary Union, of Androscoggin County, Me., praying for the establishment of a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I present a resolution adopted by the Common Council of Detroit, Mich., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITY OF DETROIT, January 23, 1919.

HON. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am transmitting herewith copy of a resolution presented by Councilman Bielman and adopted by the common council at the session of January 21 relative to congressional action to provide funds for men discharged from the Army or Navy:

"From: The clerk:

"To: The honorable the Common Council.

"GENTLEMEN: I beg to advise your honorable body that I am in receipt of the following communication from the American Red Cross.

"Respectfully submitted.

"RICHARD LINDSAY,
"City Clerk.

"The following is the communication referred to:

"'Mr. RICHARD LINDSAY,
"'City Clerk.

"'DEAR SIR: I am inclosing herewith a resolution which, at the suggestion of Councilman Lodge, I have drawn up as a result of a meeting of a number of men who represent organizations caring for the returned soldier, and while I can not, as a Red Cross official, perhaps, urge such action, as a private citizen I can and do most earnestly, so that men who have gone from Detroit may be saved, so far as possible, the humiliation of standing around in their uniforms until some good-natured person hands them a job.

"'There is a fundamental question of right in this matter which can not be overlooked, and we want our city to be among the first to recognize this obligation to her citizens.

"'Very truly, yours,

"'G. D. POPE.'

"By Councilman Bielman:

"'Whereas citizens of this community liable for military service have met in full that obligation to our country, leaving their homes and their affairs to bear their part in the military duty required to uphold justice and the ideals of this Nation; and

"'Whereas, their work accomplished, they are now being returned to this community at a time when industrial readjustments make their reentry into industry exceedingly difficult, and inasmuch as this city and this Nation owe these men an unpayable debt of gratitude and obligation, and should in no wise permit the burden and sacrifice of unemployment to fall unsupported upon those who have already sacrificed so much in our service: Therefore be it

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I present a memorial from the Board of Trustees of the Takoma Branch of the American Protective League, representing about a thousand of the best citizens there, who have given a great deal of their time, in connection with the prosecution of the war, in aiding the various branches of the Government in the detection of sedition and disloyalty, and all that sort of thing. In this memorial they set out in concise form their conclusions from what they have ascertained and learned as to what ought to be done.

I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD, and as they make recommendation with reference to immigration and naturalization, I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The memorial referred to is as follows:

To the honorable the Congress of the United States of America:

The undersigned, the board of trustees of the Tacoma Branch of the American Protective League, respectfully represent:

That immediately after the declaration of the war with Germany a part of their number, with several hundred other American citizens of Tacoma, organized the Tacoma Home Guards, and, about the same time, others of their number organized the Tacoma Minutemen, and in their respective organizations they acted from the start in the general direction, management, and control of the various activities of said organizations; that after a few months of separate operation they amalgamated in the American Protective League, with a combined membership of more than 1,000, and they, your memorialists, became the managing and directing board of said combined force, and have continued to act as such to this date, January 27, 1919.

That during said entire period of 22 months they have in person, and through their entire membership of more than 1,000 persons, as well as by volunteer investigators and paid detectives, been engaged in aiding all departments of the United States Government, and particularly the Department of Justice and the Army, in the work of guarding and protecting property, discovering, preventing, and punishing disloyalty, aiding Army enlistments, enforcement of the selective-service laws, arresting deserters and slackers, and generally doing such war service as could be found to do.

That in carrying on such work a vast number of investigations were made, and a great mass of information gathered, from which we have become profoundly impressed with the necessity for prompt revision of the Federal laws relating to both immigration and naturalization. We must be better protected against the immigration and naturalization of all persons not likely to become attached to the principles embodied in our Constitution and laws, or become industrious, law-abiding, and patriotic citizens. We have had a rude awakening.

While we have found many of our foreign-born citizens splendidly loyal, we have also found an astonishing number to be only half American in real sentiment, and very many positively disloyal and hostile to the United States in its hour of need. We know that fear has bridled many a tongue and stayed many a hand.

We find that among the disloyal, and preachers of disobedience to law, destruction of property, and general seditious conduct, fully 90 per cent are foreign born or of foreign parentage, and this in a population 77 per cent of which is native born. We find that the dangerous unrest now prevalent, and which promises to become more acute, is almost entirely the result of propaganda carried on by a naturally seditious element of foreign birth, many of whom have come here expressly to find a freer and more fertile field for their propaganda.

It is our unanimous and deliberate judgment that, unless a speedy cure is provided by the enactment of properly protective immigration and naturalization laws, irreparable harm will result to the people of the United States.

Such legislation must contain whatever provisions as are necessary to really accomplish the desired purpose, and while some inconvenience may be occasioned to a few excellent people, this fact must not be allowed to stand in the way of accomplishing the necessary reform.

We have the honor to submit the following suggestions as an outline of some provisions which ought, in our judgment, to be embodied in proposed legislation:

First. Pending passage of other laws and organizing the administration thereof, stop all immigration, with only necessary exceptions.

Second. All persons coming into the United States should be required to fill out, in the country from which they come, a questionnaire, giving a true history of their lives, showing their education, times and places and kinds of employment, if convicted of any crime, the time, place, and circumstances, whether felony or misdemeanor, social, and other organizations of which applicant is or has been a member, and all other pertinent facts upon which a fair judgment of character may be founded. Such document should be made before a United States consular or immigration officer, resident in the foreign country, and filed with him at least 90 days prior to date of expected embarkation for the United States. Such officer should then make investigation as to fitness of applicant to become a resident and citizen of our country, and, if found worthy, issue to him a certificate to that effect, and make a similar indorsement on the questionnaire. If found not worthy, certificate should be refused, and that fact indorsed on questionnaire.

All questionnaires to be filed in and become a permanent record in the proper office in the United States.

If approval has been given, applicant may enter United States as an immigrant, subject to the final approval of United States at place of entry into the United States.

After entry into the United States the immigrant should be required to learn to intelligently speak, read, and write the English language within two years, after learning which, and after two years, he may declare his intention to become a citizen, which he may complete after an additional period of five years.

In order that proper track may be kept of his conduct, a system of registration should be required, with proper officers in the various places of his residence, at all times up to time of admission to citizenship.

Failure on part of foreigners to comply with any or all laws, rules, and regulations relating to foreigners resident in the United States, either temporarily or permanently, or engaging in riots, or any breach of State or Federal law, and advocating, or associating with others who advocate, any kind of unlawful violence, sedition, breach of law, overthrow of lawful authority or government, should subject the foreigner to punishment or deportation or both at the discretion of the United States.

On making application for admission to citizenship he should again make out and file with his application a questionnaire, giving a complete history of his life in detail, and at least three months prior to time fixed for hearing the application, to allow of thorough investigation into the life of applicant by Federal agents. Any willfully untrue statement made or pertinent fact covered up should bar admission and be followed by deportation if fraudulent intent is found to exist.

The law should provide that after admission to citizenship retention of that right is a trust subject to forfeiture at any time for sufficient cause, such as conviction of felony, unpardoned advocacy of violence or disorder, engaging in or advising riots, advising, aiding, or abetting seditious or disorderly conduct by others, or any conduct which the proper Federal authority may find calculated to undermine orderly and efficient government.

All such laws should be made to apply to foreigners and naturalized citizens now here, as well as those yet to come, for no man has any right to hold a citizenship the privileges of which he abuses, nor has he a right to retain citizenship in any country and at the same time advocate its destruction.

Vigorous sedition laws should be at once enacted if the war measures now in force are either inadequate or inapplicable in times of peace, and these laws would, of course, apply to foreigners and citizens alike, in so far as punishments go. We, your memorialists, have, however, become so deeply convinced that all seditious organizations and propaganda are traceable so largely to the undesirable foreign element possessing no adequate conception of the fundamental principles of our Government, and knowing no distinction between the true liberty of a self-governing people and individual license to act without restraint, that no permanent relief can be had until all foreigners of seditious tendencies are not only barred from citizenship but from entry into the country, and, if already here, are denied the right to remain.

With proper regulations relating to foreigners engaging in business, and travelers, for specified and limited periods, we believe the foregoing general proposition will, if acted on promptly and fearlessly, save our country from grave dangers and disorders.

We are gravely apprehensive of after-war conditions, when Europe shall settle down to orderly government and its Bolsheviki seek the freedom of America to carry on its propaganda of tyranny and destruction, and we, therefore, pray your earnest, prompt, and conscientious consideration of these momentous problems, always having in mind that you are representing the American people, for whose benefit and protection its laws should be primarily made.

Respectfully submitted this 27th day of January, 1919.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF TACOMA BRANCH,
AMERICAN PROTECTIVE LEAGUE,
D. D. A. OUTCALT, President.
J. H. HOLME, Secretary.

MAHONING RIVER BRIDGE, OHIO.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12995) granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a combined bridge and dam across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio, and I submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by him. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, does this bill provide for the construction of a dam across a river? If it does, that is a new proposition—the construction of a combined bridge and dam.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask the Secretary to read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, operate, and maintain a combined bridge and dam and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the town of Struthers, county of Mahoning, State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That no dam constructed under the consent hereby granted shall be used to develop water power nor to generate electricity.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the bill had better go over until we have an opportunity to examine it. That is certainly a strange combination—a bridge and dam across a navigable stream.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The War Department has approved the bill, and it seemed to be an ordinary bridge bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think I shall have to ask that it go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I withdraw the report for the present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection to the report being withdrawn.

NIAGARA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5534) granting the consent of Congress to Oliver Cabana, jr., Myron S. Hall, E. G. Connette, William F. MacGlashan, John H. Bradley, and M. A. Hurt to construct a bridge across Niagara River within or near the city limits of Buffalo, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 694) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAHONING RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 12996) granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio, and I submit a report (No. 692) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 13232) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, between Traill County, N. Dak., and Polk County, Minn., and I submit a report (No. 693) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAHONING RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12997) granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio, and I submit a report (No. 695) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSION APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WALSH. From the Committee on Pensions I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 15219) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 696) thereon.

Mr. President, although this bill carries a very large appropriation, there are no authorizations contained in it, but simply provision for the payment of pensions authorized by general legislation and by other bills. It is the usual appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, namely:

Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $215,000,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately.

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year 1920, $30,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

AMENDMENT OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE ACT.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 621, being the bill (H. R. 13273) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a bureau of war-risk insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and an act in amendment thereto, approved October 6, 1917.

I may state that the bill has passed the House, and the Secretary of the Treasury has informed the chairman of the Finance Committee that its enactment into law is urgently essential to the efficient administration of the war-risk insurance act. It is very short.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a bureau of war-risk insurance in the Treasury Department" be, and is hereby, amended by adding the following new paragraph to section 210 of Article II of the said act:

"Provided, however, That whenever the commissioner shall by further investigation or reinvestigation modify the existing award, no reimbursement from the person receiving an allowance shall be required for allotments and allowances already paid nor shall any deductions be made from allotments and allowances to be paid in the future for any change in award made in previous allotments and allowances, except where it is conclusively shown that the person receiving the allowance does not bear the relationship to the enlisted man which is required by the act and except in cases of manifest fraud."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SIMMONS:

A bill (S. 5555) to amend the war-risk insurance act; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. BECKHAM (for Mr. WILLIAMS):

A bill (S. 5556) to provide for the erection of memorials and the entombment of bodies in the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater, in Arlington National Cemetery, Va.; to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. THOMAS submitted an amendment authorizing the President to appoint Col. William C. Brown, United States Army, retired, to the rank of brigadier general on the retired list, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $125,000 for promoting and developing the farm and domestic commerce of the United States, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14945) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FLETCHER (for Mr. WILLIAMS) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

THE CENSUS CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the conference report on the Census bill be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] was interested in this conference report. I will ask the Senator from Texas if he knows anything about that? I may be mistaken, but I was under the impression that the Senator from Maryland was interested in this matter and wished to be present when it was brought up for consideration.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall state to the Senator that the time is so short until adjournment that I do not believe it will be fair to the bill to hold it up until any particular Senator can be present, but if the Senator from Maryland is not present I shall not insist on considering the conference report now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It may be that the Senator from Maryland may not be interested. Does the Senator from Texas know whether or not the Senator from Maryland is interested in this report?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Maryland is interested in the report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope, then, that the Senator from Texas will not bring it up just now. I do not know why the Senator from Maryland is absent; I know he is generally here.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Maryland has been sent for.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand that the Senator from Maryland has been sent for and will be here in a short time. So I ask the Senator from Texas to withhold action on the report for a little while.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well; that is satisfactory to me.

SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] for just a moment, I desire to state that, in view of certain statements which were made by the Senator from Michigan, as well as by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], on yesterday toward the close of the afternoon's debate, I shall not press Senate resolution 415 at the present time. I shall meanwhile hope to confer with the members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and if it is deemed desirable shall call them together with a view of arranging some plan which will prove satisfactory.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to that arrangement. I wish it thoroughly understood by the Senator, in order that there shall be no misunderstanding, that I should like to know before the plan is put out, if I may be granted that courtesy, as to what the Senator's idea is as to the proposed resolution. If he intends to introduce another one I shall be glad to cooperate with him.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator from Michigan should be kept fully informed, and I shall be glad to keep in touch with him on the subject.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The other day when I called the attention of the Senate to an advertisement or an appeal to the American Bolsheviki by Nikolai Lenine, published in the St. Louis Post Dispatch, I stated that it appeared to be an advertisement. I am informed that it was not and that I was mistaken. I know the Post Dispatch to be a paper of high standing and the gentlemen who manage it to be gentlemen of character, and I very gladly withdraw the statement. It was published as a reprint of an article which appeared in a magazine in New York edited by Max Eastman. I am very glad to make the statement that it was published as a matter of news.

SHIP WORKERS' STRIKE.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in view of what has been stated heretofore in connection with the shipbuilders' strike on the Pacific coast I submit an interview had with Mr. Charles Piez, Director General of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, on that subject, which I believe will be somewhat enlightening and perhaps clear up the situation to some extent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Florida that I have already had put into the RECORD all of the statements that have been called to my attention by Mr. Piez. I put in an interview and statements, I think, a couple of days ago, and then on yesterday I had inserted in the RECORD subsequent statements purporting to be an interview and a statement by Mr. Piez. They are the ones I received from Mr. Piez yesterday morning in the mail.

Mr. FLETCHER. Perhaps it is the same thing. It is an interview that was to be issued February 4, I believe.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. And a subsequent one. I did not know but what this might be subsequent to what the Senator has offered; but perhaps it covers the same ground.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am inclined to think that it covers the same ground.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well. Then I will not make the request.

BOLSHEVIKI PROPAGANDA IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, Mr. Judson King, who, it is stated, was the chairman of a meeting at Poli's Theater, concerning which the Senate has ordered an investigation, and as to which there has been considerable discussion, has written a letter to Senators and Representatives denying flatly the statements in the newspapers which caused the controversy. He called upon me this morning and expressed a desire that that letter be placed in the RECORD. I was not present at the meeting; I know nothing of the facts concerning it; but I think it is only fair, in view of what has occurred, that this letter be inserted in the RECORD, and I make that request.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before that request is agreed to——

Mr. KING. I think that I shall object to the request. This matter is before the committee for investigation, and if this gentleman desires vindication, if he thinks he has been injured, doubtless he will have full opportunity. I object.

Mr. LENROOT. Before the Senator from Utah objects——

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think that, inasmuch as the meeting referred to has been criticized, those who have been subjected to criticism are entitled to be heard through the columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I have excoriated individuals occasionally since I have been here, perhaps unjustly, but I have never declined, no matter how personally abusive the reply was, to insert in the RECORD, if requested, the answers which have been made to me upon my position. I think it but fair and just. If I say something about a man that is wrong, I want to be the first to know it and to apologize. In any event, he has the right to be heard by way of reply.

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to suggest that in this statement there is no reflection upon any Senator.

Mr. KING. I had supposed that it was a rebuke of the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], who had called the attention of the Senate to the matter, but with the assurance of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], I withdraw the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would not permit a document of that kind to go into the RECORD.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair decide it. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

3015 FOURTEENTH STREET NW.,
Washington, D. C., February 6, 1919.

To Members of the Senate and House of Representatives:

For your information permit me to state that at the meeting at Poli's Theater Sunday afternoon, at which I presided, there was no advocacy of anarchy or violence, no attack upon the American form of government, and no propaganda that Bolshevism be adopted in our country. The well-nigh unanimous sentiment of audience and speakers was that American troops be withdrawn and Russia be permitted to settle her own fate in her own way.

The article in Monday's Washington Post, headed "Urge Red America," is an absurd perversion of the truth and a gross violation of journalistic ethics. Discussions in Congress regarding this meeting, based, apparently, upon this article, have proceeded under a misapprehension of facts. Whether any attempt was made to verify the truth of the article I do not know. No inquiry was made of me.

Far from being a meeting of "reds," the gathering was attended by hundreds of cultured men and women of this city, of every political party and of every creed and class, including clergymen, who have no sympathy with Bolshevist methods or even the economic principles of socialism. No protest from those in attendance has reached me; many have expressed appreciation of the facts learned from Mr. Williams's address and are ready to testify that the sort of publicity given to the meeting is false, disgusting, and an insult to intelligence.

I am informed by the secretary of the committee having the meeting in charge that an invitation was mailed to every Member of Congress. This letter stated:

"The purpose of the meeting is to afford citizens of Washington opportunity to learn what is happening in Russia, not to propagate Bolshevism."

That purpose was adhered to.

The meeting did not originate with me. I was asked to preside, and did so on my own responsibility. I had learned in Boston, Mr. Williams's home city, from men who differ with his opinions, of his high character and ability. I had read his articles in reputable magazines and knew he had given the address proposed to be given here before the American Academy of Political and Social Science and at the City Club in Philadelphia, at Ford Hall and the Economic League in Boston, at the Church of the Holy Trinity in Brooklyn, the Church of the Ascension in New York, and other places. I knew the Department of Justice was fully advised as to Mr. Williams and what he was saying, and concluded that what would not contaminate Boston, New York, and Philadelphia would not injure Washington.

Mr. Williams delivered his usual address here, a typewritten copy of which was handed by him to a Post reporter at the meeting, but which was falsified in the report.

Myself and other nonsocialist citizens of this city will welcome any investigation of this open meeting, with the hope—perhaps vain—that the same publicity be given the truth as was given the distortion. At bottom this is the old question of free speech and as to whether a respectable audience of American citizens can peaceably assemble to ascertain the truth about a public issue without being lied about, villified, and intimidated.

I respectfully suggest that, if hearings are held, the committee be empowered to extend an inquiry as to whether there is a conspiracy afoot to prevent the American people from learning the truth about Russia.

Respectfully, yours, JUDSON KING.

MEN OF MOTOR TRANSPORT CORPS AT GUM SPRINGS, VA.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I submit a resolution for reference to the Committee on Military Affairs. I ask to have the resolution read.

The resolution (S. Res. 442) was read, as follows:

Whereas the men composing Company 553 of the Motor Transport Corps, now located at Gum Springs, near Alexandria, Va., were enlisted in the mechanical course of the University of Wisconsin and the mechanical courses maintained by the Government at many other places for the special training of men for services in the Motor Transport Corps; and

Whereas these men received this special training from June 15 to August 15, 1918, at which time they were sent to the aforesaid camp at Gum Springs, Va.; and

Whereas since August 15, 1918, to date this company has not been employed in motor-transport work, but has been employed in road-building work; and

Whereas the men of this company have been working at soldiers' pay for from 10 to 12 hours a day and doing the same character of work and employed alongside of colored civilian labor employed by a contractor who had a contract for building this road, and who paid this colored civilian labor at the rate of $4.50 and upward per day of eight hours; and

Whereas while they have been thus employed these men have received no military training and no training to make them more efficient in the Motor Transport Service, but have been continuously employed as common laborers; and

Whereas many of these men are married, with families and parents dependent upon them, many have business interests at home urgently requiring their personal attention, further absence from which will in many cases result in irreparable loss, and many others have lucrative employment awaiting them if they could secure prompt discharge from the Army; and

Whereas members of this company have filed or attempted to file applications for discharge with the commanding officer, who has refused to consider such applications upon their merits, except in a few instances where Senators and Representatives have, after long delay, succeeded in obtaining a discharge; and

Whereas in the presence of the men the commanding officer has on numerous occasions stated that no discharges will be granted nor will any applications for discharge be favorably recommended by said officer; and

Whereas these men did not and would not make any complaint so long as the country was at war, but cheerfully performed this labor to which they were assigned, although it was not the service for which they were trained; and

Whereas the road work upon which they were employed is completed, and there is no reason for the continuance in the service of Company 553 or Company 516 of the Motor Transport Service, which is similarly situated, has been similarly treated, and is under the same command: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or a subcommittee of said committee, be, and it is hereby, directed to investigate the Gum Springs camp and ascertain and report to the Senate at the earliest possible date upon the following questions:

(1) Is there any military necessity for longer retaining these organizations in the service?

(2) Have the officers of these companies discouraged the filing of applications for discharge, neglected and delayed action upon applications filed with them, and refused discharges in cases upon which they have acted, without any just reason therefor, or for the purpose of maintaining their own places while they have been personally seeking new assignments for themselves or for the organizations?

(3) Have the men of either of these companies been from time to time required to perform services other than in the line of military duty?

(4) The committee is directed to make a like investigation and report as to the Motor Transport Service located at Camp Humphreys and other camps in the vicinity of Washington, D. C.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as I understand, this resolution has been referred to the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I received a letter a few days ago on behalf of three or four enlisted men at this station. They did not set out in detail all the matters referred to in this resolution, but they did state that they had been employed at road work alongside men who were getting from four and a half dollars to, I think they said, ten dollars a day. They also stated that the commanding officer had stated publicly that he would not receive applications for discharge; that he would not give them any consideration whatever. They could not understand why this was done. They stated in this letter that they were perfectly willing to do this kind of work, or any kind of work, while the war was going on, any work necessary to the prosecution of the war, but they could not understand why they were to be kept in the service, working alongside of men who were getting many times the pay that they were getting, and work not at all connected with the prosecution of the war.

I took up the matter with the War Department. They advised me there, of course, that the commanding officer had no right to announce that he would not receive applications for discharge, and they assured me that they would take up the matter at once with the proper official. I have stated all the facts that were set out in the letter; but, as I say, they did not refer to many of the things referred to in this resolution.

I hope the resolution will be acted upon by the committee, and acted upon very promptly, because it seems to me there is a wholly unwarranted and unjustifiable condition of things at this Gum Springs Motor Transport Camp.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I think the fact is that the War Department has vested in the commanding officer the right to make discharges; but my judgment is that a commanding officer who stated that he would not receive an application for discharge or for any other reason would be subjecting himself to severe military punishment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, can the Senator see any justification now for working men on the building of roads alongside of men who are employed at very high wages?

Mr. WEEKS. I not only can not see any justification for it, but I can see every reason why it should not be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions? [A pause.] The morning business is closed.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senator from Alabama. I now offer the amendment which was read and explained last night, which simply provides, where State constitutions have to be amended, that the part which could not otherwise be used shall be set aside in the Treasury.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have examined that amendment very carefully, and so have other members of the committee. I think it is very important, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "act," in line 13, on page 37, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That where the constitution of any State prohibits the same from engaging upon internal improvements, or from contracting public debts for extraordinary purposes in an amount sufficient to meet the monetary requirements of the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, or restricts annual tax levies for the purpose of constructing and improving roads and bridges, and where a constitutional alteration or amendment to overcome either or all of such prohibitions must be submitted to a referendum at a general election, the sum to which such State is entitled under the method of apportionment provided in the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, shall be withdrawn by the Secretary of the Treasury from the principal fund appropriated by the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, upon receipt of the certification of the governor of such State to the existence of either or all of said prohibitions, and such sum shall be carried by the Secretary of the Treasury as a separate fund for future disbursement as hereinafter provided: Provided further, That when, by referendum, the constitutional alterations or amendments necessary to the enjoyment of the sum so withdrawn have been approved and ratified by any State, the Secretary of the Treasury, upon receipt of certification from the governor of such State to such effect, shall immediately make available to such State, for the purposes set forth in the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, the sum withdrawn as hereinbefore provided: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be deemed to prevent any State from receiving such portion of said principal sum as is available under its existing constitution and laws.

Mr. KELLOGG obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like a vote on this amendment, if there is no objection to it, and I do not understand that there is.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall be compelled to make a point of order against this amendment. It engrafts general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. I hope the Senator will not do that. It does not affect the appropriation in the least. It does not bear on the question of the amount, and, if the appropriation is going to be made, all the States ought to have a right to take advantage of it. I yield, however, to the Senator from California.

Mr. THOMAS. Just a word, Mr. President. I do not want to do anything that is disagreeable to the Senator, but our rules certainly mean something, and we are becoming prone not only to an occasional but to a constant change of the spirit as well as the letter of our bills by amendments which are not germane to them. Complaint was made last night, and justly so, by the Senator having charge of this bill that it has been four days before the Senate and we have not made much progress upon it. That is due to the fact that it has been transformed by amendments from a Post Office appropriation bill to a good-roads bill. If it were not for the amendment it would have been passed long ago.

Mr. President, I have in my hand a copy of the revenue bill, consisting of some 360 pages. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will probably remember that a few days ago he asked the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] where the money was coming from to meet these expenditures. This is the answer. The Senator said the Finance Committee will attend to that. We have tried to attend to it, but even here appears an appropriation. We can not even pass a revenue bill without appropriating some of the money in advance. We provide here for paying the discharged soldiers $60 apiece, or $400,000,000. That is an amendment to a revenue bill. Congress is discounting its own bills 6½ per cent, and I understand that it would have been difficult to secure its enactment but for something of that sort.

There is no question but that the Senator's amendment will improve this bill; but it is new legislation, and certainly we must somewhere, at some time, terminate this constant practice of transforming bills of all sorts into appropriation bills through general legislation. This does not increase the appropriation, but it certainly changes the form of the bill by engrafting general legislation upon it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am in full accord with every word the Senator from Colorado has just said. Of course I do not like this road appropriation upon this bill, but I ask the Senator from Colorado to withhold the point of order because——

Mr. THOMAS. I will do that. I will withhold it, of course, but I will not promise not to renew it.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like even to ask the Senator not to renew it, because if this appropriation is made I certainly want it as fair as it is possible to be, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota is nothing but fair to the different States of the country. I hope the Senator will finally conclude not to press the point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me, I have perhaps already made myself more obnoxious than is personally desirable. I do not care to do so any more than is absolutely necessary. If the Senator from Utah says this is an improvement to the bill I will withdraw the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

AMERICAN TROOPS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I move that the pending measure be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate take up and consider Senate resolution 411.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California.

Mr. BORAH. Upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. THOMAS. What was the motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To lay aside the appropriation bill and proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 411, upon which the yeas and nays have been requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I do not see him in the chamber and I withhold my vote.

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I am informed by his colleague that if present he would vote "yea." I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. I observe that he is not present. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I am unable to secure a transfer and I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote I would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded,

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to announce the necessary absence from the Chamber of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] because of illness, and also of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] for the same cause.

Mr. KENDRICK. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (after having voted in the negative). Has the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will have to withdraw my vote, having a pair with that Senator.

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I note that he has not voted. I will transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] on business of the Senate.

Mr. MOSES. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN] to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 37, not voting 27, as follows:

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on page 37, line 10, after the numerals "1920," I move to strike out down to and including the numerals "1921," in line 11, in the following words:

And the sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The effect of that amendment will be to reduce the appropriation $75,000,000, but it applies only to the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, or, in other words, it provides that at this time Congress shall not authorize an appropriation of $75,000,000, which under this amendment, if it becomes a law, may not be expended until the year 1924.

There is no necessity whatever to appropriate money now that may not be used before the year 1924, and as a matter of wisdom and policy it should not be done. The next Congress or the Congress following can appropriate the money just as well as not to carry on this work, and by that time Congress will know more about the requirements of the Government; everyone in the country will know whether the conditions are such that the money ought to be expended for this purpose.

In saying this, Mr. President, I want it distinctly understood that I believe in the building of good roads. I believe that that is one of the most important questions before the American people to-day, and I think millions and billions of dollars could be expended in the building of these roads; but let us at least use a little judgment in appropriating money out of the Treasury of the United States to be expended, perhaps, not before three or four years hence, and when we know nothing about the conditions which will exist in the country at that time. It is unwise, it is uncalled for, and it should not be done.

Again, Mr. President, I believe whatever amount of money is to be appropriated, if any is appropriated by this bill, should be for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919. As far as I am concerned, if the money is to be appropriated, I would rather see the $50,000,000 taken from the next appropriation, that would be for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and added to the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question for my own information?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I should like to know what appropriation was made for 1919 and how much has been expended?

Mr. SMOOT. The appropriations that have already been made amounted to $75,000,000, and this bill provides $50,000,000 more for the present fiscal year. I think very little of the $75,000,000 that was appropriated three years ago is expended.

Mr. KING. It was my understanding that the amount appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, has scarcely been touched and that most of it is still available.

Mr. SMOOT. There is some of it available. But I will say that the $50,000,000 that is provided for in the bill for the present fiscal year is immediately available and could be expended for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. KING. I understand that, but I was not sure about the other.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the existing law, if the States do not avail themselves of this $50,000,000 by June 30, 1919, they have another additional year to do so; and as we want the appropriations, if they are made, to be such as to give employment to the people of this country at as early a date as possible, I believe that whatever appropriation is made ought to be made in the first instance for the year ending June 30, 1919.

All that was said yesterday upon this question could be repeated to-day, but there is no necessity for it. I wish that we could have Senators in their seats to listen to the discussion of these questions and know why the amendments are made.

Mr. President, if I stood here on the floor and spoke for an hour it would make no special difference as to the vote that will be taken, but I do want a record vote on this particular amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator mean the section?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the amendment I have just offered to strike out $75,000,000. I hope the amendment that I have just offered to the amendment of the committee will be agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, in road construction it is necessary to have the plans several years ahead. The idea is to fix up a good system of road construction and improvement, and the engineers must lay it out. They must be connected with other roads, and unless you have a plan three or four years ahead, it is disconnected and not as systematic as it is with a three years' program. That is the reason why the committee decided that it was better to have a three years' program, so that it could be fixed up systematically and so that the engineers and the department could have a systematic system devised.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will yield, I should like to ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator where he thinks the money is coming from to pay this bill?

Mr. SWANSON. I am satisfied the Government will have plenty of money; but even if we must economize in other things—even if it is necessary to continue taxation—there is nothing that will add more to the wealth and more to the power of the country and more to the comfort of the people than road construction. It is an investment; it is not waste. It is not an expenditure of useless money. I believe there is nothing the Government could do——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I will yield in a minute. There is nothing the Government could do that would be more beneficial and bring a better return than appropriations and expenditures made for road improvement. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. One remark the Senator made has interested me. Will he please indicate where we can economize in other things?

Mr. SWANSON. As soon as all the expenses of the war are over, with the increase of wealth, when we get down to an economical basis, I am satisfied that the Government can have a tax system that will carry road improvement without being onerous.

Mr. THOMAS. That is a very general answer to a specific question.

Mr. SWANSON. If there is anything the Government can spend money for that brings good returns, that brings good profits, that adds to the comfort of the people, it is road improvement.

Mr. THOMAS. If I may ask the Senator from Virginia another question, Is the Senator going to support the proposed increase of the Navy involving an expenditure of $700,000,000?

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator is entirely mistaken about the naval bill. The naval bill now pending in the House, as I understand, providing for the additional naval program, appropriates about $400,000,000 approximately, the expenditure to extend over five or six years. The entire appropriation, as I understand, for this year is about $750,000,000. A great deal of it is temporary, on account of the change to a peace basis from a war basis.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Virginia has not yet answered my question. Who will cut the appropriation down from $700,000,000 to $400,000,000? But I merely ask the Senator does he expect to support the bill?

Mr. SWANSON. I expect to support it should the condition be such that there is no disarmament or cessation of navalism in other countries. In that event, in order to save this country, we should have a Navy adequate to protect our great commercial interests and our liberty and our institutions.

Mr. THOMAS. Is the Senator in favor of reducing the appropriation?

Mr. SWANSON. I will discuss the naval bill when it comes here.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand that; but the Senator stated that we ought to economize in some other direction; and I am in favor of economizing both in other directions and here. I was anxious to ascertain, if I could, from the Senator where we could begin this work of economy. That is the thing I have been hunting for the six years I have been in the Senate, but I can not find it.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand the naval appropriation bill has been reduced a great deal in the expenditure which it carries.

Mr. THOMAS. It has been reduced from $1,250,000,000 to $700,000,000, I understand.

Mr. SWANSON. It has been reduced a great deal more than that, and it has also been reduced from the estimates about two or three hundred million dollars. The appropriation is temporary on account of the changed conditions from war to peace. I have not examined the naval bill in detail so as to speak explicitly regarding it. I simply have the general impression. The bill has not yet come over to the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I regard the third year of this appropriation as the most important of any year provided for in the bill. The department which is to put this bill into force and execution also holds that view. Why? If we are going to enter upon an extensive program of road construction in this country, it must be systematically entered upon, planned, and surveyed, and estimates must be made. State constitutions must be amended in some particulars. We have already authorized that in this bill, in order that all of the States may enjoy that portion of the appropriation to which they are entitled. The third year in this bill, as I have repeatedly said, is the most important of any. States have got to make their plans; they have got to make their surveys and estimates; they have got to provide for raising revenue. Many States perhaps would hesitate about extensive preparations to be made to match the provisions in this bill if they were only to be applied or extended for two years.

The money which is to be appropriated will not be expended until the third year. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] says it is carried over to 1924, but he is mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. I said it could be carried over.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not see how. There is nothing in the bill which authorizes it.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the Senator wants to make that statement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do make it.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to what the bill provides?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will read from the bill. Let us see what the bill says.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me call attention to what the bill says. I think I can find it in a moment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I will read that portion of the bill to which I have referred, and that portion of the bill has not been amended. It was proposed to amend it, but the amendment went out on a point of order made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. So the original law as passed in 1916 is the law that controls this appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say that I had the amendment here before me this morning when I was speaking.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thought that had misled the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I was speaking to the amendment that I had before me.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But that went out; that is not in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That amendment provided for the extension of the appropriation two years instead of one year, as in the existing law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That went out, and is not in the bill. I hope the Senate will carefully consider this matter. There is no economy—in fact, it is a waste, to my mind, to strike out the third-year provision of this proposed law. The States can not possibly make their arrangements economically and wisely to enter upon this extensive system of road improvement unless they have time in which to make their plans, their financial and other arrangements. If you cut them off right at the beginning of the third year, what happens? They have gone on for two years under the provisions of the law; they have entered upon road construction. Everybody, I think, understands how much interested the people of this country are in the question of improved roads and improved means of transportation from the farms to the depots and river landings and finally to the consumer. I do not think anybody need apprehend that under any circumstances we are to be criticized for liberal appropriations for this purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What amount under this bill will be immediately available?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Under this bill the amount which will be immediately available, according to the figures of the Secretary of Agriculture, who recommends this appropriation, is as follows: There will be immediately available for this fiscal year, under the provisions of this law, $170,000,000. Why? Because $70,000,000 of former appropriations have not been applied; the States have not made their plans and accepted the provisions of the law. Therefore that amount of money for two years remains unexpended because of war conditions, as the Secretary of Agriculture states. The plans were all adopted and approved, but the construction was held up on account of war conditions. Material could not be shipped, labor could not be obtained, and therefore road building during the last year or two, during the years which the war was going on, was practically suspended.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then there is $170,000,000 immediately available?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I should be glad to call his attention to the fact that a series of hearings have been going on before the Committee on Education and Labor upon a bill looking toward quite liberal appropriations to meet by employment on public works the threatened lack of employment in different parts of the country. The committee adjourned this morning, after another long hearing, without definite action; but we adjourned with the understanding that we would see how far this bill would provide authority to the use at certain places, perhaps, of part of this appropriation, even before it was met by the State. Could anything be done without embarrassing or hindering this bill to facilitate the very prompt use of this fund where the lack of occupation for labor made it especially important?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think it would be wise to undertake to inject a provision of that kind into this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The bill pending before the Committee on Education and Labor carries an appropriation of $100,000,000, to be used by a board to be designated in the bill, to meet, by providing employment on public works, conditions that may very possibly arise, and which I think we ought seriously to consider.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that I think $170,000,000, as provided in this bill, will be ample to meet that suggestion.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to add that it must not be overlooked that one-half of this money is to be paid by the States.

Mr. KENYON. One-half of the $170,000,000?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to get right down to the question which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has suggested. Can this work go on in the next few months? That is when this labor trouble is coming, and I am looking at it from that standpoint.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It can begin to-morrow, and, in fact, has already begun.

Mr. KENYON. It is necessary to have the States take some action in the matter, is it not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; not many of the States will have to act, although some few will. I have just stated that the Secretary of Agriculture in his letter says that a very large number of these applications on the part of States have been approved, but have been held up on account of war conditions. They could not get the material; they could not get the labor. Now they are ready to go right to work and the money is ready under the old appropriation for these approved contracts.

Mr. KENYON. How many men actually can be put to work, does the Senator know?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know; but I will say that there are 391 projects already under agreement, where the States are ready to put up their share and the Government is ready to put up its share. That work will go on now because the conditions are such that it can be proceeded with. If we pass this bill labor can be obtained and the materials necessary to the building of roads can be obtained, because the railroad conditions have changed.

Mr. KENYON. How extensive are those projects? Are they large projects?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; not very many of them are. They are all in their nature local to the various counties and States.

Mr. KENYON. Can the Senator give any estimate of how many men will perhaps be employed on those projects?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have no definite figures as to that; but I would say unhesitatingly that under this bill, providing for an expenditure this fiscal year of $170,000,000, at least 500,000 men, and perhaps more, can be employed on these roads. The benefit of these provisions is that the soldiers who are returning without employment are going to every State in this Union. They are not going to be discharged and remain in the cities of the East, but they are going back to the States where they enlisted, and they will be there trying to get employment. Under the provisions of this bill men who go back to Alabama or to Wisconsin or to any other State in the Union will be there ready to accept employment at liberal wages when this road construction begins, and it has already begun. As I have stated, 391 projects have been approved, and they are ready to proceed with the work. That is the benefit that will come from this bill.

I desire to repeat before I sit down that the provision of this bill as to the third year is the most important of all. If the provision for the third year is stricken out, the plans can not be made, the financial arrangements can not be made, and the State constitutions can not be amended, as some of them must be amended. This money will remain in the Treasury until the fiscal year for which it is appropriated; not a dollar of it can be expended until the time comes; and I hope the Senate will not consider for a moment the motion of the Senator from Utah to strike out the most important, to my mind the vital, provision of this bill. We had better strike out the first section.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The feature of this bill that appeals greatly to some of us is the first year's work, the work that can be done now. If the Senator had heard the testimony that has been presented to the Committee on Education and Labor, I believe he would be aroused to the necessity of furnishing work during the next six months to a great number of men who will otherwise be out of work.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was suggested at our committee meetings that this bill in the provision for the first year's work would go far toward meeting this necessity. If I could, I would take the appropriation for the last year and add it to the first year, double it now, so as to be sure that we were taking steps which would give an opportunity to furnish occupation to labor where disorganization has arisen, their country having taken the men away from their homes and their occupations by the draft and put them in the Army.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to say just a word more?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We feared that they would be kept at the front all this year; but, thank God, they do not have to stay there, and now that the war is over let us not fail to realize that a duty rests upon us to provide for them as they come home by furnishing an opportunity to work along lines provided for in this bill. I think the opportunity is at least partially presented by this bill; I think they can do a great public service; they can accomplish results beneficial to the entire country, and at the same time we can meet our obligation to see that there is a chance for occupation to the men returning home whom we broke up their former relations to civil life.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the suggestions made by the Senator from Georgia. I could not tell, in response to the question of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], exactly how many men could be employed on road construction under the provisions of the bill for the first year, but there could certainly be employed a great number of men with the amount of money provided. The beauty of it is, Mr. President, that employment will be provided for them in every State in the Union. We are not proposing to go to New York or Philadelphia or Chicago or Boston to spend large amounts of money to give employment to the unemployed, but we are going out to every section of the country, in every State and every county where these men have returned after their discharge from the Army.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. It is estimated that over 50 per cent of expenditures for roads go directly to labor. The character of labor employed in such work, outside of the skilled engineers and road constructors, is not skilled labor, but is the usual kind of labor that in times of distress needs occupation and employment more than any other. If any measure could be devised to give occupation to the character of people who will be out of employment, road construction is generally understood to be the best kind of work for that purpose. It takes care of a class of people who are out of employment, and, in addition to that, the work is of permanent and lasting benefit.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. THOMAS. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. Not yet. As to the amount to be expended for the first year, there was some suggestion that the Senator from Alabama had exaggerated the figures. The estimate here is $170,000,000, as he stated; that is, $50,000,000 of Federal appropriations, to be supplemented by a like amount from the States, making $100,000,000, to which should be added the balance now available from former and present fiscal years from State and Federal sources, amounting to $70,000,000, making the total amount for the first year $170,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the statement has been made that 500,000 men could be given employment under the first year's appropriation. I wish to call attention to the inaccuracy of that statement. Granting that $170,000,000 will be available the first year, if the men engaged on road building are paid $1,000 a year on the average, that would mean employment for 170,000 men. But it is admitted that only half of the amount goes to labor and that the other half is applied to other expenses, so the most that could be employed would be 85,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator object to the appropriation on that account?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I am only correcting the record; that is all.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I stated that I did not have the exact figures and did not know exactly the number of men who could be employed.

Mr. SMOOT. So that instead of 500,000 men who could be employed the first year, there would be about 85,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I presume the Senator from Utah has figured out how many men can be employed. I did not do that, and did not have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator from Utah wish to enlarge the appropriation, so that it will give employment to 500,000 men?

Mr. SMOOT. I would rather do that for the first year than to appropriate money for the third year, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. There are two interests to be subserved—the people living in the country, who use the roads, and the people who are given employment in building the roads. If you can serve the country better by making a part of the appropriation available the third year, it seems to me there ought not to be any objection; not, I submit, because it may not give employment to quite so many men in the first year. We wish to serve the soldiers who will return to their homes without employment, but we also wish to serve the men and women whose labor produces the materials that feed and clothe the world, pay the taxes, and support the Government. In other words, I am interested in taking care of the farmers, whom I consider the substratum of all national prosperity.

Mr. SMOOT. I say that when the third year comes, and long before it comes, Congress will know whether they want to appropriate $75,000,000 or $150,000,000, or whether they are bankrupt, so that they can not appropriate anything. That is all.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have observed that many of the appropriations which are sought for find their excuse in the assertion that the money is needed to secure employment for returning soldiers. We are regaled here every morning, or some part of every day, by complaints that men who have jobs and want to fill them can not secure their discharges. We are told that jobs are hungering for returning soldiers, and the department is seriously criticized and sometimes denounced because those who desire discharges to return to employment can not secure them.

Mr. President, I was 15 years old when the Civil War ended. The press of the country at that time called attention to the reluctance of a great many discharged soldiers to work at all, to return to their ancient employments, or to renew the more prosaic and less attractive forms of civil pursuits; and that was true. It is an unfortunate fact that war begets the lust of adventure and of excitement and of restlessness in the blood of the young men who serve their country. It is difficult for them to lapse back into the lives which they led prior to the beginning of conflict.

I noticed a day or two ago in a New York paper that among the unemployed in New York were 15,000 discharged soldiers, most of them farm boys, who had determined thereafter to live in New York City. I am told by men engaged in the work of mustering out the soldiers that there is a widespread spirit of wanderlust, especially among the farm boys—and it is human nature; we can not blame them—who are not disposed to return to their ordinary pursuits, to the humdrum toil of life. They have got a taste of the world's excitement, and they desire to enjoy more of it.

A gentleman perfectly competent to speak said in my presence the other day that the colored soldiers of the South were on the streets of the cities, wearing their uniforms; that they did not want to work. Of course, that does not include all of them; but they felt—and there, again, it is a natural feeling—that having served their country, and served it well, they are now entitled to the enjoyment of a different life; and, of course, we are encouraging that by all sorts of proposed legislation. I have called attention to the fact that we could not even pass a revenue bill without providing for an appropriation of $400,000,000 for extra pay.

A young citizen of my city came to see me within the week. He said he wanted to get his discharge as soon as possible because his old job was awaiting him. I told him that I had been informed that in my own city of Denver there were 7,000 to 10,000 soldiers looking for jobs. He said, "No; I have just come from there. They are not looking for jobs; they want positions." He said, "There are plenty of jobs." And I know that the farms of this country are literally crying for help.

There are from 60,000 to 80,000 men on strike in the cities of Seattle and Tacoma. There are jobs that can be filled by returning soldiers, and ought to be. We may perhaps find ourselves in the position, I will not say of encouraging but of sympathizing, with organized strikes in the country while at the same time voting millions upon millions of dollars of the people's money to secure jobs for returning soldiers. I think that our principal task is going to be to find soldiers for jobs rather than to find jobs for soldiers.

I am not reflecting upon the patriotism or the enterprise of the young soldier. I am speaking, of course, of an exception to the general class; but it is wrong, Mr. President, to use the argument of a desire to give jobs to thousands of people for the purpose of getting these enormous appropriations out of a depleted Treasury.

Mr. President, the man whom God helps is the man who helps himself; and once we begin this paternal, charitable system of legislation, I do not know where we are going to end it. I contend that the men who stayed at home and who are detailed to work at home, in the city of Washington and in other cities, in carrying out that necessary supplemental task of supplying the Army with its sinews and with its supplies, are just as much entitled to appropriations, that we may now find them jobs, as others. The jobs, Mr. President, are here. The country wants every man. It can find a job for every man who wants a job; but we propose to say to these gentlemen, "We will get you jobs"; and a man who depends upon a condition of that kind for a job, and who accepts it, expects extraordinary consideration.

I have already called attention, in another argument that I presented to the Senate, to the extraordinary fact that under the provisions of this bill specific preference is given to soldiers and sailors, which is class legislation, which provides that the man who pays the taxes must be subordinated to the man who does not pay the taxes in the enjoyment of their expenditure.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment. This should stand upon its merits. If the country needs and should have $200,000,000, let us vote it; but do not let us camouflage our proposed appropriation by saying that it is necessary to give jobs to free, independent American citizens in a country of opportunity, where every man who wants to make a living and to earn it has abundant opportunity to do so.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I think possibly the Senator has answered the question I intended to ask. It was this: Does the Senator believe that there is plenty of opportunity for work and plenty of work and plenty of jobs for those who are seeking them in the country?

Mr. THOMAS. As far as I am able to judge, yes. There are no jobs in New York City for 15,000 men who do not belong there and who will not go home.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will they not go home?

Mr. THOMAS. No; the newspapers state that they intend to make their future homes in these great cities.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. THOMAS. I can answer only one question at a time.

Mr. KENYON. Let me get through with mine. The Senator differs with the Labor Department of the Government with respect to this matter. Now, I agree with the Senator that this proposition of getting work for returned soldiers and all that is being made the vehicle to get great appropriations through.

Mr. THOMAS. There is no doubt in the world about it.

Mr. KENYON. That is true; and I do not believe in it at all; but I should like to think the Senator is correct in his view of the labor situation. The Department of Labor, in this testimony of which the Senator from Georgia speaks, has shown to that committee, by reports from the various cities—and I leave out this Seattle question and all of these strike questions—that the ratio of unemployment has been going up at a very alarming figure. There are not so many unemployed now as to be at all startling, but the ratio of unemployment is startling. For instance, we learn from reports from these centers that on December 13 there were 10,000 unemployed. That has gone up this week to 264,000, and they say there is not a job for every man seeking a job.

The holding back of investment, the holding back of building that has gone on during the war, has had something to do with this situation. Men are not going ahead with building because material is so high and labor is high, and that situation has arisen in the country. I think it is a very troublesome situation. There have been held back by municipalities and States some three hundred millions of public works that already have been authorized. There is a great deal of Government work that has been authorized. Now, if we could go ahead with that, it would not make more public buildings, for instance, but the effort would be concentrated where the unemployment exists. Does the Senator feel that everything is all right; that there is no need along this line?

Mr. THOMAS. No; nothing is all right in this country at all times. If it were there would be nothing to live for. The Labor Department knows, and ought to know, much more about this situation than I do; but I know that in the city of New York, where there is a large amount of unemployment, there are also big strikes going on. Nobody wants to take the place of a striker. We all know, too, that the Labor Department is officered by those representing one species of labor, and that, as far as possible, the unemployed must, or is expected to, at least, identify himself with the organizations in order to get work through this board. I do not mean to say that that is universal; but, if my information is correct, it has characterized the operations of the board in some places.

But, Mr. President, I am satisfied—and this is not peculiar to this war; it is history; it is common experience; it is taking place in Great Britain, in Australia, in Canada, just as it is here; it is human nature—that men who have gone through the terrible and at the same time fascinating excitements of the war are reluctant, many of them, to reassume their civic duties and fill their old positions. I think in every city in the Union there are aggregations of men who have recently been in the Army who want jobs in the cities, while the country is crying and clamoring for help.

Mr. KENYON. There is no doubt about the country crying and clamoring for help.

Mr. THOMAS. And that the congestion in the cities is followed by starvation in the country. The problem before that board and before Congress is to induce men to go back to their old jobs, to go to farming, to go to blacksmithing, and so forth, instead of rushing into these cities and wasting their time in looking for jobs and attending the cheap theaters and other attractions of the cities.

Mr. KENYON. That is true; but, in the words of a great man whom the Senator did not think was a Democrat, it is a condition and not a theory that confronts us right now.

Mr. THOMAS. I know he was not a Democrat. I want to relieve the condition. I do not believe this will do it, however.

Mr. KENYON. I do not know. I hope the Senator is right when he says that there is a job for every man. I am afraid there is not, however.

Mr. THOMAS. There have been times, of course, when that was not the case, and there may be times now when that is not the case. I am willing to concede that; but is this the right sort of remedy?

Mr. KENYON. I do not know. What is the remedy? If there is not some remedy in carrying on public works, what is the remedy? The remedy is not to make speeches about it.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, making speeches is a remedy for nothing, especially in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. KENYON. That is the only way we remedy anything here, so far as I know.

Mr. THOMAS. Unfortunately, that is the only way in which we transact business here. The other House votes, and does not talk. We talk, and never vote; and, of course, I am just as guilty as anybody else, so far as that is concerned. It is difficult to outline the remedy at once; but I say primarily the remedy is to ascertain where jobs are—not who wants them so much as where jobs are. Let these employees ask the farmers of Iowa, the farmers and miners of Colorado—I know that there are mines in my State that need skilled men—and by that means ascertaining the job, then bring the man who is without it to that job, instead of, upon the assumption that we are catering to a greatly needed want, taking two hundred millions out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of making the people of our different States feel so much better because Uncle Sam's money is going to be distributed among them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. THOMAS. I wanted to yield the floor some time ago.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The learned Senator from Colorado always talks interestingly.

Mr. THOMAS. Interestingly and too much.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Interestingly and instructively. No; the Senator from Colorado can not talk too much to suit me. But I would like to suggest this thought, which has occurred to me and which I hope may throw some light on the subject. Primarily the purpose of this appropriation is not to give jobs.

Mr. THOMAS. No; but that is the argument upon which it is based, that it is needed at this time.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Of course, the honorable Senator from Colorado will not be carried off upon that idea. The appropriation is to build roads for the convenience and benefit of the people who live in the rural districts and for the convenience of the country generally. Good roads will cheapen the freight rates, the cost of carrying the products of the farms to market; good roads will facilitate social intercourse among the people, which will also enhance the value of the land and work for better living in the country in every way; good roads will improve the social life of the men and women who have to bear the burdens and the expense of government. Now, if you wish to make country life more attractive, if you would draw from the city to the farm men and women, if you would keep the boys reared in the country on the farm, you have got to make it possible for the farmer to visit his neighbor, to send his children to school, to carry his goods to market, and that will be made possible only by the building of good highways. You have got to bring him into the world, out of his heretofore forced isolation. I think the best investment this Government ever made, one that brings the largest returns to all the people, is the money invested in good highways, because, as stated above, good highways mean good schools; good highways mean better churches; good highways mean better live stock and improved farming implements; good highways improve educational facilities and elevate the moral tone of the community and in every way work for the upbuilding and betterment of society. They make farm life attractive when nothing else will, keep the boys from leaving the farm to go to the city, where they are often engulfed in the maelstrom of immorality and idleness. And I want to say, Mr. President, in conclusion, that when you benefit the agricultural element of this country you improve every other class of society, and you can not benefit one neighborhood in the United States or neglect the interests of one neighborhood without benefiting or injuring the entire Republic.

It is my judgment that the greater part of this money that is going to be spent on the roads will be paid to men now living in the country and soldiers who will return from the Army to the farm. Farmers in all probability will do the greater part of the road work. I do not indulge the hope that you are going to be able to induce people resident in the city to go to the country to do this road-building work. I hope they may go there. The work is healthy, moderate, and the remuneration will be ample, and the man who fails to take advantage of the opportunity thus furnished for employment, and remains idle in town, will prove himself to be an undesirable citizen.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator has repeated the argument that was made when this bill was presented by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I referred to that the other day. There is a great deal in it. It is the argument which carried $75,000,000 through the Senate and the House two years ago, a great part of which is not yet spent.

Of course, good roads are beneficial, but the Senator has not mentioned one thing which this and other appropriations are going to bring to the people, and that is bankruptcy, which, in my mind, is a poor equivalent for the benefits to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not think it will bring bankruptcy. I think this appropriation for roads is a good investment.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, this bill is only one of a number. The total appropriations to be made, pending, and which will be pending during the short life of this Congress will amount to thousands of millions of dollars; and there is just as much basis for the other appropriations at this time as there is for this one. Good roads have $75,000,000 at this time, and ought not to be enriched by $200,000,000, however desirable the benefits that will grow from it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, before I make any remarks upon this amendment, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether he knows if it is to be the policy of the Southern States to continue the employment of convicts in the States on these roads which are to be built by the Federal Government?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know of any State of the South that has ever employed State convicts.

Mr. THOMAS. My State employs them, and I hope it will continue to employ them.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope so, too.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That has nothing to do with this question. Do they employ convicts on the roads in the Senator's State?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes; and that simply brings out the point I want to make in my opposition to this amendment. I think this talk about employing the returned soldiers on the roads is foolishness. In the first place, I do not believe any number of soldiers will be willing to go on the roads and work under the conditions which are demanded. These soldiers have returned from France where they have been under the care of the Government, and be it said to the credit of the War Department they have been well rationed. If they are to accept employment from the Government, or whoever contracts to build these roads, they must submit not to the military rations or fare but to the fare provided by the contractor, and he is going to make as much money out of the contract as he can. Consequently the living conditions and the food will not be of the same standard that the soldiers enjoyed while in the Army. Besides, it will compel the soldiers to go out to live in bunk houses, many of them under uncomfortable conditions, far from home, and what the soldier wants now is to go home and work near his home.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator understand that this provision compels the soldiers to work on the roads?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; I understand that it does not; that it is voluntary, but I say——

Mr. BANKHEAD. If they do not want to go there and live in bunk houses, they will not go.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I say to the chairman of the committee the conditions are such that it will not be attractive to those men. They want to go home and work near their homes. Many of those men have homes, and you can not take them on these roads and induce them in any wise to take that kind of employment.

Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to support any bill which will enable us to employ idle men in this country, but the reason why men are idle to-day is because the manufacturers can not pay the present rate of wages. They can not sell their goods at the present rate of wages, and they are compelled to shut down their industries. Besides that, the manufacturers of this country are unwilling to take any chances in buying raw material or engaging in any future contracts under the present system of taxation. They are afraid to take a chance as to the future.

That brings me to the point I want to make in regard to this bill. I do not want to oppose any measure which will give the States of the Union which have a small mileage of roads an increase mileage through any aid whether State or Federal. Good roads are probably the only medium through which the farming sections of the country and the productive areas of the country can be built up. I think my State alone has had a wider experience in regard to that, for we were the pioneer State in road building. Twenty years ago the State-road act was passed whereby the State aided the counties and the townships in building roads, and it brought great prosperity to the State. I think we were the first State which adopted that plan.

I believe it is a question of grave doubt whether the Federal Government should continue the paternalistic policy of these public improvements for the benefit of the States. There is not enough money in the Treasury to continue these tremendous appropriations. We have engaged in the extension of vocational education, and we passed the farm-demonstration act—I think it is the Smith-Lever Act—all of great benefit to the States and all needed; but the question now arises just as we are emerging from the war, when we do not know what our war debt is going to be, when we must necessarily raise another liberty loan of $6,000,000,000, when it is doubtful whether we can raise that loan. On top of that the statement was made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]—I think on yesterday—that in the fiscal year ending June 30 we will need $10,000,000,000 for governmental expenses. With all that in view I say the time has come, if we are practical, common-sense business men in this Chamber, when we have got to put our feet down on these public enterprises and developments, for a time at least.

The estimates of the Senator from Utah are not all the obligations which the Government will have to meet. I do not think he included in that the billion and a quarter that will be required to keep our faith with the farmers in the $2.26 additional that we agreed to pay for wheat. It does not include the $750,000,000 in the naval bill, an appropriation which the President says is vital to the negotiations for peace just as peace is dawning. There is a $75,000,000 omnibus public-building bill, I understand, pending in the House of Representatives. There will be $1,000,000,000 required to replace the source of revenue which the Government will be deprived of by reason of the prohibition amendment, and we shall have a fixed charge of $750,000,000 interest on our war debt.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is correct in stating that in my estimate, that was made on December 18 last, I did not take into consideration most of the items he has already mentioned, but I may add, if that is all the Senator is going to mention, there are a few more.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is practically $4,000,000,000. In addition to this tremendous amount there are other projects mentioned; $400,000,000 for the development of the Mississippi and $500,000,000 for the development of land under Secretary Lane's proposal for returning soldiers.

Mr. President, this has been the most lavish and extravagant era in American history, and just as we are now struggling to recover from the tremendous burdens of taxation imposed by reason of the war Congress is flooded with projects which are paternalistic in nature. If eventually it is to be the policy of the Government, we should have some systematic plan, not a slipshod catch-as-you-can plan, where a few States will benefit by it and other States will fail to benefit by it, but a system properly studied, a system of national highways, trunk lines running from coast to coast, East to West, North to South, so that every State will be equally benefited. If we are to enter upon a policy of Federal road building, that should be the system and method which we should adopt, not this careless method of appropriating to just a few States.

Mr. President, I shall oppose this amendment because I think it is unwise at this time to enlarge the expenditures of the Government and place great burdens of taxation upon the business and manufacturing interests of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not oppose my amendment to the amendment?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will support your amendment because it reduces the appropriation, and I shall then vote against the appropriation of $200,000,000.

I simply want to read, in closing, from the Democratic Campaign Textbook of 1912 a section of the Democratic platform, entitled "Economy in the public service." The Democratic platform says:

> We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic Government, and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

Again, in the Democratic platform of 1916, under the title "Economy and the budget," we find the following:

> We demand careful economy in all expenditures for the support of the Government, and to that end favor a return by the House of Representatives to its former practice of initiating and preparing all appropriation bills through a single committee, chosen from its membership, in order that responsibility may be centered, expenditures standardized, and made uniform, and waste and duplication in the public service as much as possible avoided. We favor this as a practicable first step toward a budget system.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, although I have been very much interested in these amendments to the bill, and interested, too, in the discussion, so far I have said nothing in this debate. I wish to say this, Mr. President, that if the Democratic Party has violated its platform, as just read by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], in no other or greater way than it would violate it by standing for the present bill, and for that provision of the bill relating to Federal aid for good roads, I could easily excuse the Democratic Party, for, Mr. President, as I view it, the expenditure contemplated by this bill is not at all wasteful extravagance, the thing which the Democratic Party condemns in its platform, nor is it the paternalistic policy described by the Senator from New Jersey.

Under the broad power given Congress to establish post offices and post roads a great deal more may be done by Congress than merely designating a post-road route by declaring that it shall follow certain lines. The power to establish post offices and post roads must mean the power to construct and maintain also, because, though established, laid out, or defined, without the construction of the road the mere laying out or defining of the road might be wholly unavailing.

With that power, Mr. President, not only to establish a post road, but the power which must necessarily follow, namely, to construct and maintain a road, how much has ever been expended by the Government of the United States in laying out, constructing, or maintaining the post roads of the country?

I am not quite sure that I am correct, but my belief is that never a cent had been expended by the General Government or appropriated by Congress for the purpose of constructing and maintaining the Government post roads throughout the country until it was appropriated under the bill passed in 1916, the present law. I think it fair and reasonable to ask the question whether the Government, in the construction of these roads, does not itself owe something to the people in the way of aiding in their construction as post roads and for the purpose of the carriage of the mails.

But, as I say, the Government, until the good-roads law in 1916, had never, as I recall, appropriated a cent for the construction or maintenance of its post roads. Under the law, and under the regulations of the Post Office Department made in pursuance of the law, routes have been designated, of course, and every railroad throughout the country is a post route under the law and under the regulations. But the Government has never expended any money in the construction of railroads or in other roads over which the mails have been carried by city or by rural carriage.

Mr. President, I am for this bill and this feature of the bill on the ground that it is not paternalism, and because it is in pursuance of a wise, wide, and beneficent national policy.

What are the ends of Government? I think one of the great ends is the welfare of the people. What is related to the welfare of the people? Their means of social intercourse, anything that may help them from an economic point of view, education, are all things that pertain immediately to the welfare of the people; and what better means of securing these ends, and thereby securing the welfare of the people, than a system of good roads throughout the country?

Mr. President, it is appalling sometimes when we think of the economic waste that arises out of a system of bad roads, the difficulties and the delays in getting the produce of the farmer to the market, the losses which farmers sustain in many sections of the country because of bad roads.

Communities in certain States of this Union are financially unable, because of their situation, because of their newness, because of their population, because of their lack of great industrial interests to help them, to construct a system of good roads, and when the Government lays out the post roads, since it has power and authority to construct and maintain them, it is but reasonable and natural that the people should say to Congress: "Build half of certain of these post roads of yours as they may be laid out, as the projects may be approved by the State highway commissions, and as they may be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture."

Here are the proper safeguards to prevent waste and extravagance, Mr. President, in the expenditure of the money appropriated. You first have the State authorities passing upon the question, determining whether or not the route is feasible, whether it is needed, whether this post road should be made a good travelable, safe road. It is first passed upon by the State authorities, and then again by the Secretary of Agriculture, and after a survey, preliminary at least, of the route over which the road is to be constructed.

So, Mr. President, with this as our policy, with the underlying thought and need being the economic, social, and educational welfare of all the people of the country, why should not Congress appropriate one-half of the amount necessary to build, construct, and maintain some of the roads which the Government uses for the purpose of carrying the mails?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I am, of course, in full accord generally with all the Senator has stated, but I wish to ask the Senator whether the establishment of post roads is not primarily of local benefit, and when the Federal Government pays the salary of the rural carrier, whether the Government is not contributing to a local benefit?

Mr. STERLING. I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin in the respect that it is primarily of local or community benefit; but, Mr. President, because it is does not excuse the Government itself in denying all aid in the construction of these roads.

Let me call attention, in passing, to the situation in my own State as compared with conditions in other States in the Union, with the conditions in those States from which the Senators come who are most strenuous in their opposition to the good-roads part of the bill. These Senators come from States where there is material in abundance for the construction of good roads. In most of the Eastern States, I think, they have the stone, they have the gravel, and they are near industries which produce other elements of material necessary for the construction of good roads. But out in South Dakota, where east of the Missouri River it is like one great farm, with no gravel of consequence, with little other road-building material available, the people themselves, without taxing themselves to death, are unable to build the roads. Build roads that are good roads for the rural carrier in the first place. Build roads that are good roads for the farmer to use in getting his grain and his stock to market. Build good roads that are necessary for the school children as they trudge their way from home to the country schoolhouse 1 mile or 2 miles or 2½ or 3 miles away.

Good roads will add to the value of the farms along which the roads run. The assessed valuation of these farms will be greater, and not only the States but the National Government itself will in the end and in turn realize the benefit of this increased valuation caused by the construction of systems of good roads through the States.

Mr. President, I have not mentioned one other feature of this bill which commends itself to my mind very much indeed, and that is the feature which provides that preference shall be given to the soldiers, sailors, and marines seeking employment. The Senators who most deplore the labor situation and who are pleased to point out from time to time conditions with which we will be confronted in regard to labor a little later on, seem to ignore this one great means by which labor might be employed. It will mean employment to thousands of men. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] refers to the fact that it will not be convenient for certain laborers because, perhaps, the employment will be too far away from home; but if they are in earnest in seeking employment, if they are in real need of employment, they will not hesitate to go to some place within their own State or a neighboring State where good roads are being constructed through the combined work of the Federal Government and the State.

Mr. President, I appreciate what the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has said in regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], an amendment which would strike out the appropriation for the third year for which the appropriations are to run. The bill would be greatly crippled, the beneficent purposes of the bill would, in a large measure, be destroyed if there should be stricken out the appropriation for the year 1921. I can not state it in any better way than he himself has stated it. The authorities in the several States will require the entire three years in which to make their plans for the building of the projects and for the carrying out of those plans.

Mr. President, as I think over this good-roads amendment, what it is meant for, the good it has already accomplished in the many projects that have been built and those under construction, and of what I believe to be the moderate amount sought to be appropriated by the amendment, I am heartily in favor of it as it stands. I shall vote for it and shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, there are many of us who are heartily in accord with the first two items of appropriation in this section, and it is very unfortunate if, in order to secure what are considered necessary appropriations, we are also compelled to vote for an appropriation that, it seems to some of us, can not be justified at this time. I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah and I hope that it will be adopted.

The eminent chairman of the committee a little while ago stated that he considered this appropriation of $75,000,000 for the year ending June 30, 1921, the most important item of any of the three items of appropriation. He stated that, in his opinion, if any of the three items were to be stricken out of the bill, the first two items should be stricken out and the item now in question should remain. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the report made by the committee, and made by the chairman himself, presumably, so far as the report relates to this subject, with the exception of two or three lines, is devoted wholly to the first two items of appropriation and is based and justified upon the necessity of taking care of unemployment. Upon that ground this appropriation can be justified, and I heartily favor it. I would be willing to vote for $200,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30 next and the next fiscal year for the purpose of building good roads, because I believe that it would take care of the unemployment that now exists and that, I am afraid, is going to increase.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] stated that, in his opinion, there was no necessary unemployment. Mr. President, the facts that are coming to us from day to day and from week to week show beyond any question that unemployment is increasing in this country, and increasing with very rapid strides. That is entirely natural; it is to be expected.

In the first place, industry in this country to-day, Mr. President, is unwilling to go ahead for the future for two reasons: One is that industry does not know what the policy of this Government is going to be with reference to supervision, control, and restriction upon business. In the second place, a very large percentage of the production of this country normally is not for immediate consumption but is for consumption six months or a year from the time of production.

We have this situation in the United States to-day: The local merchant, believing that a fall in prices may follow, will not give his usual and normal orders to the wholesale houses to stock up his store. The wholesale houses do not get the orders, and the manufacturer is not getting any orders to-day for future production. So there must be during this transition period, during this period of uncertainty, a degree of unemployment. It is not the fault of anyone; it is a perfectly natural consequence.

Unemployment existing and increasing, I believe it is the duty and the obligation of the Federal Government during this period to do what it can to alleviate and to relieve that unemployment. It is very much better, Mr. President, to appropriate $100,000,000 or $200,000,000, if necessary, for the building of roads, thus relieving that unemployment, than to have soup houses established all over this land and for men to be compelled to look to charity or to starve. So the first two items in this section can be justified because they are necessary.

I believe that the policy of this Government ought to be to pay every just obligation that the Government has. Beyond that expenditures ought not to be made except for absolutely necessary public purposes; and the relief of unemployment may well be considered as a necessary purpose.

But when we come, Mr. President, to appropriate at this time, in addition to the $125,000,000 that is contained in this amendment—and that I am in favor of—when we add to that $75,000,000, to be used for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, how can it be justified in the present condition of the Treasury? Where are we going to get the money for these enormous appropriations? No Senator who favors the appropriation of this last $75,000,000 has answered that question.

As I stated yesterday, the conference report upon the revenue bill will be before the Senate for adoption in a day or two. The conferees on that bill have agreed to a proposition coming from the other side of the aisle that during the year 1920 all of the taxes that can safely be imposed upon industries in this country, upon excess profits and upon incomes, together with the other provisions of the bill, will bring to the United States Treasury only $4,000,000,000. You upon the other side of the aisle have said in that bill that we can get no more out of the profiteer; that we can not tax wealth any more than that. The difference between that $4,000,000,000 and the expenditures that must be made and the appropriations that are now being made must come from where? That question has been asked a number of times. The chairman of the committee has not answered it; the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], who has just spoken in favor of this bill, has not answered it. It can be answered only in two ways. Aside from a considerable increase in revenue through a revision of the tariff, which presumably the President of the United States would veto when a Republican Congress sends a bill to him, there is no other way by which we can augment substantially the revenues of the Government and that is to reduce the exemption of incomes, so that every person in this land must bear these additional taxes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. So that there may not be an impression that all acquiesce in the public statement that the taxes under the revenue bill, the conference report of which will be presented to the Senate this coming week, will for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, raise $4,000,000,000, I wish now to say that, if the bill passes just as it is printed, it will not raise $4,000,000,000. If it raises $3,250,000,000, it will be every cent that it will provide.

Mr. President, the proposition that that bill will raise $4,000,000,000 is based upon an idea that the business for 1919 is going to be just as profitable as was the business for 1918; and there is not a man in the United States but knows that that will not be so.

Not only that, but I predict now that, with the relief provisions contained in the report, $6,000,000,000 will not be raised by the bill this year. The amount raised will not much more than exceed $5,000,000,000.

I wanted to make that statement in order that it may be taken for what it is worth. I have, however, studied the bill about as much as has any man in the United States, and I feel perfectly safe in stating that we are not going to raise $4,000,000,000 by that bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Utah makes the situation just that much more serious. But assuming that the revenue bill will raise the amount that is estimated for 1920, namely, $4,000,000,000, and the expenditures for that year amount to $8,000,000,000, at the very least, where are we going to get the other $4,000,000,000?

I do not think that the Republican side of this Chamber, that will soon be in control of legislation here, and the Republican majority at the other end of the Capitol are going so to revise these taxes that the burden will fall upon the great masses of people, and the man who earns $400 or $500 a year will be compelled to pay a heavy income tax. I do not believe that they are going to do that in order to meet the enormous appropriations that you are making. In my judgment, when 1920 comes and there is a deficit in the Treasury, the Congress of the United States will then say to the President of the United States, "Your administration is responsible for this condition; go out and borrow money in time of peace." You will have a bond issue in 1920 and you will sweep the Democratic Party from power when you do it. Of course, that is "a consummation devoutly to be wished" from a Republican standpoint; but I would prefer that there be a little sense of responsibility from a national standpoint concerning the expenditures of this Government.

Let me say in this connection, Mr. President, that complaint is very often made by Southern States against Republicans because they have sometimes called attention to what they term a sectional issue in this Government. It is true that the Republicans have called attention to the control of legislation by Southern States; but by the action of Southern States, as represented in both Houses of Congress, they are continually demonstrating that from that section there is very little responsibility from a national standpoint concerning expenditures, provided only the appropriations shall be expended in their own States.

A river and harbor bill might be proposed here, and there is scarcely any sum that might be appropriated in that river and harbor bill that would not receive almost the solid support of the Southern States, provided that they thought they got their share of the appropriation.

Mr. President, Senators have got to have some sense of responsibility to this country as a nation, as well as a sense of responsibility to their own States and to their own sections. Under this bill the $75,000,000 carried by the amendment it is now proposed to strike out would benefit the State of Wisconsin undoubtedly to a greater extent than the taxes paid by the people of my State for the good-roads expenditure; but I should feel that I had no right to occupy a place in the Senate if I were to make the controlling factor of my action upon bills the question whether my State would get more than it paid under a given proposition.

I am in favor of good roads; I am in favor of the Government assisting with most liberal appropriations for good roads. If the Treasury were in a condition to permit it, I would not oppose the appropriation for the year 1921, but it can not be justified under present conditions, and appropriations for good roads at this time at all can only be justified because of the benefit that will also come to the country through alleviating the unemployment that exists and that will increase.

I am therefore in favor of the $125,000,000 appropriated by the first two items of the committee amendment. I shall vote in favor of the amendment striking out the last $75,000,000, and I hope that amendment will be adopted, because, believing as I do in the very great necessity of this $125,000,000, I shall feel sorry to be compelled in order to secure that to vote for an additional $75,000,000, which I do not believe should be appropriated at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the pending amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment reported by the committee, on page 37, lines 10 and 11, after the numerals "1920," it is proposed to strike out "and the sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921."

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, on July 11, 1916, there was approved the road act which had previously been passed by Congress. That act was passed before we entered the war. It had very careful consideration by Congress, and I think that Congress considered that we went as far as we ought to go in providing for ordinary peace-time expenditures in aid of road building by the National Government. I voted for that act.

The amendment that is now before the Senate provides that the sum of $50,000,000 shall be appropriated in addition to the amount provided by existing law, and be expended under the terms of existing law as amended by section 5 of this bill, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, to be immediately available. It also provides that the sum of $75,000,000 shall be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and also that the sum of $75,000,000 shall be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. This latter item is the item which the Senator from Utah by his amendment proposes to strike out.

I was very much surprised at the statement by the chairman of the committee that this is the most important item in this amendment, and that if this item is stricken out the purpose and object of the amendment of the committee will be nullified.

I had the impression, Mr. President, that the committee placed this proposed amendment in the bill in order to take care, to a very large extent, of any possible labor needs that might arise in the immediate future in connection with the readjustment of conditions that naturally grow out of the cessation of the war; and so I was very much surprised to hear that statement from the chairman of the committee. I favor the appropriation contained in the first two items of section 6, not for the primary purpose of building roads but to let the Government set the example for business enterprise to go on, and in that way furnish employment for the men coming home as well as those at home who probably will be out of employment. If the Government stops Government work, private enterprise can not be expected to proceed.

The Senator from Mississippi stated that the primary purpose of this provision is to build roads; and in very eloquent language he described the benefits that come to the country from building good roads. As I said, I did not understand that that was the primary purpose of this legislation. I recognize the great benefits that come from good roads. Nothing can do more to promote the happiness and comfort of living or do more to reduce costs than good roads. I believe in the National Government going as far as it feels that it ought to go to aid in the construction of good roads; but I feel that Congress, in the passage of the act of July 11, 1916, did go as far as it thought the National Government ought to go in normal peace times; and so I believed that the primary purpose and object to be served in the injection of this provision into the Post Office bill was to take care of the possible difficulties in connection with labor during the next year or two. That is the only basis upon which I can justify myself, under the conditions that confront us now, in voting for these two items, and this was the ground stated for it when the bill was reported.

I can see nothing whatever to justify a vote for this $75,000,000 for 1921. There will be ample time between now and then to determine whether or not we should make any additional appropriation for road purposes at that time. I shall not repeat what has been said as to the condition of the Treasury, or the condition of our revenues, or the obligations confronting this Government, or what may be the effect of increasing these obligations at this time and the consequent tax on business and enterprise; but no reason has been presented that appeals to my judgment justifying this appropriation of $75,000,000 for 1921.

I do not consider this, however, from the standpoint of waste. I do not think expenditures for good roads are a waste. I think, rather, they are an investment; and if we were not confronted by the condition of things that confronts us now with reference to revenues and obligations and indebtedness of the Government, and so forth, I would be perfectly willing for us to obligate ourselves to invest $75,000,000 in 1921, and possibly more. We have a bill now on the calendar of the Senate to cancel, in effect, $15,000,000,000 of obligations that Congress obligated this Government to pay for carrying on the war. We did it promptly; we obligated ourselves to pay this money without hesitation, in order to insure the successful ending of the war. This money would very largely have been actually wasted. It would very largely have been expended for ammunition that would have been shot away; and, so far as any good is concerned, outside of bringing the war to a successful close, it would have been actually wasted and destroyed. Taking this into account, I can justify myself in voting for $50,000,000 additional for 1919—I would vote for a larger sum—and even $75,000,000 additional for 1920, for building good roads in this country. That will be a lasting investment; that will result in the future in far greater good than can be measured by the expenditure that we make. I would be willing, Mr. President, under the conditions that confront us, to take this $75,000,000 for 1921 and put it on to the $50,000,000 for 1919 rather than put it in 1921. I think we would have some justification for doing that. I believe that this $50,000,000 in 1919 ought to be increased, because if we need any money to take care of the labor situation, we need it promptly. We need it without delay. There are proposals pending before the Senate and before Congress to appropriate $100,000,000 and larger sums for the distinct and avowed purpose of taking care of the labor situation.

Mr. President, I have not had time to examine all of these proposals. I have examined some of them, and it seems to me that they would not serve the purpose that they are intended or urged to serve, for the reason that they do not provide any machinery for laying the foundation upon which this work can be carried out promptly. I think we have the machinery here. We have the road organization. It is already made upon the part of the National Government. It also exists upon the part of most, if not all, of the States; and, as the chairman of the committee stated awhile ago, as soon as this money is appropriated and made available it can be used upon projects that have been investigated, reported upon, and that are ready to be carried out. Employment can begin at once and the needs of the hour met.

I think the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] suggests that $100,000,000 should be made available, to be expended when and where the Secretary of Labor shall certify that there is unemployment that needs the expenditure of this money.

Mr. President, you can not start upon the expenditure of money for building roads, for instance, until after your engineers have mapped out, laid out, and passed upon the plans to be put into effect; and that takes time. It has already been done here, and that is one reason why I am in favor of this provision—that it takes advantage of the organization already existing, of the plans already made, perfected, and approved. It insures a wise and economical expenditure of whatever money we may desire to expend. The Secretary of Labor has no machinery to lay out this kind of work. He could not begin it to any advantage. The Government can not afford to spend money everywhere there may be unemployment. There must be a project to which labor may come rather than taking the projects to labor.

I do not expect that this money will be expended—not very largely, at any rate—for labor that is now congregated in the cities. It has been suggested here that they are not going to leave the cities and go out into the country to work on roads. That is probably true. I am inclined to think that it is true; but wherever we may start this road building we will get a certain amount of labor that otherwise would be employed somewhere else; and this is in line with the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado. We are going to make employment available instead of proposing to make the unemployed take some particular job. We are going to give the idle man no excuse for remaining idle; and I have very little sympathy for the man who is idle when jobs are calling for him and employment is awaiting him, even though it may not be the kind he especially desires.

Mr. President, I have introduced an amendment, proposed to be appended to the sundry civil appropriation bill, providing for $50,000,000 to be used in carrying on and prosecuting irrigation works that have already been undertaken and on which work has been largely stopped during the war. I had in mind submitting an amendment something like this amendment also. I spoke to the chairman of this committee about it, and he advised me then that his committee was reporting something of this kind. I had in mind what I have just pointed out, that there is an organization already in existence and plans already prepared upon which we could expend the money. So, in connection with irrigation works, we have a great proposal by the Secretary of the Interior that would involve the expenditure of billions of dollars in order to make it amount to anything. It is presented to Congress upon the theory of furnishing employment for returning soldiers. Why, Mr. President, it will be years, under that plan and that proposal, before any work would be ready for them; so I introduced this amendment providing the appropriation of $50,000,000 to be expended upon existing projects—projects that already have been surveyed, estimated for, approved, and in many cases actually undertaken.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. For my own information I should like to ask whether the plan of the Secretary of the Interior, to which the Senator has just referred, is so Utopian, so unrealizable, that it is not available and may not be available for immediate use by those who need employment?

As I understood the Senator it called for the appropriation of billions of dollars, and the plan could not be put in operation for years. I am very much interested in ascertaining whether that is the character of plan which the Secretary of the Interior has formulated and which he is asking the country to adopt.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that if the Senator will investigate it and examine it carefully, he will come to the same conclusion that I have reached, that in order to carry it out to the full extent it will involve the appropriation of billions of dollars and that it will be a long time before it can be actually undertaken to any appreciable extent.

Mr. KING. If there is such a stupendous plan as that, I do not think it will get very far in either branch of Congress; but my understanding was that the Secretary of the Interior had devised a plan which he intended to submit, if it had not already been submitted, which called for the expenditure of approximately $200,000,000 for the reclamation of arid lands, as well as certain swamp and cut-over lands, and from which appropriation there would be drawn sufficient to enable those who desired homes to enter upon those lands and to make a start that would enable them to make a livelihood. I had not heard of the plan that called for the appropriation of billions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, Mr. President, the provision presented does not call for billions. It calls for a hundred million; but there is not anybody that can study that plan for a little while, knowing the conditions throughout the country and what will have to be done, but that will know that that is only a drop in the bucket as to the expenditures that will be necessary to make it of any substantial benefit.

Why, Mr. President, it involves swamp lands and logged-off lands, and involves, before it can be put into effect, the acquirement of those lands by the National Government, because they are practically all in private ownership now; and before they can be made available for homes they must be reclaimed, and these logged-off lands must be cleared, too. I do not know what logged-off lands in other sections of the country cost to reclaim, but the expense in my section is from $100 to $150 an acre. It is all right to hold out the hope of furnishing to our boys homes on logged-off lands; but if there is any boy from the East who will go out and look at an acre of logged-off land in my section and say, "I want to go there and take up and build and dig out a home," he is not a man that is going to spend his time on that sort of land or in that sort of work. He has the courage and the stamina and the determination that will enable him to do something else far better for himself and the country. The Secretary's conception is a grand one. It does him great credit. If it can be worked out, it will be a great thing for the country. I will help work it out. I will be glad to aid those seeking homes to get them. We will have to do something along the lines he suggests if we would have our remaining lands taken up and settled upon. This will take time to work out and carry out. It will not meet the emergency that confronts us.

I should like to see us do something along these lines. I should like to see us make our swamp lands available. I introduced a bill myself, a few years ago, to assist and aid in the reclamation of swamp lands, logged-off lands, and so forth; and I will join with our Senators and Representatives from the States where these swamp lands are, in trying to frame legislation that will result in the reclamation of these lands; and I think it can be very easily done. But those who seem to think that the same kind of legislation that will apply to arid lands will apply to swamp lands are mistaken. You can not enforce the same rules and regulations with reference to the reclamation of swamp lands that you can enforce with reference to the reclamation and irrigation of arid lands. The National Government can put its money into the reclamation and irrigation of arid lands, and it can enforce payment. How? Simply by shutting off water for the man who does not pay. But when you reclaim swamp land it is reclaimed, and you have no remedy of that sort to enforce the claims of the Government to reimbursement. I do not think it would be very difficult to organize districts under which liens could be enforced against reclaimed swamp lands for the money expended by the National Government; but I did not intend to go into that discussion. I will be glad to help frame legislation along these lines and for this purpose, however. I simply want to point out the fact that we have an existing road organization, we have an existing irrigation organization, that can be used at once, and that can use almost any reasonable sum of money that we can make available to carry on these very desirable works, and works that will form reservoirs for the employment of those who are needing work. As I said, I have introduced a provision for spending $50,000,000 on irrigation works already approved or begun. The places are ready. Work can be begun at once. Employment can be offered to-morrow. This is no more than a loan. It will increase production, add wealth to the community, and bring comfort and happiness.

Some criticism is made here of the provision giving a preference to returning soldiers. Mr. President, I do not see any real, just basis for criticism of that. We do make a preference for the soldiers in many different lines. We exercised a preference when we took the soldiers to war. The Government exercised a preference when it selected these men who went to fight our battles; so it is not very much out of place, I think, simply to say that if a soldier presents himself and asks for employment, and another man presents himself at the same time and asks for employment, and you have employment for only one, you should give the preference to the soldier. He has earned it; he deserves it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Since the Government denied the soldier any right to select for himself when he was conscripted and sent to the war, I think it is very proper to give him the preference at the hands of the Government when he applies for work.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think there is anything improper about it, I am sure.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Nor I, either.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not expect very many of the soldiers to ask for this preference. I doubt if very many of them will seek employment to work as day laborers upon these roads. I hope they may not have to do it; but if they do, although there are many worse things, then I can see very much justification for the little preference given here in this bill.

Now, Mr. President, my idea is just this: If we deem it wise to make additional appropriations for building roads or reclaiming arid or other lands in order to take care of a possibly distressing situation that is very likely to confront us, and I do think it wise, let us do it through the organizations that are already perfected and can carry on the work, and do it promptly, so as to meet the exigency of the situation; but let us not obligate ourselves for $75,000,000 in 1921, years ahead. There is ample time to take care of the situation between now and then, and when the real necessities come up.

I hope that that item will be stricken out. I would not object to having this added to the amount for 1919. I really wish that amount were increased from $50,000,000 to $125,000,000. I think that would be wise. That would serve a good purpose.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I shall occupy the attention of the Senate but a moment. Reference has been made by honorable Senators several times to a remark I made a little while ago about the primary purpose of this law being to provide for road building and not to give employment to soldiers or men coming back from the war. I wish it distinctly understood that it is my judgment and my desire that the Government ought to offer every proper encouragement and facility for the men coming back from the war to make a decent support for themselves. I do not think there is going to be any trouble for any man who desires work to find it. As has been so happily expressed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the farmers are crying for farm labor. Not a day passes, Mr. President, but that I receive from 1 to 50 letters from my constituents in Mississippi urging me to use what little influence I may have with the War Department to get their boys out of the Army in order that they may come back and help to make a crop the present year. And let me say just here that if the boys are not permitted to go home pretty soon, they will not be able to make a crop during the year 1919. I think it an outrage, an injustice to the soldiers, and a misfortune to the country that the farmers' boys are not discharged and sent back to their homes.

Now, returning to the question at issue, may I say that it is a very happy combination of circumstances that the provisions of this bill will not only build roads for the people living in the country but will also furnish in road building employment for the unemployed. Two splendid purposes are effected.

The building of these roads will be a positive blessing to the tillers of the soil, who must in the end bear the largest part of the taxation which is to pay for all governmental expenses.

Mr. President, I hope the bill may not be changed by the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. The honorable chairman of the committee [Mr. BANKHEAD] has devoted a great deal of patient study to the construction of this bill. Under his leadership the committee has cooperated with him, and I fear if the amendment offered by the able Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] shall be adopted, it will destroy the symmetry of the bill and the good order of things which the bill establishes when it becomes a law. The effect of the passage of this bill is going to be very helpful and beneficial to the agricultural classes of this country. May I be permitted to impress upon the Senate that when you help the farmers of this country; when you make farm life less burdensome and more attractive; whatever may be done that adds to the fertility of the soil; increase facilities for carrying the products of the farm to the market and bringing from the towns things that the farmers have to buy—in other words, when you help the farmer you benefit every other class of society living beneath the American flag.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I shall not undertake to discuss this measure in any detail. I am extremely anxious that we should come to a vote on it and get it disposed of and go on with other business of the Senate. It is very important that we should dispense with all discussion that can reasonably be dispensed with and proceed especially with the enactment of the supply bills, and we have not any time to lose. I promise to take but a very few moments. I am in favor of the measure and in favor of the bill as reported by the committee, and I hope it will be passed.

I rose more particularly to make some reference to the closing remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. I scarcely feel that those remarks ought to be allowed to stand without comment and to pass unnoticed.

The Senator took occasion to refer to the position of the South in reference to legislation, and the representatives of the South, both in the House and in the Senate, he stated, were devoid of that proper sense of responsibility in matters of legislation. He went on further to say that these representatives of the South were in favor of any appropriation so long as they got their share of it.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I inquire of the Senator from Florida if that statement was made on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. FLETCHER. It was.

Mr. ROBINSON. By whom?

Mr. FLETCHER. By the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], as I caught his statement, and I am quite sure I do not exaggerate it in any way. That certainly was the substance of it and the impression that would be made upon any one hearing the statement.

I am disappointed in that sort of a statement being made here by the Senator from Wisconsin. I can understand how something of that sort might be said on the stump in the heat of a political campaign, for political purposes, but a statement coming like that goes beyond all bounds of propriety or of justice and is wholly unwarranted.

I can not help feeling, frankness compels me to say it, an utter contempt for that man in public or private life who would array one section of this country against another or the people of one section against the people of another section. I have never classed the Senator from Wisconsin among those who would do that, and I do not now. I think he probably allowed his zeal in the argument he was making to go further than he really feels himself he was justified in going. I want to retain that respect which I have always entertained for the Senator, and I propose to do so if he will allow me, but I can not permit a statement of that sort to stand without some protest. Without going into any detailed discussion of that matter or of that idea I would like to put this inquiry: What proportion of this billion dollars that goes to the wheat growers of the country goes to the South?

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was not present when the statement referred to by the Senator from Florida was made by the Senator from Wisconsin. I ask the Senator from Florida if he heard the statement which he has attributed to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes, I am sorry to say, I heard the statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. With the permission of the Senator from Florida, I desire to say that it is inconceivable to me that a Member of this body would make such a statement unless he had the deliberate purpose to insult a large number of the Members of this body.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Wisconsin intended that. I do think that his observations were such that they ought to be responded to and such as were unwarranted. In reference to the illustration which he made in submitting those remarks, to wit, the river and harbor bill, he said that was an illustration of the attitude of the South's representatives here, evidently meaning to say that so long as that bill carried appropriations which were satisfactory to the South there was no limit to the other appropriations the representatives from the South would favor and that might be carried in it, according to their view, without regard to the merits of the different items and projects involved in the appropriations. That is not a fair statement to make. It is not the fault of the South, it is not the fault of southern representatives; it is not a subject about which they should be criticized that there lies south of us the great Gulf of Mexico, the Mediterranean of the Western World, and on its borders are harbors and ports unequaled in any country. According to the great law of nature, water runs downhill, and therefore rivers pour into the Gulf of Mexico, and they happen to run through the South. According to that law of nature water flows to the South Atlantic, and therefore the navigable rivers of the country are largely found in that portion of the country, and it is inevitable if you are going to improve the rivers and harbors of the country you must go where the rivers and harbors are.

It therefore follows that there are provisions in the river and harbor bill which appertain to rivers and harbors and ports which lie in the South; but anyone can take the river and harbor bill and the items of appropriation and readily see, I will venture to say, that more than three-fourths of the amount carried by that bill is spent in other portions of the country than in the South, mainly in the North and East. It is not true that the South gets its undue proportion or even its just and proper proportion of the appropriations carried by that bill, and certainly it is not true that there is any disposition to vote unlimited appropriations in that or any other bill by the representatives of the South on condition that they get what may be considered by them as a satisfactory share of the appropriations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate only a moment. I regard this road provision of the bill as the best piece of legislation that has come before Congress at this session. It provides simply that the present legislation on the subject of roads shall be extended. It requires States or subdivisions thereof to put up an equal amount that the National Government puts up for roads. It provides that it shall be done under existing machinery. It provides for the betterment of the entire country, because when we spend money on building roads we not only benefit the localities but we benefit the entire country.

Mr. President, for a number of years I have strongly advocated this kind of legislation. In the House, before I came to the Senate, I took a very active part in legislation of this character. I recall that in 1911 those who believed in this legislation were derided and laughed at as "dirt-road statesmen," but you will see that in the years that have passed since that time there has been quite a change in the public mind, and now practically everyone knows that there is no better legislation than the kind of legislation embodied in this amendment, and none that means so much to the building up of our common country in a proper way.

It is peculiarly proper at this time, when we have millions of soldiers coming back home, many of whom will be without work. This will give them work, and the kind of work that will build up the country. It is not directed to any State or any part of the country, but it is applicable to the entire country, and it aids the State organizations in building up the country.

There is another statement I wish to make here in reference to this item. I wish to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the splendid work of the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], on the question of roads in this country. He was a pioneer in this movement. I believe he was the author of one of the very first bills many years ago that was brought in to bring to bear the very best efforts of the National Government to build up post roads in this country. At the time he began it was not popular and it took him many years to finally get a bill enacted, but through his efforts and those of his associates, largely through his efforts, the present law was passed, a law that the people of this country have virtually unanimously indorsed. I doubt if one could find a single Member of Congress who would vote to repeal the present law. This is an enlargement of it. The Senator from Alabama has had a long and distinguished record in the House first and then in this body. His name is attached to much important legislation, but never in his career has he done such a splendid work for the entire country as he did in bringing forth from his committee this particular legislation, which will mean more to our entire country than all the legislation that he has been connected with in his long and splendid career.

For those reasons I hope the Senate will vote speedily on this bill. Let us pass it and make it a law. The country approves it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The question is on the amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I shall take just a moment. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], in the remarks made by him, seemed to gather that in his judgment, from the remark made by me a little while ago, I reflected upon the integrity and honesty of Senators from Southern States. As the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] suggested, there was nothing of that kind in the remarks I made.

I was discussing the sense of responsibility for Government expenditures, responsibility from a sectional standpoint as compared to a national standpoint. From my observations during 10 years in Congress I felt justified in making the statement I did. I have nothing to retract. I do not for a moment question the good faith, the integrity, of the Senators from those States, but the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the past years since I have been in Congress at least will demonstrate the truth of what I said.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator from Wisconsin think that now, at all events, we can all be merely Americans, and good Americans, and forget for all time the question of sectionalism?

Mr. LENROOT. Exactly, Mr. President; there is no man in the United States who is more desirous of that than I am, but it can not be done unless every Senator and every Representative, regardless of the section from which he comes, will treat his country as a nation and his primary responsibility to it as a nation rather than as a section.

Mr. TOWNSEND obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to say, before the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] leaves the Chamber, that it seems to me that the two statements can not coincide or harmonize. In one statement he says that he does not intend to question the integrity and the patriotism of the representatives of the Southern States, but, on the other hand, he says that they have an utter lack of a sense of responsibility concerning matters of legislation.

Mr. LENROOT. No.

Mr. FLETCHER. The two statements can not very well stand together.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. That is not what the Senator from Wisconsin said at all. The Senator from Wisconsin said that sectional responsibility comes first, in the judgment of the Senator from Wisconsin, rather than a national responsibility.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no patience with the spirit and attitude emphasized by the further remarks of the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I merely wish to say that that criticism is applicable to every section of the Union.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the public record, and the general estimate of the informed and intelligent, right-thinking people all over the country will prove that the representatives from the Southern States are just as broad-minded and as patriotic, and have just as clear a vision of national needs and as clear a conception of fiduciary responsibility as the representatives from any other portion of the country—North, East, or West.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay action on this measure and perhaps I ought not to say anything, but as a member of the committee and called upon shortly to vote upon this proposition, I desire to say just a very few words.

As the members of the committee understand, I am not enamored with this form of road legislation. I did not think the original proposition was the best way for the Government to engage in highway construction, but we adopted that plan in 1916, and it has to some extent—quite a large extent—been put in operation.

These road projects necessarily are projected into the future to a great extent. I think of all times the present is the worst to curtail or to attempt to curtail in any way the activities of the Government in public improvements. I do believe that inasmuch as we have, as the Senator from Washington has stated, a going machine, an organization for building roads, and inasmuch, further, as it is conceded that the general welfare demands that the Government must encourage those enterprises of a public nature which offer legitimate employment to labor and at the same time supply a public service, it seems wise to me to increase road building. This class of improvement was checked by the war, and now, in this period of reconstruction, the work should be renewed on a larger scale.

I believed and still believe that we ought to have a nationalized system of roads. I hope before another Congress expires we shall have before us a general scheme for building roads which will favorably appeal to a majority of Congress. But it is too late to enact new legislation in this Congress. I suggested a more comprehensive and scientific plan to the committee, but it could not be considered. To my mind it does not make much difference whether we cut out this $75,000,000 for 1921 or leave it in, because if my hopes shall be realized we will change existing law before 1921 and be upon a sound basis for Federal road building.

But I submit, Mr. President, that this appropriation is as wise an investment as we can make now in these disturbed conditions, however difficult our financial situation may be. This investment will at once serve the people in one of the best manners possible and at the same time give employment to the people who require it. I think the appropriation will be used profitably. I hope the various State highway commissions will see to it that it is so expended that it will contribute to a national system, which I am sure this country must adopt sooner or later. I want the United States to build national highways, so far as it is able to do it, and assume responsibility for them. Let the States build the laterals, but have a system of national highways extending through every State, east and west, north and south.

I have not been pleased with the administration of this law in the Department of Agriculture. I think the money has not been as wisely expended as it should have been, but we are learning in the matter of road building. The States themselves are cooperating now, and every year makes them wiser in the matter of road construction, and I can not believe that very much of this money will be wasted. Therefore, Mr. President, while I am not heartily in favor of this system, because I believe there is a better one, nevertheless it being inaugurated and this being the present opportunity to render aid in this emergency of reconstruction, I feel it is wise to pass the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment to the amendment. I, with others, shudder almost continuously when I think of the amount of money we are expending, but I do not know of any better way of spending money, if we undertake to furnish employment to the returning soldiers and others, than to take advantage of the machinery and plans like this State and Federal road building, already planned and in process, something that will afford employment, that can keep them from poverty or idleness, something that is helpful and will take them into parts of the country where they are most needed in agriculture and other lines and relieve the congestion in the cities.

There are many of the States, especially in the North, in which little can be done in the winter, and while this sounds like three years—1919, 1920, and 1921—as a matter of fact it is simply two seasons. The third season is a matter of May and June, quitting in July, and leaves very little of that working season. So if we are to pass this measure at all I believe we ought to pass it with the $75,000,000 proposed for this third expenditure.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. KING. Probably with the reorganization of the Congress the distinguished Senator from Wyoming will be chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The Senator may be called upon to prepare appropriation bills or aid in their preparation calling for at least $10,000,000,000—possibly a little more—for the year 1920. Has the Senator thought of the avenues from which the funds are coming with which to meet it?

Mr. WARREN. For what purposes?

Mr. KING. For governmental purposes, for obligations many of which already have been created, for obligations which have not yet matured but which, as sure as the day follows the night, will mature, and which will have to be met by the Government. Does not the Senator think that it is about time to try to practice a little economy and quit trying to find plausible reasons to justify every sort of an expenditure under the sun?

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator consider that this is a rather forced plausible reason for the expenditure of money where we can employ the returning soldiers?

Mr. KING. I think the argument of the Senator has been a fallacious one and the reasons assigned in support of the appropriation are fallacious but plausible.

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator for his comment. I will say to him, with reference to my service upon the Committee on Appropriations, that that committee does not provide for the income of the country. It does not provide for the outgo except to appropriate money that has already been called for through legislation.

Mr. KING. Of course, the Senator, I understand, takes the same position as the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who said that the duty rested upon the Finance Committee to provide the money, and that the rest of the Senators—that was the idea—would spend it. I do not think the Senator ought to shirk a responsibility which must rest upon us all.

Mr. WARREN. The distinguished Senator from Utah nearly always finds a way to allege something wrong with appropriations necessary to run the Government. He has been quite successful in some of those attempts to defeat legislation, but I think he will have to bear with us this time and carry the bill through just the same.

When the Senator talks about my remarks being fallacious I enjoy that, as he evidently does, but I am in good earnest when I say that, if we are to spend any money at all in building these roads, we want to give those States an opportunity to make some use of it that have not so far obtained the use of it. The taking of this last year off leaves it simply with one full season. So far as that is concerned, the benefit to the States of the last $75,000,000 is more valuable dollar for dollar than either one of the others.

When it comes to the matter of employment of labor, I hesitate to say, nevertheless I believe it is true, that we will need just as much in the way of public works and looking out for labor in 1920, and even in 1921, as in 1919, because other Senators know as well as I do that we have had a declaration from those who undertake to represent labor that there will be no reduction in their wages. We know from all quarters that the consuming public is not now buying anything except from day to day, because they expect lower prices. Hence the retailers have not been buying of the wholesalers; the wholesalers have not been buying of the manufacturers or producers; work in manufactories is slack; and the consequence is that business must hesitate somewhere until it can reorganize, and it will take at least two or three years for that reorganization.

Now, shall we employ our men to the best of our ability during the time; and if so, how? The Senator will not deny that the building of roads in this country is more needed than any other improvement in a public way or a local way. Now is the time for us to pass this bill. I am perfectly content to see the bill beaten, as I am to see other matters of public buildings or matters of improvement generally, if we are to cease all public work and all expenditures and let the business of the country go to the dogs; but if we are at all to consider the matter of labor, the matter of our workingmen having employment, then I want to take it, as the Senator from Washington has already said, where the tools and working machinery are present, where plans are already made, and everything is ready to engage labor at once.

I have no sympathy with the workingman who wants to stay in the city and would rather stay there and starve or partake of charity than to go into the country and work on a farm or work on roads. We talk very much about "back to the farm." What inducement are we offering to people to go back to the farm? Shall we erect buildings in large places to give employment to these men, to keep them from going into the country, or shall we do something in the way of improvement in the country, in the new parts of the country, where these men can not only be afforded daily, monthly, yearly labor, but where they will contribute something to the welfare of the country that all can use.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with what the Senator says, but I wish to ask him if it would not be very much better to furnish employment in this way to men who want it and need it than to furnish food to unemployed men?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I was very much alive 25 years ago, when we had Coxey's armies and soup houses and bread lines; I do not want to see them again; but I say to Senators in all earnestness, if we do not act wisely in providing in some way for the men who are coming home, for the men who are being discharged from the Army and those who will be discharged by manufacturers who can not pay out 100 cents and only get back 50 cents, we shall have those times over again, and perhaps worse.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, among the justifications for this appropriation is the one referred to by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]; that is, to give employment to the unemployed caused by the return of our soldiers to civil life. The Senator says that there are only two seasons in which this money can be used. I think he is mistaken in that.

Mr. WARREN. I spoke of the Northern States.

Mr. SMOOT. I say in any State.

Mr. WARREN. If I am not mistaken, this appropriation would end on the 1st day of July, 1921, two years from now.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. WARREN. I am speaking of the bill where it reads——

Mr. SMOOT. But it refers to the present law. The money can be expended under the present law, and that law extends the time.

Mr. WARREN. I am very glad it does.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all I desired to do was to say that this appropriation as a whole can be expended for the season of 1919, it can be expended for the season of 1920, it can be expended for the season of 1921, and for the season of 1922. I believe it is unwise, Mr. President, for us to begin to make appropriations to take care of the unemployed in 1922.

Mr. WARREN. Am I to understand that there is anything in this bill which we now have under consideration that alludes to 1922?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. It says that these appropriations are to "be expended in accordance with the provisions of said act." That is the act of July 11, 1916.

Mr. WARREN. But that matter is not before us to pass on.

Mr. SMOOT. But the money is to be expended under that act, and that extends the appropriation a year. This is what it provides; and if Senators will look at it they will see that there can not be any question about that statement. I make it without hesitation. So, Mr. President, I say that it is unwise for us to appropriate money to-day to take care of the unemployment for the year 1922. It may be that before that time we shall have not only to spend $75,000,000 or $200,000,000, as the whole appropriation provides, but that we may have to spend many times that sum. However, let us not legislate until we are informed as to conditions.

Mr. President, as I look at the situation by which we are confronted to-day and consider the obligations this country has to meet for the years to come, I am appalled.

Mr. McKELLAR. We can repeal this next year.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I will say to the Senator that it can not be repealed, for I say that there never has been an appropriation made under conditions of this kind where it was ever repealed.

Mr. McKELLAR. This is right; and we shall not repeal it, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator says this is right. I disagree with him.

I am perfectly willing to increase the $50,000,000 provided for this year in order that the unemployed may be given employment in the near future, and I am perfectly willing to take the $75,000,000 provided for the fiscal year 1920, add it to the $50,000,000 made immediately available, and let the $125,000,000 be spent as quickly as possible.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to end this controversy. The Senator from Utah says he is perfectly willing to add this seventy-five millions for 1920.

Mr. SMOOT. I say seventy-five millions, making it $125,000,000, and cut out $75,000,000——

Mr. BANKHEAD. For the third year—1921?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And add that to what?

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to allow the language to read as follows—now, I want the Senator to follow me:

SEC. 6. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of said act, as herein amended, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $125,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and to be made available immediately, to be expended in accordance with the provisions of said act—

Referring to the act of July 11, 1916. In other words, it means that we should appropriate $125,000,000; that it shall be immediately available, and with the view that it shall be spent upon the roads to take care of the unemployment in this country. I want to ask the Senator from Alabama if he is willing to accept that?

Mr. McKELLAR. If I understood the Senator, he does accept it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it the purpose of the Senator to make the appropriation for 1919 $125,000,000, and then stop and make no further appropriations?

Mr. SMOOT. That is my proposition.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, of course, nobody could accept a proposition like that, except the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator now understands my proposition. Of course, he was perfectly willing, as I see now, that we should add $75,000,000 for this year, but he also wanted the other appropriation for the following year. Anybody who is in favor of this kind of legislation would accept a proposition of that kind.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. The law which exists to-day runs to 1921. We do not extend the law; we simply increase the appropriations under existing law.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. SWANSON. If a system of road improvement were started, we thought it would be unwise to stop it abruptly. We have not tried to extend it to 1922 or 1923, over what the existing law provides for. This is simply to increase the appropriations for expenditure under the existing law.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I want to be perfectly frank with the Senator, and I will say I think that when we begin the building of roads by the Government, it ought to be under a well-digested plan for the expenditure of the public money. I remember two years ago when the first proposition was brought before Congress in reference to this matter, I offered at that time a substitute for it, providing a general plan for road building in the United States. When the proper time comes, I intend to again offer that same amendment, providing for a road system. I have no idea that it will be accepted, for it takes no money out of the Treasury of the United States, but I wish to say that when I presented the proposition two years ago—and it is not any plan of mine; I do not want to take any credit for it; I have no right to receive any credit for it—it was not to be adopted because of the fact, it was said, that it provided a great big system of road building throughout the country, and that we wanted something immediately.

The plan two years ago was to appropriate $75,000,000 as a temporary measure, and, of course, Mr. President, it is like all other temporary appropriations. They soon find their way into the regular appropriation bills; and the policy adopted in the temporary appropriations becomes permanent.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Utah has assumed that I was mistaken in my statement, and I am always modest enough to admit that I am mistaken; but I should like to have him show why I am mistaken; why he contends that this bill is appropriating money for 1922 for this purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill under section 5 extends the time one year by reenacting existing law.

Mr. WARREN. I am not speaking of what is in the Senator's mind. I am speaking of what is before us and what we are to vote on.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought I had previously explained it to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Utah made no explanation that was satisfactory.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I can not give any other. The law provides an extension of one year.

Mr. WARREN. The bill alludes to the law of 1916; but there seems to be a difference between the Senator from Utah and others in regard to the law of 1916.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not give the Senator any other explanation than I have already given.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly there is nothing in this bill that carries the appropriation for 1916 beyond what the bill itself carries it. It can not be that way; and no explanation can cover it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all I ask in my amendment is that the $75,000,000 provided for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, be eliminated from the bill. That will still leave $125,000,000 to be appropriated for this purpose. With the $125,000,000 and the $70,000,000, provided the States put up their share, there would then be $195,000,000 to be expended upon the building of this class of roads, and I think that is going a long way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to the amendment of the committee. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think we had better have a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

So Mr. SMOOT's amendment to the amendment reported by the committee was rejected.

Mr. KIRBY. I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 6 it is proposed to add the following:

And provided further, That none of the funds herein appropriated shall be expended for improvements whereon convict labor is employed.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, it has been urged that this appropriation is necessary largely because it will furnish an opportunity for employment to returning soldiers and sailors. There is at this time, as one Senator has suggested, an insistent demand in the country that the soldiers who have not yet finished their education and intend to resume their studies should be discharged so as to permit them to do so. There is a crying need for all soldiers who have been engaged in agriculture heretofore to be discharged immediately in order that they may resume their occupations before it is too late to make another crop.

Now, in regard to the amendment here proposed, a great many of these roads will be built by contractors. The contractor is interested in building roads at as little expense as he can build them properly for and in getting as much money as he can procure for the construction. I do not believe that convict labor should be permitted to be employed upon the roads that are expected to be built under the provisions of this bill in order to give free labor an opportunity for employment. If the contractor is permitted to employ anyone whom he may desire, he will probably procure convict labor.

I do not think that a man who has been a good citizen in his community, in his State, and in his nation, who has not violated the law but who has helped to bear the burdens of the Government and of taxation, should be competed against by the convict, who has not done these things. The man who has violated the law, who has not been a good citizen, and who has made it necessary that he should be convicted and imprisoned should not be furnished an opportunity to be employed to the exclusion of the other man.

I move the adoption of the amendment and hope the Senate will act favorably upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KIRBY. I call for a division, Mr. President.

On a division the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "marines," in line 15, page 37, it is proposed to insert the following:

But any other preference or discrimination among citizens of the United States in connection with the expenditure of this appropriation is hereby declared to be unlawful.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think that should come after the word "marines," at the end of the proviso. It makes the proper connection there.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I call for a division, Mr. President; and I will say a word about this amendment. We allow a preference here in favor of the soldier. I am willing to have that done; but I am not willing that Government officials or anybody else, in the expenditure of Government money, shall discriminate among citizens of the United States in the expenditure of this money otherwise than as to soldiers. That is, I am not willing that an officer of the Government shall say: "You can not work on this road unless you belong to some organization of some kind or character."

That is the purpose of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I have been requested by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to call up an amendment which he has introduced to the bill, and I ask that it may be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 13, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed for and in behalf of the Government of the United States to join in the construction of a tunnel or tunnels for the use of vehicles, animals, pedestrians, and vehicle-borne traffic under the Hudson River, between some point on the island of Manhattan, State and city of New York, and some point in Hudson County, State of New Jersey, pursuant to plans to be agreed upon by the parties aforesaid.

And for the purpose above stated the sum of $6,000,000 is hereby authorized, $1,000,000 to be paid out of the sum appropriated for the improvement of roads in the year 1919, $2,000,000 out of the sum appropriated for the improvement of roads in the year 1920, and $3,000,000 out of the moneys appropriated for the year 1921.

This money, however, or no portion thereof shall become available or payable until the States of New York and New Jersey shall within two years from and after the approval of this act have appropriated the sum of $3,000,000 for the same purpose.

The United States Government is to be repaid for the money advanced for the construction of this tunnel by the paying of tolls on a basis to be fixed by the United States and the States of New York and New Jersey.

That the tunnel or tunnels constructed under this act, together with their approaches and terminals, shall be lawful structures and shall each be recognized and known as a post route, and is hereby declared to be a post route, and no charge shall be made for the transportation of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, this amendment, proposed by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], is for what is known as the vehicular tunnel under the Hudson River. In the recent strike of the boatmen on the rivers and bays of New York there were 500,000 people who were prevented for two days from being able to go to their business from New Jersey and Staten Island to New York. The movement of troops and property was delayed, the mails were delayed, and there was a great deal of embarrassment by reason of this condition.

New York City is a great national asset. Seventy per cent of our troops and 60 per cent of the supplies for the Army and Navy left the port of New York. New York and New Jersey in 1918 paid nearly $1,000,000,000 into the Treasury of the United States, a sum much in excess of all of the States west of the Mississippi River and four times the total amount paid by all the States south of the Mason and Dixon line.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know that I am opposed to the Senator's amendment, but I am utterly opposed to the comparison which he makes as to the amount which New York and New Jersey pay in comparison with the Western States. A vast amount of the income taxes, and so forth, of the Western States are paid in New York, but they are earned in the Western States. The great corporations of the West have their home offices in New York, and therefore the payments are made there.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Continuing, Mr. President, I will state that of the $200,000,000 carried in this good-roads proposition, $65,000,000, at least, will be contributed by New York and New Jersey, and the sum they will receive in return through this appropriation will be less than $12,000,000. It is asked for by every business and manufacturing organization in New York and New Jersey.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I make the point of order against this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator want it to go back to the original one?

Mr. SWANSON. If section 5 is in order——

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the original amendment is not general legislation, this is not.

Mr. SWANSON. I beg to differ with the Chair. I submit that this one is and the other one is not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, the Chair will carry it back to the original one, if the Senator from Virginia wishes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to take it back and renew my point of order to section 5, if it can be done under the rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not saying that it can be done; but the Chair is saying that he will not take up a part of this matter and decide that it is general legislation, and not decide the whole thing to be general legislation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I renew the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To this amendment?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; and I ask that it be taken back to section 5.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the situation of the Chair: The Chair believes that this legislation is general legislation, but it was decided by another presiding officer that it was not. The Chair therefore concludes that the best thing to do is to let the Senate settle the question for itself.

Mr. THOMAS. I will raise the point of order when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, may I ask what the parliamentary situation is? Does the Chair rule the whole amendment out?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not done anything with it at all. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the whole legislation is general legislation and ought to have gone out on a point of order; but it was not so decided, and if part of it is not general legislation then nothing is general legislation. A former occupant of the chair for the purposes of this bill having held that it is not general legislation, the Chair is not going to come in conflict with that ruling on this bill. The Chair refers the point of order to the Senate for determination.

Mr. THOMAS. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays on the question of whether it is general legislation.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, does an affirmative vote sustain the point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. An affirmative vote sustains the point of order.

Mr. SWANSON. That is, to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to the absence of my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut, which I transfer to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Has the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. STERLING. I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina. I understand that if that Senator were present he would vote as I shall vote, and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Has the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. THOMAS. I have a general pair with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] on account of illness.

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement and transfer of my pair as on the last roll call, I vote "yea."

The roll call was completed.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a general pair with that Senator and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. PENROSE. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARDING (after having voted in the affirmative). I note that the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] did not respond to his name. I therefore transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the negative). I wish to inquire whether the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a general pair with that Senator. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to understand clearly the significance of a vote "yea" or "nay" on this proposition. It is not clear to my mind, and I believe that some other Senators are in doubt as to the significance of the "yea" and "nay" votes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair refused to decide the question. The question is, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A vote in the affirmative signifies that it is in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think the question is altogether misunderstood, then.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I call for the regular order. The roll call can not be interrupted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, that is undoubtedly the rule; but Senators ought to know how they are voting.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if I may say so, on an inquiry made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make the point of order that under the rule the roll call can not be interrupted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is strictly true, and strictly the point of order ought to be sustained by the Chair; but surely——

Mr. LODGE. I think the rule ought to be either sustained or not sustained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Surely the Senator from Massachusetts does not want the Senate to be voting with a mistaken idea as to the point on which it is voting.

Mr. LODGE. Of course if the Chair does not enforce the rule, I have no remedy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well. The Chair will sustain the point of order, at the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, is a parliamentary inquiry in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. According to the rules, it is not. The roll call is proceeding. The Chair wanted to make it straight if he could.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to change my vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I voted under a misapprehension. I desire to change my vote——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. There is some confusion on this side of the Chamber as to the parliamentary situation. I request that it be stated. The statement has been made here that the vote was upon the question of sustaining the decision of the Chair. As I understand, it is a vote directly on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. ROBINSON. Well, what is the question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wanted to explain, but the point of order was made that there was a roll call proceeding and that no explanations were in order, and the Chair had to sustain that point of order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Chair may be permitted to explain the parliamentary situation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But at least, Mr. President, give us the subject upon which we are voting. Let the Secretary state it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not object to the request of the Senator from Tennessee. I rise merely to state that I do not think it is out of order to make a parliamentary inquiry and ask for a statement of the question that is being voted upon. That is what I desire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair refused to pass upon the point of order which was raised, and submitted it to the Senate. The vote must be, therefore, as to whether or not the Senate believes that this is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, upon that statement I desire to change my vote from "nay" to "yea." [Laughter.]

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I desire to change my vote——

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, it depends upon the form in which the question is put as to whether it is general legislation. It seems to me the question is, Is this legislation in order? If we think it is in order, we vote "yea." If we think it is not in order, we vote "nay."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, the Senate can vote on it in that way. The Chair does not care.

Mr. SWANSON. The question is, Which way did the Chair state it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair stated it the other way, but the Chair thinks the Senator from Virginia has it right. That is what the Chair was trying to straighten out, but he could not; namely, Is the legislation in order?

Mr. SWANSON. That is all right. Those who think it is in order will vote "yea," and those who think it is not in order will vote "nay."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, with that statement, I desire to change my vote.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings under this roll call be vacated, and that the question be restated by the Chair, and a new roll call be held.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. Now, this is the question: Is the amendment in order?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, may the amendment be stated?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, my information was that the question submitted to the Senate was as to whether or not the amendment was germane to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not at all.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I mean, the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMAS. That was not my point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order was that it was general legislation.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question to be voted on is, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. OVERMAN. What amendment? The amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey, as I understand?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I think it is scandalous for Senators to sit here and vote without knowing what they are voting on.

Mr. LODGE. When the Senator from Montana is through I will address the Chair. Mr. President, I was only going to say that the usual method, as I have observed it here, when a question of order is referred to the Senate is whether the point of order is well taken; in other words, shall the point of order be sustained? The question is on the point of order. I think I am right in that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the point of order, and the Chair stated it originally as the Senator from Massachusetts has done; but upon reflection the Chair, not having ruled and leaving it for the determination of the Senate, believes the question to be voted upon is, Is the amendment in order? That enables the Senate to determine the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. When a point of order is submitted the Chair either overrules the point of order or declares that it is well taken. Now, that decision is submitted to the Senate. If the Senate considers the point of order well taken it votes "yea;" if it considers that the point of order should be overruled it votes "nay."

The VICE PRESIDENT. It really makes no difference how it is phrased, so Senators know how they are voting.

Mr. LODGE. Not the least. I quite agree.

Mr. HARDING. May I ask the Chair whether the decision on this specific amendment submitted by the Senator from New Jersey on behalf of the Senator from New York applies to the general good-roads appropriation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not. It applies only to this particular amendment.

Mr. LODGE. It applies only to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington calls for the reading of the amendment, and it will be read.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], for and on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], submits the following amendment:

On page 37, line 13, after the word "act," insert:

"Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed, for and in behalf of the Government of the United States, to join in the construction of a tunnel or tunnels for the use of vehicles, animals, pedestrians, and vehicle-borne traffic under the Hudson River between some point on the island of Manhattan, State and city of New York, and some point in Hudson County, State of New Jersey, pursuant to plans to be agreed upon by the parties aforesaid.

"And for the purpose above stated the sum of $6,000,000 is hereby authorized, $1,000,000 to be paid out of the sum appropriated for the improvement of roads in the year 1919, $2,000,000 out of the sum appropriated for the improvement of roads in the year 1920, and $3,000,000 out of the moneys appropriated for the year 1921.

"This money, however, or no portion thereof, shall become available or payable until the States of New York and New Jersey shall, within two years from and after the approval of this act, have appropriated the sum of $3,000,000 for the same purpose.

"The United States Government is to be repaid for the money advanced for the construction of this tunnel by the paying of tolls on a basis to be fixed by the United States and the States of New York and New Jersey.

"That the tunnel or tunnels constructed under this act, together with their approaches and terminals, shall be lawful structures and shall each be recognized and known as a post route, and is hereby declared to be a post route; and no charge shall be made for the transportation of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question as determined by the precedents of the Senate is, Is the amendment in order? That is the way the precedents read, though the Chair believes the Senator from Massachusetts is right. Is the amendment in order?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I shall vote, upon that statement of the question, "yea," believing that the amendment is in order, whether it is general legislation or not, because it is an amendment of an amendment which is general legislation. With the other amendment pending before the Senate, undoubtedly it can be amended by an amendment on the same subject. I desire to make this statement so as to make it clear that it does not indicate my opinion on the merits of the question. I expect to vote "nay" on the amendment when it is submitted.

Mr. SWANSON. I think the amendment is clearly in order, but I think it should be voted upon on its merits. I shall vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. Are we to understand that a vote "yea" means that the amendment is not general legislation and a vote "nay" means that it is general legislation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; if you vote that the amendment is in order you are deciding that it is not general legislation. If you vote that it is not in order, you are deciding that it is.

Mr. SWANSON. If we vote "yea" we decide that it is not general legislation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. If we vote "yea" we decide that it is in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I wish to make a suggestion. I suggest that we take a vote direct on the amendment. If there are enough votes to put it in the bill, all right; if not, let it be defeated.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In order that there may not be any misunderstanding as to my vote on this matter, I do not vote with the understanding of the matter stated by the Senator from Virginia. He stated that a yea vote would be that it was in order and not general legislation. I think, on the contrary, it is in order and is general legislation. The question, I understand, is whether it is in order.

Mr. LODGE. That is all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand that the money proposed to be appropriated here is to come out of the $75,000,000 provided by the committee for 1920 and the $75,000,000 provided for 1921, and as long as that amendment is pending it seems that an amendment of this kind would be in order, whatever might be the result on the general amendment as amended. The Senator from New Jersey proposes to take money out of money already provided in the amendment and to use it for a specific purpose. I think it is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The roll will be called.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know the roll call has been started, but I want to know what the question is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the amendment in order?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then my proposition to vote directly on the amendment was rejected?

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let us vote!

OTHER SENATORS. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the roll call.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Because of my general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is necessarily absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN]. In his absence I transfer my pair to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). Again announcing the transfer of my pair, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, resulted—yeas 39, nays 18, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas are 39 and the nays 18. So the Senate decides that the amendment is in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], but as he would vote the same as I would on this question, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to my colleague [Mr. BAIRD] and vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as on the last vote and vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and I am informed he is not in the Chamber. As I am unable to arrange for a transfer of my pair upon this vote, I shall refrain from voting. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I desire again to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] and that he is paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. My colleague is absent on account of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair and transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as before and vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded,

Mr. MCKELLAR. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on account of illness and that he is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS—12.

France	Kenyon	New	Thomas
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Spencer	Wadsworth
Jones, Wash.	McNary	Sutherland	Weeks

So Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOSES. I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the committee amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 15, after the word "marines," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That any money expended by the United States Government in the construction of military roads in any State to and from (but not within) any cantonment, aviation field, or any property used for military or naval purposes, shall first be deducted from the amount apportioned to such State under this appropriation.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, it is well known that many miles of enduring concrete roads have been constructed during the last year and a half by soldier labor in the vicinity of camps, cantonments, aviation fields, and other military establishments which were set up. Those roads will all be serviceable for postal purposes and will all inure to the benefit of the States within which they were constructed. This amendment seems to be wholly in line with the equitable view which the Senate is taking of this measure as a whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I call for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All those in favor of the amendment to the amendment will rise——

Mr. PENROSE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], and so I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made before, I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] and vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN] to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as on the last ballot and vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and so refrain from voting. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as before. I vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PENROSE. I will transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], who I note has not voted, and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—28.

Borah	Henderson	La Follette	Nugent
Fernald	Johnson, S. Dak.	Lenroot	Penrose
France	Jones, N. Mex.	Lodge	Pomerene
Frelinghuysen	Jones, Wash.	McNary	Smoot

Hale	Kenyon	Nelson	Sutherland
Harding	King	New	Wolcott

NAYS—28.

Ashurst	Fletcher	McKellar	Overman
Bankhead	Gay	Martin, Va.	Pittman
Beckham	Kirby	Myers	Poindexter
Pollock	Sherman	Sterling	Townsend
Robinson	Simmons	Swanson	Trammell
Shafroth	Smith, Ga.	Thomas	Underwood

NOT VOTING—40.

Baird	Gerry	McCumber	Shields
Brandegee	Goff	McLean	Smith, Ariz.
Calder	Gronna	Martin, Ky.	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Hardwick	Norris	Smith, Mich.

So the amendment of Mr. MOSES to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment to this bill, on which I desire to submit some observations.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BORAH. I yield first to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know what the program is to-night with reference to adjournment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I announced on yesterday that I would ask the Senate to remain in session to-day to consider this bill, and if it should not be passed before that time I would ask the Senate to remain in session to-night in order to dispose of the measure. I am still of the belief that that ought to be done; but I find so many old-young Senators here who appear to be exhausted from the day's session that I am inclined to make this suggestion: If we can get a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on this bill and all amendments thereto to-morrow at 4 o'clock, I shall be willing now to take a recess.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator means to begin to vote at that time, does he not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I mean to vote during the calendar day, and I will ask that after 3 o'clock——

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest to the Senator that he make it 4 o'clock.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will ask the Senator to wait a moment—that after 3 o'clock to-morrow all speeches shall be limited to 10 minutes. Is that agreeable?

Mr. LODGE. And that the vote be taken before the end of that calendar day.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And that we shall vote to-morrow before the end of the calendar day on the bill and all amendments thereto.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator make that 4 o'clock?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it would be very proper to allow the discussion to run until 4 o'clock, and then after 4 o'clock have the speeches limited to 10 minutes each and vote upon the calendar day, as has been suggested.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not the Senator think that a 10-minute speech is enough from now on?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I realize that the Senator from Idaho wants to make a speech, and I want him to make it, because he is always interesting and is going to speak on an interesting subject, and I want him to take all the time that he cares to occupy.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho does not really want to make a speech; he wants to have the amendment proposed by him adopted, and if it can be adopted without a speech—if that will be an inducement—he will not make the speech.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think it can be adopted without the speech of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. THOMAS. And perhaps not then.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think that it would be proper to limit the speeches to 10 minutes after 3 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. The subject which the Senator from Idaho is going to bring up is a very important one, and I think he ought to have opportunity properly to lay it before the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I agree with that; but I think the Senator from Idaho can probably do that in an hour, and he will have ample time before 3 o'clock if he begins in the morning.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I desire to offer a substitute for the road provision, and I want some time to explain it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all true, and I want the Senator to have ample opportunity. Mr. President, I will change my proposition and suggest that we take recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow——

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that we can not do that because of a conference that is to be held to-morrow morning, which will prevent Senators coming here.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well. How would it do to limit speeches to 10 minutes after 3.30 o'clock?

Mr. SMOOT. That will be all right, I presume.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do I understand, then, that it is agreeable that at not later than 3.30 o'clock to-morrow all speeches will be limited to 10 minutes, and that we will vote on the final passage of the bill and amendments thereto during the calendar day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The SECRETARY. Mr. BANKHEAD asks unanimous consent that not later than 3.30 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Saturday, February 8, 1919, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill, House bill 13308, an act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition, and that after the hour of 3.30 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I move to strike out from the request as stated the words "without further debate." That is rather inconsistent with the allowance of 10-minute speeches.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, it is generally understood what the proposition is, namely, a vote on all questions to the final passage of the bill itself by 12 o'clock midnight of to-morrow, and that after 3.30 o'clock to-morrow no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes on the bill itself or on any amendment. Is there any objection among the Senators present?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to the request as it has been stated by the Chair, but I have objection to it as read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, the phraseology will be changed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask whether or not under that agreement we could vote, if the time came to vote, upon any amendment prior to 3.30 o'clock?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly. If there is no objection upon the part of any Senator present, in accordance with the rule the Secretary will call the roll to develop the presence of a quorum.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Simmons
Bankhead	Kellogg	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Kendrick	New	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Kenyon	Nugent	Smoot
Curtis	King	Overman	Sterling
Fletcher	Kirby	Penrose	Sutherland
France	La Follette	Pittman	Swanson
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Poindexter	Thomas
Gay	Lodge	Pollock	Thompson
Gore	McKellar	Pomerene	Underwood
Henderson	McNary	Robinson	Vardaman
Johnson, S. Dak.	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Warren
Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Sheppard	Wolcott

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. Is there any objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, which will be stated by the Secretary?

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that on the calendar day of Saturday, February 8, 1919, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 13308, an act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 3.30 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, as I understand the reading of the agreement, it says we shall proceed to vote without further debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On that calendar day, which will be up to midnight. By midnight the Senate must vote. It is in the regular form. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. At what time will we stop debate under that agreement?

The VICE PRESIDENT. In time to give a vote. The Chair has been in that predicament once, and started the vote about five minutes before midnight.

Mr. POINDEXTER. With the understanding that it will not be more than 15 minutes before midnight, I shall not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will give the Senator from Washington all the chance he will need. Is there any objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. BANKHEAD obtained the floor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for the adoption of a concurrent resolution authorizing the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to sign the name of the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] to a conference report? The Senator from California is away, and the Senator from Nevada has a telegraphic communication from him, and we desire to have that consent given by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 30) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Hon. KEY PITTMAN, as one of the Senate managers, is hereby authorized to affix the name of JAMES D. PHELAN, as one of the Senate managers, to the conference report on bill S. 2812, entitled "An act to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, gas, and sodium on the public domain," under oral authority and by telegram requesting such action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, Mr. President; I object to its presentation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall object to the presentation of it at this time.

Mr. PENROSE. I join in the objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to know something more about it.

Mr. PENROSE. I want to look into it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is only a question of whether the Senator from Nevada can sign the report. The Senator from California is absent, and the concurrent resolution simply gives authority for the Senator from Nevada to sign his name to the report.

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand an objection is made to that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator insist upon the objection?

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the concurrent resolution goes over.

DAVID E. GRAY.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up and dispose of House bill 1607. It is a very simple matter, but it affects my State considerably. If it provokes any discussion I will withdraw it. It is a bill for the relief of a postmaster at Greeley, Colo., whose post office was robbed some years ago and who needs to have this bill passed for the purpose of settling his accounts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1607) for the relief of David E. Gray.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of David E. Gray, postmaster at Greeley, Colo., in the sum of $10,088.09, due to the United States on account of postage stamps and other stamped paper on account of losses resulting from burglary of said post office on July 1, 1911.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS AGAINST MEXICO.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senate seems to be in a good humor, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution 399.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 399, submitted by Mr. KING on January 29, 1919, as follows:

Whereas claims aggregating millions of dollars in compensation for damages to property and for personal outrages and destruction of life, suffered by American citizens in the Republic of Mexico, have been filed with the Department of State for presentation to the Government of Mexico; and

Whereas some years have already intervened between the commission of such damages and outrages and no progress is apparently being made toward the liquidation, settlement, and payment of such claims: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate whether or not said claims have been presented to the Government of Mexico, and what steps and measures are being taken to prosecute such claims and to liquidate and settle the same, and if said claims have not been presented, then to report to the Senate what steps and measures are contemplated to be taken with respect thereto and when the department will proceed with the same.

Mr. KING. The resolution has been unanimously reported by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR HUSTING AND THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE DAVIDSON.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I give notice that at the proper time I shall move for a session of the Senate on Sunday, the 23d of February, to be devoted to memorial exercises for the late Senator HUSTING and the late Representative DAVIDSON, of Wisconsin.

RECESS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 8, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 7, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who are supremely great and glorious, infinite in all Thine attributes, impart unto us that uplift of the spirit which shall strengthen our grip on the things which make for righteousness and broaden our views of life and its purposes, that we may go forward to larger achievements in the things whereunto Thou hast called us; for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4743. An act for the relief of Francis Stewart.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 13353) to extend the provisions of the homestead laws touching credit for period of enlistment to the soldiers, nurses, and officers of the Army and the seamen, marines, nurses, and officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States who have served or will have served with the Mexican border operations or during the war between the United States and Germany and her allies.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 1847. An act to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Wyoming National Forest.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4743. An act for the relief of Francis Stewart; to the Committee on Public Lands.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Is it in order to move that the House go into executive session?

The SPEAKER. Of course it is, when you have got anything to go in on. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Well, it occurs to me that we have got something to go in on. We have an appropriation asked here of $700,000,000 which we are asked to vote upon because of a communication which is said to have come to the Committee on Naval Affairs which could not properly be made public. Of course the responsibility is upon the House, not exclusively upon the Committee on Naval Affairs, in making this appropriation.

It occurs to me that in view of the fact that it is not advisable to make public this communication the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs might be willing to move to go into executive session, where the communication would be kept entirely secret.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think it would. I will say to the gentleman that I will show it to any Member of the House in personal confidence.

The SPEAKER. All this conversation is out of order. If the gentleman from Mississippi wants to make any remarks to the House, the Chair will recognize him for five minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes, Mr. Speaker. I did not know until now that Members of the House could see this telegram or that it was open to all Members.

Mr. PADGETT. I have shown it to several Members.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes. I had heard that several Members had seen it, but the House has not seen it.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I will show it to you.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I can not see why the gentleman thinks it would not be kept secret if it were submitted to the House in executive session.

Mr. PADGETT. I have been on committees for 15 years, and we have been holding executive sessions, and everything that was done in executive session was published in the newspapers next morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Then, Mr. Speaker, if the House does not go into executive session and this communication is shown to every Member, every Member will know it. Of course, if they want to make it public they can do it just as well as if it were made known in executive session.

When I made the suggestion I did not know that the communication would be made available to the Members of the House. I do not make the motion to go into executive session, but I wanted to know if it would be in order if the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of his own motion would make the motion to go into executive session, so that the matter can be presented and we can know what the situation is.

Mr. PADGETT. The truth is I have told the House already the sum and substance of it as plainly as I could, except to give the language.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I yield the floor, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15539, the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15539, the naval appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15539) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS.

Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks: For general maintenance of yards and docks, namely, for books, maps, models, and drawings; purchase and repair of fire engines; fire apparatus and plants; machinery, operation or repair, purchase; maintenance of horses and driving teams; carts, timber wheels, and all vehicles, including motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles to be used only for official purposes, and including motor-propelled vehicles for freight-carrying purposes only for use in the navy yards; tools and repair of the same; stationery; furniture for Government houses and offices in navy yards and naval stations; coal and other fuel; candles, oil, and gas; attendance on light and power plants; cleaning and clearing up yards and care of buildings; attendance on fires, lights, fire engines, and fire apparatus and plants; incidental labor at navy yards; water tax, tolls, and ferriage; pay of watchmen in navy yards; awnings and packing boxes; and for pay for employees on leave, $7,500,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for clerical, inspection, drafting, messenger, and other classified work in the navy yards and naval stations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, shall not exceed $1,000,000: Provided further, That no part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used for the purchase of passenger-carrying automobiles.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of inquiring as to the method the committee followed in arriving at the estimate of the appropriation of $7,500,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. There was appropriated last year $10,500,000. The committee had very extensive hearings with the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and inquired into the purposes for which the appropriations were to be used. It is the general operating fund to carry on all the work of the navy yards and stations, and we concluded that $7,500,000 was the lowest they could get along on.

Mr. STAFFORD. What were the component parts of the gentleman's estimate of $7,500,000? I am directed by a member of the committee to page 275 of the hearings.

Mr. PADGETT. It is the general operating fund of the navy yards and stations.

Mr. STAFFORD. While the gentleman is searching for the details of his estimate, I wish to direct the attention of the gentleman and also the attention of the House to the fact that this appropriation bill of two years ago carried only $1,774,000 for this item. Now, it is hard for me to understand how in two years the appropriations on a peace basis would jump from $1,774,000 to $7,500,000. That is some jump for the maintenance of the yards.

Mr. PADGETT. During the war and the last few years there has been a tremendous development and expansion in the yards, calling for enlarged activities. You will find it on page 273.

Mr. STAFFORD. That condition was rather present when we appropriated the money for this purpose during the fiscal year 1917.

Mr. PADGETT. No. In the last appropriation bill we appropriated $10,500,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. But two years before we appropriated but $1,774,000 for these identic purposes.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; that is true. But you must bear in mind that the enlargements of the yards have been many, many times over what they were in the year before that.

Mr. STAFFORD. But I make the statement that in no instance have they been fivefold; and even if they had been fivefold, the amount of this expenditure should not be proportionate.

Mr. PADGETT. There are many more yards and very much enlarged activities. The gentleman must bear in mind that the appropriations for yards and docks in the two years from March 4, 1917, are over $300,000,000. Now that property has to be taken care of. It has to be maintained, it has to be repaired, the operations have to be supported.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are you not maintaining it up to a war basis?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; we are not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman give the information which I originally sought, as to how he arrived at this large appropriation of $7,500,000, a jump in two years from $1,774,000?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the chairman of the committee that, of course, it is a partial war basis, because all these yards will have to repair the ships that are being used for transport service and temporary service during the period of demobilization.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit? Does the gentleman mean to say these yards were not being used for repair purposes in the year before last, when we appropriated only $1,774,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but in the year——

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any information as to how the committee arrived at $7,500,000, or was it just a wild guess?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, the gentleman is getting excited.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not getting excited. I am waiting for information, but still have not received any.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman from Wisconsin has taken most of the five minutes himself.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I have not. I have waited for the chairman to give me information, and I am now waiting for the gentleman from Michigan to give me information. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes, and I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan to give me the information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. The total appropriation, including deficiencies, last year was $14,288,000, and the expenditures were $14,311,654, making an additional deficiency of $23,000 up to the present time; and instead of having to take care of a small number of ships, when the armistice was declared the number of ships was something like 2,000. Many of those ships are still in operation and will have to continue until we get back to an actual peace basis. The operations in the yards have largely developed and extended many times over, and this is the operating expense of all the yards and stations throughout the country; and as suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], we are not on a peace basis yet. We are in a transition period, trying to get to a peace basis.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that out of this appropriation the mechanics and other employees of the navy yards are paid?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no.

Mr. PADGETT. No; this is for the maintenance and upkeep of the yards.

Mr. BUTLER. Maintenance and repair.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that that was the purpose, but the gentleman's general statement led me to believe that he intended to convey that it was for the pay of mechanics and help.

Mr. PADGETT. No; I said the upkeep and maintenance of the yards.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it is for the upkeep and maintenance, how should this appropriation increase fivefold just because there are additional ships to be repaired?

Mr. PADGETT. Because the number of ships is more than fivefold. We had about 2,000 ships. We have had a large development of yard expenditures.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; but in no instance fivefold.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at the Philadelphia Navy Yard and not at the New York Navy Yard, not fivefold in any instance.

Mr. PADGETT. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the appropriation for yards is very great. In the last few years the expansion is over $300,000,000. That property has to be taken care of. It has to be maintained. It has to be looked after. It has to be repaired. It has to be kept up. If you will look at page 1083 of the hearings, at the second hearing of Admiral Parks, you will see this:

Admiral PARKS. Now, in the navy yard at New York the bureau had an expenditure for 3 months of $22,400, which would be for the 12 months in the neighborhood of $110,000. The expenditure was for the 3 summer months.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, that is for that one yard?

Admiral PARKS. Yes, sir; for that one yard.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, run over in your mind and what would you estimate it to be for the whole naval service?

Admiral PARKS. Great Lakes in the $12,500,000 had $1,200,000, while a recent station report had $1,000,000 estimated for coal, which was in excess of my estimate for the purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Admiral PARKS. They had $2,000,000 estimated as their requirements from Yards and Docks appropriation maintenance, and I had $1,200,000; the total estimate for coal is about $1,400,000, leaving out the training camps.

The CHAIRMAN. For the year; something in the neighborhood for the year of $1,400,000?

Admiral PARKS. Based upon that average for New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, then, you stated about labor, and you gave the proportion of the rise of labor. How much do you estimate in a general way for the item of labor under this appropriation?

Admiral PARKS. Aside from the classified employees, watchmen, telephone operators, pilots, etc., about $3,000,000—$3,000,000 or $3,250,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, including the others, your classified employees are specified in the limitation of pilots and such employees as you have named. What do you estimate will be necessary for them?

Admiral PARKS. That to-day is $3,031,040.12.

The CHAIRMAN. Those three items will make more than $7,500,000. You expect to reduce that, don't you?

Admiral PARKS. To $2,000,000 for classified employees.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you have got a number of other items that compose that, haven't you?

Admiral PARKS. Yes, sir; our water is another large item. I do not carry the quantities in mind very well, but one station that I have in mind right now has 2,000,000 gallons a day on a 12 cents per thousand rate.

He went into the whole matter in detail, and he stated that it would be with the greatest difficulty that he would get through on the $7,500,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in further answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin, I want to call attention to the fact that this item includes the coal, oil, heat, light, fuel, everything going to the maintenance of all these various yards and docks. The bill in another place carries an appropriation of $20,000,000 for the repair of ships that have been taken over by the Government during the war and which we have agreed shall be returned to the owners in substantially the same condition in which we obtained them.

A good share of this repair work will be done in the Government yards without doubt. So that this incidental temporary work which the Government finds itself under obligation to do greatly increases the expenditure necessary under this item.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. PADGETT. The investment of the Government in the various yards is something like $475,000,000, and this is to maintain the upkeep of these yards based on that, and is, as I say, seven and a half million dollars.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The chief of this bureau, somewhere in the hearings, testified that repairs in the yards during the next year would be as great as during the period of active operations of the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. The seven and one-half million dollars is the revised estimate of the department?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes. They asked for $12,500,000 originally for the period for which we are making the appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was predicated on the idea that the war would continue?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; and that we would even expand if the war had continued.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman furnish the House the segregated items of the expense which warrant this appropriation of seven and one-half million dollars.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I doubt whether it could be done. I doubt whether the amount to be expended in each yard—the maintenance, the upkeep, machinery, freight, amount of electric light, coal, the hauling and draying, and everything of that kind—could be fixed. That is probably not possible to do because nobody can tell exactly the expenses of operation of these great plants employing thousands of men, during the next fiscal year. But if you base it on 225,000 men for the Navy—my recollection is that the bill the gentleman refers to in 1916 carried $1,750,000——

Mr. STAFFORD. I am referring to the bill of 1917, where the appropriation in the naval bill for this item was $1,754,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Last year there was a deficiency, which brought it up to over $14,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. But then we were on a war basis.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We are on a war basis still. I am trying to convey to the gentleman what he evidently desires to know, what there is in this bill which could not be found in the ordinary time of peace, and back when we had a Navy of 65,000 men—because that is all we had at the time the appropriation was made. You can check up the appropriation more or less on the increase in the number of men. I am not saying that the increase of this item would be in proportion to the number of men in the Navy, but it would be reasonably so; so you can tell somewhere within reason what the maximum amount would be. If when we appropriated $1,750,000 we had only 65,000 men, you could multiply that by three and one-half and get somewhere in the neighborhood of what it would take for maintenance of the Bureau of Yards and Docks; and that probably would be too low because of the large number of ships that we must turn back to the owners. I think there are several hundred ships which must go back to the owners and which must be repaired and put in shape before they are returned. Exercising the best judgment we had, we accepted the estimate of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, because there was no other way.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Is the estimate for this item on the basis that these ships are to be taken out of commission?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We have a great many hundreds of every kind of ship taken over during the war. There were many small yachts, tugboats, and other small craft, and we agreed with the owners to return them at the end of the war in substantially the same condition as we received them. We carry an item of $20,000,000 to carry on the work itself, but there will be a large amount necessary for light, heat, coal, and everything incidental to the repairs of these ships, in addition to the actual repair of the ships. We are carrying the troops back from Europe and carrying supplies for the Army as long as the Army is in Europe.

Mr. PADGETT. This is not used for the actual repair of the ships, but the activities of the yards are increased and the expenses are very much enlarged because of the activities; this is for the upkeep for the number of yards we have in operation.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. This item is a very large sum to be appropriated for the maintenance of the yards and docks of the Naval Establishment. It has been very greatly reduced in amount by the Naval Affairs Committee. We felt that we had reduced it to the point where we had better halt. So that we might act with some intelligence we asked the Bureau of Yards and Docks to furnish us the amount of money that had been spent for the Navy on the land in the last 18 months, or up to November 4, 1918. That was through the war period, when we had to expand, and expand very quickly. The itemized statement shows that the expenditures during that period for the Navy on the land, including the expenditures in yards as well as for aviation stations, everything touching the Navy, amounted to $332,904,263.63, an enormous sum of money, but none of us were willing to say that it had been extravagantly spent or uselessly spent.

The purpose in having this memorandum of expenditures furnished to us was to enable us to learn for the future how it will be possible, in order to maintain the Navy on a peace basis, to reduce some of these items. This is but the beginning. I do not think any gentleman on this committee ought to feel that the Naval Committee did not give this its earnest consideration, and as you go along in these different items making appropriations you will see how carefully we have scaled them down, indeed, sometimes quite wildly, our purpose being to get back as near as we could to an economic peace basis. Yet, at the same time we must bear in mind always that the Government has a great deal of property here. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has told the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that perhaps the Government property inside of these yards would be worth nearly $500,000,000, and we have a lot of property outside of the yards. Therefore we must be careful to preserve it and keep it well, not with a view of being upon a war basis, but we have it on hand. What to do with it just at this time we do not know, but we must have enough money to preserve it carefully and properly.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In further answer to the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin, the amount carried in the bill of August 29, 1916, was $1,174,000, and to that was added a deficiency of $1,032,000, so that in that peace year, before we got into the war at all, we had $2,206,000 appropriated for this item on a basis, as the gentleman will remember, of 65,000 men in the Navy. If you will multiply that by anything like three or three and a half, you will get a sum somewhere near the amount suggested.

Mr. BUTLER. We have done the best we could do. We have been hastened in obtaining these appropriations that we might assist the department in preparing itself for war.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I think that matter has been fully explained. I would like to ask as to the language on page 22, lines 10 and 11. Among the items in the paragraph is the following: "Machinery, operation or repair, purchase."

Mr. PADGETT. That means for the repair and purchase of machinery in the shops.

Mr. MANN. Why not say so, if that is what it means? Why not say "operation, repair, and purchase of machinery."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, that is what it does say.

Mr. MANN. I suppose it is so construed, but certainly that is not what it says.

Mr. PADGETT. That is the language that has been in there since I have been on the committee, some 14 years. There never has been any criticism of it. We did not change it.

Mr. MANN. Very well. I suppose the committee will never get to the point where it studies grammar while it is studying naval affairs.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that this paragraph has to do with the purchase of coal and other fuel. In that connection I have a letter from Mr. John Moore, president of the Mine Workers' Union, which I would like to have read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is this a similar letter to that which was placed in the RECORD yesterday by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD]?

Mr. EMERSON. I do not know.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Ohio yesterday obtained permission to insert a letter——

Mr. EMERSON. This is a letter addressed to me personally.

Mr. STAFFORD. That letter was addressed to Gen. SHERWOOD personally. I suggest that the gentleman withdraw his request until he can examine the first page of yesterday's RECORD, to ascertain if the same letter is sought to be inserted twice.

Mr. EMERSON. I withdraw it for the present.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Bureau of Yards and Docks: For contingent expenses and minor extensions and improvements of public works at navy yards and stations, $150,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, may I have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. My colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] desired some time in general debate. We were unable to give it to him. Would the gentleman be willing that he should speak out of order for five minutes now?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to use a little time of the House this morning to call attention to some conditions which I have already brought to the attention of the House in connection with the soldiers. Last December I introduced a resolution to investigate the Bureau of War Risk Insurance Department, and a meeting of the the Rules Committee was held and a hearing granted. Before that committee, besides myself and several Congressmen, Col. Lindsley appeared, and upon the statement which he made the Rules Committee deferred any action for a period of 30 days. My conclusion on that proposition is that I believe that the same reason exists for an investigation of that bureau now that existed at that time, and I insist that some attention be given to this question by the Rules Committee.

I have another matter here affecting the soldiers and their families in the same way. It has been called to the attention of the House by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and by others. It is in regard to the delivery of mail to soldiers on the other side. Yesterday Gen. Pershing sent a statement to this Government, to the War department, to the effect that mail was being delivered and that there was now no delay. This morning's mail brings to me a case which I desire to call to the attention of the House. It is a letter from a sister of a soldier who has mailed several letters to her brother, who is wounded. Another brother of hers was killed. These letters are in my hands at this time, and they have the following marks upon them. One letter was mailed at Honesdale, Pa., September 25, 1918, and was addressed to Sergt. Albert H. Morrison, Company E, One hundred and ninth Infantry, Twenty-eighth Division, American Expeditionary Forces, by way of New York. This letter has been returned, with the following written upon it in lead pencil:

Hospital—wounded. C. P. O. Tours, 10/21. A. W. L.

Then, in red ink, appears the following:

N. C. 11/23/18.

There are three of these letters that are picked out of many that have been received, and I desire to have read in my time the following letter.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, before that is done, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Not long ago I received a letter from a young man who is in France, a soldier from my district. I say a letter—it was not a letter, in that sense, for he had just taken the back of a small envelope that had been sent to him and wrote just a little note on the back of this envelope.

He said it was impossible for the boys over there to get stationery for them to write a letter back home. Now, that is another condition that exists over there with the boys to-day.

Mr. MCFADDEN. Before this letter is read I would like to say that I called up the Casualty Bureau of the War Department this morning and I find that Albert H. Morrison has a gunshot wound of right arm and left side of upper lip. He is still in the hospital in France.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MCFADDEN. I have only five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I just want to say, like the gentleman who has the floor, that I have received a large number of envelopes, the very envelopes, which went to France and came back, although properly addressed. Like the one to which he called attention, they were marked "Wounded, C. P. O.," and so forth. It is idle to talk about the soldiers receiving their mail when we all know they do not get it.

Mr. MCFADDEN. That is the point I am endeavoring to make perfectly clear, that in spite of the fact that Gen. Pershing says these letters are being delivered they are not being delivered. The responsibility is somewhere, and it must be fixed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the letter in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

HONESDALE, PA., January 17, 1919.

Hon. L. P. MCFADDEN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: "Do your bit for the boys 'over there'" has been the cry for the past two years—and we've done it! The boys in the trenches and behind the lines have been nobly taken care of through the excellent work of the combined war charities—Salvation Army, Red Cross, Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association, Young Men's Hebrew Association, Knights of Columbus, Jewish Welfare Board, and kindred organizations. But what if a fellow has the misfortune to accidentally get in front of a stray bullet, which plows through his face, removing a few teeth—a trivial matter, to be sure—and otherwise mussing up a perfectly good countenance to such an extent that he had to be taken to Base Hospital No. 86 to be "remodeled"? Of course, worse things could happen, and anyhow it's all in the game. But what I want to know is, Is that the time to have this "humane treatment" suddenly cease? Do you call it doing the square thing for the boys who are making the world safe for democracy to refuse them all news from home? And you know what emphasis has been put on that touching little phrase, "Write to the boys," and the stress that has been put on the heart-rending plea to "Send news from home to the boys over there." All very well and good—not to say exceedingly enobling. But is it your idea of a good time to write, and write, and then write again, and continue to write until you've nearly ruined the point of your Waterman, and then, out of an otherwise unclouded sky, suddenly have a pack of letters addressed to Sergt. Albert H. Morrison, Company E, One hundred and ninth Infantry, Twenty-eighth Division, American Expeditionary Forces—yes—have the same letters that you wrote returned to you? A few mystic pencil marks scrawled across the envelope inform the world in general to this effect:

"Hospital—wounded. C. P. O. Tours, 10/21. A. W. L."

"N. C. 2/13/18. Return to writer."

I'll explain. Sergt. Morrison is my brother. The only big brother I have now, as my other brother made the "supreme sacrifice" about three months ago while in the service. Our last letter from the brother who was wounded says, "Won't you write? I haven't had a darn letter since I've been here." Rather tough, don't you think so? Not a word from the home folks, for whom the soldier boys are said to have such tender regard. All through neglect of our Government post-office employees. Where is this wonderful system, so boasted of, whereby every soldier is so catalogued that a mere glance is sufficient to tell the searching eye just what is what about that particular soldier? This miraculous "Open Sesame" to the history of this particular soldier—my brother—could tell them that he was wounded. Now, why, with perhaps a trifle extra exertion on the part of the investigator, couldn't the whereabouts of this wounded soldier be ascertained? A wounded soldier! Isn't that the one time when he would crave for news from home? And, of all times, that is the one when such wished-for letters are withheld. Instead said letters are merely inscribed, "Wounded—in hospital. Return to writer."

I think the world has a thing or two to learn before it reaches the supreme heights in its education along the finer lines of "humanity" if it considers it "humane" to withhold mail from a wounded soldier—intentionally! Most surely "Wake up, America," is a very apt expression.

Yours, very truly, FLORENCE M. MORRISON.

During the reading of the above letter Mr. MCFADDEN's time expired, and he was granted an additional minute.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC WORKS, BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS.

Hospital construction: Naval hospital, Fort Lyons, Colo., $275,000; contingent, $225,000; in all, $500,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read. I wish to inquire whether the hospital at Fort Lyons is now in existence?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes, sir; they have about 500 tuberculosis patients there.

Mr. STAFFORD. My attention has this minute been directed to the hearings, and I have just glanced at them. This is the only tubercular hospital for the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. This is the only one I recall; yes, sir; and the demands on it are increasing tremendously, and the Surgeon General, Dr. Braisted, stated it was full up now.

Mr. STAFFORD. And will continue to increase by reason of the fact of our enlarged enlisted force?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy yard, Boston, Mass.: Two 25-ton floating derricks, $40,000; shore facilities for Commonwealth Dry Dock, South Boston, $500,000; in all, $540,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I rise largely to inquire as to what action was taken on the resolution or act we passed in the closing days of the last session authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to purchase the dry dock at Boston and relieve the Commonwealth of Massachusetts from the responsibility of maintaining that dry dock and operating it for the benefit of the United States of America?

Mr. PADGETT. We provided for taking over and operating it, and this appropriation is in conformity with the provisions of that act, and it was stated at the time that the provision was made and the authorization was given here that there would be some part of the appropriation used in order to fit up some of the small shops in order to make the dry dock useful.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall the discussion when that item was under consideration it was represented that unless the Government took over the dry dock and relieved the Commonwealth of Massachusetts from its obligations to allow this dock to be utilized by our Government, at a payment, I believe, of $50,000 annual rental——

Mr. PADGETT. That is the first contract they had.

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). That there would be delay?

Mr. PADGETT. Great delay.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not remember that they said great delay, but there would be delay until the Legislature of Massachusetts in annual session could vote the necessary additional funds to put it in condition——

Mr. PADGETT. It is a little different; the Legislature of Massachusetts had already voted not to appropriate anything more and to fight out with the contractors the completion of the dock under their existing contracts, and that meant a litigation between the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the contractors for the dock which would delay very greatly the completion of the dock at a time when it was regarded as very essential and necessary during war times to have it completed as early as possible, and the Government purchased it and the work is going right on.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did the Government take over the contested lawsuit of the contractors?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did it relieve the Commonwealth of Massachusetts from its obligations under the contract?

Mr. PADGETT. No; the Commonwealth of Massachusetts assumed its liability and turned over to the Government its contracts to have it completed up to a certain time, and the contractor agreed with the Navy Department to expedite the work and put on additional shifts in order to complete it early this year, so that it can be in operation for an additional amount, I think, of something like $250,000, if I remember.

Mr. STAFFORD. This dry dock up to the present time is not in a condition so that it can be used by the Government?

Mr. PADGETT. Not yet; it was not expected to be.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression from the statement made at the time the authorization was made in the special act that it would be completed soon after?

Mr. PADGETT. He said it can be completed some time in February or March, as I remember, of this year.

Mr. STAFFORD. What does the testimony show as to when it will be completed?

Mr. PADGETT. Let me see:

It is estimated that the $500,000 asked for at the present time will take care of the following shore development: Structural shop, machine shop, pattern shop and foundry, woodworking shop, and a small storehouse.

Mr. BROWNING. How nearly completed is this dry dock?

Admiral PARKS. It is expected to be completed by February.

Mr. BROWNING. Ready for use by February?

Admiral PARKS. Ready for use by February.

The CHAIRMAN. Not fully completed but ready to use, as I understood it. The principal thing is the dredging.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am informed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] that they have been using the dry docks for some time for some purpose.

Mr. PADGETT. That was a limited use.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the reservation of the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy yard, Philadelphia, Pa.: Dry dock, to complete, and the limit of cost is increased to $4,700,000, $1,200,000; paving, railroad tracks, sewers, water pipes, and general yard development, $200,000; kapok mattress and life-preserver factory, $100,000; in all, $1,500,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is the necessity for this increase in the cost of this dry dock?

Mr. PADGETT. That is very interesting. Congress authorized the construction of two docks, companion or similar docks, one at Norfolk and one at Philadelphia. They were to be very large docks; something over a thousand feet and about 40 feet over the sill. The limit of cost was fixed at $3,500,000. At the time it was contended that the dock at Philadelphia could be built under economic conditions and cheaply.

Mr. WALSH. Three and one-half millions for each dock?

Mr. PADGETT. For each dock. The dock at Norfolk will be completed within the $3,500,000, and is about completed. I had an invitation just a few days ago to come down there to a sort of celebration at the completion of the dock.

Mr. WALSH. Within the limit of cost?

Mr. PADGETT. Within the limit of cost.

Mr. WALSH. It ought to be celebrated.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, in Philadelphia, when the work got started and was moving along somewhat under way, the dredge boat sank in the dock, and that delayed very much the completion of the dock. There is a controversy between the contractor and the Government that in some way the Government is responsible for the sinking of that boat, in that it interfered in some way with the guarding around the dock, so that persons got in there and opened up some of the valves and let the dock sink. That is a controversy which the Government is disputing, but it delayed very much the completion of the dock.

After they had dug down quite a depth they found a stratum of soft mud and sand that the hydrostatic pressure of the water was pushing out from there, and the result of it was that the banks were caving in on either side, kept sloughing off and caving in; and, at a cost of something like $150,000, they had to put some permanent walls around that and drive down cheap piling in order to prevent the walls from caving back to such an extent that it might injure the safety of buildings that were some distance from the dock.

Then the war being on, the Government came in through the different agencies—the War Board, the Labor Board, and some of these other boards. The Labor Board came in and raised the price of labor, and the contractor had to pay a great deal more for labor. The Government came in and commandeered the sand of the contractor, and he had to get additional sand at a very much greater cost at other places. They fixed the price on cement through one of the war boards. All of those questions came up, and it involved the controversy and a lawsuit, in which the Government does not admit its liability. So things are just held up. They did not go ahead. The dock should be completed. It is needed. And this is simply to go ahead and complete the dock and await the result of the lawsuit. What that result will be I do not know. Nobody else will know what will come out from the lawsuit between the Government and the contractors on their bond, and there is the liability of their securities.

Mr. WALSH. A part of the situation which was caused resulted from the War Labor Board——

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH (continuing). Coming in and fixing the price of labor?

Mr. PADGETT. They fixed general prices.

Mr. WALSH. Who was it came in and took away the contractor's sand?

Mr. PADGETT. The War Industries Board.

Mr. WALSH. The War Industries Board?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. So that, with the United States Navy Department at work constructing an important dry dock during a period of war, the War Industries Board came along and took away the sand in the immediate vicinity and required the contractor to procure sand elsewhere?

Mr. PADGETT. That is what I understand the situation to be.

Mr. WALSH. That is one of the elements that goes into increasing the cost of this $1,200,000? Will the gentleman state——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to still further reserve the point of order on this paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

Will the gentleman from Tennessee state as to whether this War Labor Board increased the cost of labor in the Norfolk dock?

Mr. PADGETT. They fixed the prices of labor through these committees, and so forth, but the conditions at Norfolk were very different, I understand, and Norfolk had progressed so far in its development that it did not affect it to the same extent that it did at Philadelphia.

Mr. WALSH. And the contractor down there, I assume, was permitted to retain his sand?

Mr. PADGETT. I suppose so. I heard of no interference there.

Mr. WALSH. Now, are not the items for railroad tracks, sewers, water pipes, and general yard development, and so forth, a part of the original specifications for the construction of this dock?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. WALSH. It is something that was thought of afterwards?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. It is part of the development, but it is in that part of the yard where new ships have been built, a number of them, and building ways, where they are building and preparing to build the battle cruisers—those big ships—and this is required as an ordinary development there in the new portion of the yard. There are about 11,000 or 12,000 acres in that yard, and this is that end of the yard that is being developed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the very full explanation given by the chairman of the committee, I shall not insist upon the point of order, although I think it is poor policy to start in and increase the limit of cost on projects that ought to have been completed long ago, and probably would have been if they had not been interfered with by some of these independent war agencies that are working for the Government under this munificent policy of a dollar a year salary.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Will not the gentleman wait until we have read the next paragraph?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy yard, Washington, D. C.: West extension development, $43,000; power plant extension, $214,000; extra ducts and manholes, $36,500; fireproofing storehouse No. 10, $15,000; sewer, water, and paving extensions in eastern addition, $50,000; railroad classification yard, $36,500; dispensary, $75,000; raising roof of open-hearth shop and additional crane, $40,000; proof shop, $250,000; outside distribution system, $20,000; outside oil distribution system, $20,000; in all, $800,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. This is just for the development of the yard and the land we have already purchased.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am frank to say that upon this subject I have an open mind, but I am inclined to believe that the appropriations, and especially the authorizations provided for in this bill, are in excess of what we should authorize at this time. I will give my reasons briefly for my position. In the first place, I do not believe there is any country in the world better prepared to build ships than is the United States at the present time. I do not believe that if an emergency arose that would demand of this Nation a very great Navy for immediate use there is any nation in the world that could build ships as fast as we can and prepare for that emergency. Further, the program heretofore authorized can not be carried out within a few months, and at a time when we need money so badly to meet the necessary obligations of the Government I believe it is time for the Congress of the United States to stop, hesitate, look around, and see where we are financially and how much money we must raise.

I am going to give you, gentlemen, a few of the "extras" that the Congress of the United States is going to be called upon to furnish in the expenditures of this Government in the very near future, and it is astounding to me, as I know it will be to you.

Taking into consideration in this sum this program, $746,000,000, there must be, and will be, appropriated for the construction of hospitals a large sum of money, conservatively estimated at $30,000,000, in the very near future.

As to our interest account, which I give here—and I am going to ask permission to put in the RECORD a letter I have just received from the Treasury Department—showing all the authorizations and obligations of the Government and the amount of outstanding bonds, the date of their issue and the due date, and the amount of interest which each issue of bonds draws. On the 31st of December those outstanding obligations of the Government amounted in round numbers to $21,000,000,000, and we are going to be called upon soon to dispose of $5,000,000,000 or $6,000,000,000 more of Government bonds.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman said $21,000,000,000 of indebtedness or bonds.

Mr. FORDNEY. Outstanding obligations—bonds, certificates of indebtedness, war-saving certificates, and so forth. I will give that in detail. I shall not have time to do it in my remarks, but I will put it in the RECORD. The interest account on this indebtedness is going to be about $1,000,000,000 in the next 12 months.

Our merchant marine is going to cost us—and this estimate is very conservative—from the information I can obtain, $650,000,000 this next year.

The "extra" for the war, over and above ordinary times, in discharging our boys now in the service, will be at least $500,000,000, and possibly double that sum.

Our aircraft, although estimated in this report to be some $25,000,000 or $30,000,000, does not include the proposed aircraft service for carrying the mails, and that undoubtedly will call upon the Government for an expenditure of $50,000,000.

To my great surprise, the first 12 months of Government control of railroads has already furnished a $755,000,000 loss, which must come out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the country, and before we relinquish the railroads to their owners that sum is going to reach from $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000. I estimated this item here conservatively at $800,000,000. It is now reported at $755,000,000, at the end of 12 months of Government control.

The Government contracts that have been authorized and which are being authorized will in round numbers show up to be $3,000,000,000. Let us cut that sum in two and say that our Government can settle on the basis of 50 cents on the dollar on those claims. That is $1,500,000,000.

Our guaranty to the farmers on wheat, conservatively estimated, will be $1,000,000,000 in round numbers, possibly more; perhaps a little less, and this guaranty must and will be carried out.

The war-risk insurance will require $150,000,000. The European food bill that we recently passed carries an appropriation of $100,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield as to the estimate on the war-risk insurance?

Mr. FORDNEY. Just in a minute. Then I will yield.

Extra clerk hire to Members of the House, $500,000 in the next 12 months. It will exceed that sum.

The Employment Bureau is now asking before the Committee on Appropriations for $14,000,000 for the next year, and the bonus provided for in the new revenue bill (which will come up to-morrow) to the soldiers—which is less than I wanted to make it, $60 per man—will amount to $255,000,000.

Now, gentlemen, those are some of the extraordinary appropriations or expenditures of money that the Congress of the United States will be called upon to collect from the people in taxes in the next 12 months, amounting to $6,795,000,000. This does not include the ordinary expenses of the Government. It is true the tax law will collect, if the estimates are correctly made, in round numbers, $6,000,000,000.

But, my friends, in the very near future we are going to be called upon to prepare and pass another revenue law in addition to this bill which comes up for consideration to-morrow. There are various ways to get the money; but let me call your attention to this fact, that all the money there is in the United States sums up in round numbers only about $6,000,000,000, and we are going to be called upon for $10,000,000,000 in round numbers in the next 12 months. We are not satisfied just to reach out and take all the money that all the people have but we want once and a half times the amount that they have, and we are going to make them dig it up somewhere and turn it into the Treasury of the United States. I caution you who represent the people of this country that we are going wild in governmental expenditures. We have been very extravagant during the war, but we will forget that extravagance, because to offset it we have won the war. Our coming to the relief of our allies in this great war at the opportune time broke the wolf's back, turned the tide, drove back the enemy, and caused them to come on their bended knees and beg for mercy. But where are we going to land in the expenditures of this Government, gentlemen, if we are not somewhat conservative? In my candid opinion the authorization asked for in this naval bill is not warranted to that extent at this particular time. I am in favor of having a great Navy if we need it, but to my mind the greatest inconsistency is the saying in one breath that we are bound to have a league of nations to prevent war, and saying in the next breath that we must have the greatest Navy under God's sun.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. We are using every effort. Everybody is anxious to see some agreement arrived at by which we can prevent a recurrence of the greatest war the world ever knew. Every time some nation that is likely to threaten us builds a ship I want to see Uncle Sam build a ship, but are we threatened with such danger right now? If so, from what source does it come?

It is said that the President has sent a message over here which is confidential, which can not be given to the public. I may not be correct about that, but that is my understanding. I should like to know what there is in the mind of the President of the United States affecting the welfare of all the people that should be secret between the President and one or two men. What is it that he has in mind as a representative of the people that we are not entitled to know? At one time we were told that the President had information, and he himself made the statement from the Speaker's desk about the Panama Canal and said: "I can not give you that information, but if you do not grant my request I will not know what to do." All right, gentlemen of the House acquiesced, and we repealed the bill which provided for free tolls for American coastwise ships through our own Panama Canal. What his reasons were then I do not know. He never told me; he never told the public; but, in my candid opinion, we did our merchant marine the greatest injustice that it was possible for the Congress of the United States to do in matters of that kind by repealing that law. Now comes the President and states that for certain reasons which he can not make public he wants this great Navy authorized. Heavens above, what is it that is going on around that table in Paris where our peace representatives are gathered that you and I should not know? He stated publicly before he went over there that he would keep this Nation advised as to all his actions.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am wondering just exactly what it is that my colleague would recommend to the House. Would he recommend that we discontinue appropriations for ships heretofore authorized?

Mr. FORDNEY. I have the highest regard for my colleague and for his opinion in this matter. He is well informed about this subject; but I will say to him that I do not agree with this enormous authorization at this time.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What I am particularly directing my question to is whether or not my colleague thinks we ought not to make any appropriations for the ships heretofore authorized?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes; finish building the ships we are now building and finish the program; but as I read in your report you authorize $290,000,000 for a building program of ships heretofore unauthorized.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to my colleague, however, that this bill carries no appropriation except for ships heretofore authorized.

Mr. FORDNEY. You are authorizing 10 great battleships.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. There is no appropriation carried for anything not heretofore authorized.

Mr. FORDNEY. But if you authorize the construction of a ship Uncle Sam must pay for it if he builds it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. But I understood my colleague to say that he thought the amount carried in this bill was excessive, and there is no appropriation in this bill for anything except ships heretofore authorized.

Mr. FORDNEY. But if we authorize these 20 ships and the Navy Department enters into contracts for their construction we must appropriate the money to pay for them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman include in his estimates of expense the $100,000,000 for food for the starving people of Europe?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I included that $100,000,000.

I have here a statement of the bonds outstanding and the rates of interest provided; and the total issue of outstanding obligations of the Government on the 31st day of December was $20,807,598,298. Besides that, some additional obligations have no doubt already been issued and must continue to be issued for some time to come.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does that amount include our loans to the allies?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes. These are the obligations outstanding. Of course, whatever bonds of the allied governments we hold should be deducted from this or considered as an asset, if ever paid. But, my good friend, the allies now are claiming that Uncle Sam should stand his proportional share of the cost of the war in proportion to population. I am opposed to that plan.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Will the gentleman put the figures he has given in the RECORD?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will, Mr. Chairman, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by putting in the figures I have mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will have that privilege.

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the gentleman's estimate as to the amount of expenditure for the War Risk Insurance Bureau did he take into consideration the amount of money the Government is obligated to pay on the insurance policies of these soldiers?

Mr. FORDNEY. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. That will run up into the hundreds of millions.

Mr. FORDNEY. I have only mentioned the extra obligations over and above the ordinary obligations.

Mr. STAFFORD. My recollection is that it is estimated to run up to six hundred or eight hundred million dollars.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Does the gentleman's figures include the pensions to soldiers during the next year? Was that in the gentleman's estimate?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I think I am correct in saying that will be in addition to what I have stated.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. As a Member of the House and as an American citizen I am obliged to the gentleman for the warning he has given to this Congress. He deserves the gratitude of the American people for having the nerve to stand up here and make the statement. I had hoped that this administration would have said to the Naval Affairs Committee, "Go slowly on the 1916 program." I voted for it in 1916, and I want to see it completed; but I hoped that we might be able to spread it out over five or six years.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] asked the gentleman from Michigan whether he would withhold the appropriation for the construction of the 1916 program. Much of our bill that we have reported is for that purpose; much of the money we asked for to complete the 1916 program. Would the gentleman have us—and I am not asking for the purpose of heckling my friend, but for his advice—would he ask us to withhold the completion of that program, or ask us to continue it along for a number of years until we can somehow without unduly pressing the people get the money to pay for it?

Mr. FORDNEY. I would not ask that the 1916 program be completed quickly unless it is necessary to protect ourselves against a warring nation somewhere in the world in the near future. We must economize, we must stop this extravagant use of money which we have spent so lavishly during the war. We ought to get back to normal conditions and to practice reasonable economy.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not wish to take up the gentleman's time and I am impressed with what he said. Nevertheless he does not help me. I have asked a number of gentlemen in this House to assist me in the performance of a public duty. I agree with the gentleman that if there is nobody to fight there is no necessity for preparing a Navy. The gentleman has the same view I have. If there is any great necessity for the expenditure of money, if it is imperative, we should spend it now, but if not, we should postpone it. I am not able to understand, and therefore I joined with my colleagues on the committee, and while I want in every way to be economical and assist the American people to have something left in their pockets for the future years I want to complete the 1916 program, which I hope will be completed within five years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. I wish to ask a question in the line of the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. How many warships, how many battleships, have not yet been commenced which were provided for in the 1916 program, if the gentleman can answer?

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman from Michigan will pardon me, they have all been begun except four. They are supposed to all be completed within five years. The first one will not be completed within 18 months.

Mr. FREAR. Does this bill, covering $747,000,000, cover the entire 1916 program?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no; about one-third of it.

Mr. FREAR. What will be the total cost of completing the 1916 program?

Mr. BUTLER. Completing the 1916 program will cost in the neighborhood of $800,000,000 including the expenditures already made and to be made.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. POU. Did the gentleman favor the imposing of a tax on the people of the United States of $8,000,000,000 in the bill passed by this House?

Mr. FORDNEY. I voted for that bill. I was opposed to raising such a large proportion of expenditure in direct taxes.

Mr. POU. But the gentleman voted for the bill.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. POU. And the bill carries $8,000,000,000.

Mr. FORDNEY. As it passed the House, but it now only carries $6,000,000,000, and next year the bill provides for $4,000,000,000, and $4,000,000,000 will not meet the necessary expenditures now being imposed on the Government. I have at all times tried to amend the bill and make it better, but have always voted for its passage, being the best I could get. We must go slow, or we must raise more money next year. That is what I want to impress on your minds.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. It is a fair statement that my committee duties have kept me out of the House, and will for some days to come, practically. I just gathered from the colloquy between Representative BUTLER and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] that it will be five years before the 1916 program will be completed.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; that is what was stated.

Mr. CANNON. And this bill carries appropriations to carry on that program?

Mr. FORDNEY. Not all of it, so the gentleman stated.

Mr. CANNON. But to carry it on for the coming year?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; as far as needed to meet the expenditures as that program progresses.

Mr. LITTLE. For one year?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. We are in the habit of appropriating from year to year for authorized projects. What I would be glad to know is this: If it takes five years to carry out this program, why authorize another program that is to cost how much?

Mr. BUTLER. Four hundred and fifteen million dollars is the lowest estimate I have heard placed upon it, and you gentlemen will be safe in putting on 15 per cent more. My observation warrants me in saying to the gentleman that it will cost 15 per cent more.

Mr. CANNON. That is the proposed additional program?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. It is to be taken for granted that Congress will be in session at least two times in the future under the Constitution. The question in my mind is, from every standpoint, what the necessity for authorizing an additional program when the present program can not be completed for five years? [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; but just let me answer that question, and I will then yield. I believe that the succeeding Congress can be entrusted to do the necessary and the right thing when called upon. Why obligate the Government at this time by this great authorization? [Applause.] I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. With reference to the cost, there are 10 battleships, and the estimated cost on the present basis of material and wages is $32,400,000 each, which would be $324,000,000. The estimated cost of the 10 scout cruisers is $88,000,000, or $8,800,000 each, and those costs are predicated upon the present price of material and labor. I do not think it will be going up in the future. I think, if there is any change, that it will have to be cheaper. I do not believe that the present cost of material and labor can hold, so that the $412,000,000 which those two make would cover the cost, and that would be distributed over a period of about seven years.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there to permit me to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it not a fact that we have asked for large increases over the estimated cost of battleships for 1916?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Because of the great increase in the cost of material and the increase in the cost of labor.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and that is what I am talking about.

Mr. BUTLER. Unless the economic pendulum swings backward we are likely to have to ask for more money in the future to complete this proposed program.

Mr. PADGETT. No; I think not. In 1916 the estimated cost was based upon the cost of labor and materials at that time, and they are being worked out under the present cost of labor and material. The cost of these is based on the present cost of labor and material, and if that goes down they will be cheaper.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman in reply—and I have taken so much more time than I had expected that I feel that I ought not to say much more—I have some confidence in the fairness and justice of the Republican Party. The Republican Party is coming into power in this House and in the Senate in a very few weeks, if Congress is called together into extra session. No one can deny that the Republicans during the terms of this war were loyal to the administration and supported it in everything asked for in connection with carrying on this war.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. I have always studiously and steadfastly refused to bring politics into this matter.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. PADGETT. But do I understand the gentleman to intimate or insinuate that the Democratic Congress must not legislate because it is a Democratic Congress?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, no. Let me say to you that I am fearful, however, that the bringing in of this program at this time, in the closing hours of this Congress, when no single appropriation bill has yet passed the Senate, is going to call for an extra session of Congress without doubt. I doubt that you can get this kind of a bill through the Senate, notwithstanding the fact that it be passed here; and I believe this bill is going to do more to bring on an extra sesion of Congress, which I do not want, than any piece of legislation now before Congress.

Mr. PADGETT. Let us expedite it here and do our duty and not let that responsibility and catastrophe be chargeable to us.

Mr. FORDNEY. I believe you are expediting your bill. To put a bill through the House which carries an appropriation of three-quarters of a billion dollars in two days is expediting matters, if I am correct in my judgment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think it would help matters at all if we added to this bill a proviso that the expenditures for the increase in the Navy should not be operative until after we learn the result of the peace conference?

Mr. FORDNEY. My good friends, let me say that we do not know anything about this matter at present. We ought to know more. We ought to know more in a few weeks from our representatives in Paris as to what the needs of this Government are going to be. We have no information from over there now. We ought to have some information; we are paying for the information. We have men over there. God knows we have enough servants along to take care of the daily affairs; 51 cooks and waiters taken from the Biltmore Hotel, New York, on board ship that took our envoys over there. There must be somebody over there, and we ought to get some information. We have none. Why should we hurry now? Why not wait until we get some information from over the seas? [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a minute?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield.

Mr. BUTLER. All the information that can be sent will not enable us to strike anything from this bill. If gentlemen who are in favor of prolonging the construction of the 1916 program see fit to take out of the end of the bill some appropriations we can save many, many millions of dollars.

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me say to my good friend in closing I am in favor of waiting until we know more than we know now before we authorize these 10 battleships and 10 scout cruisers, in addition to the present program. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I wish to insert here statements which I have just received from the office of the Secretary of the Treasury. I know it is information interesting to the public. Gentlemen, I thank you for your attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserved the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct the attention of the committee to the item now under consideration, which provides $800,000 for new buildings at the Washington Navy Yard, a pretty large sum for a peace program. We only appropriated in last year's bill $1,433,000. We have some very large projects suggested in this additional program—$250,000 for a proof shop. What is the necessity for that, at least at this time?

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman is aware they have very largely increased the activities at the gun factory here in Washington, called the navy yard, where we manufacture our guns, the large guns and smaller caliber guns, and there have been a number of new shops erected. This shop called a proof shop—here is a letter which says:

> It is essential that there be constructed at the Washington Navy Yard at the earliest practical date a building for the assembling, inspection, and shipment of ordnance material. A one-story building of brick and steel approximating 180 by 200 feet is contemplated. It is proposed to locate this building in the eastern extension.

That is the part we purchased last.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it estimated $250,000 will be required to erect a building 180 by 200 feet one story high?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should say, from my knowledge of construction, that is a very liberal estimate.

Mr. PADGETT. No; I think not, considering it is to be constructed of that size, that width, and so forth, with trusses, stresses, and so forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. I repeat that from my knowledge of construction—and I have had some acquaintance in the past year when the prices were so high—that the estimate of $250,000 for a building 180 by 200 feet is about twice as much as it could have been built in war time.

Mr. PADGETT. The original estimate was for a larger shop of $500,000, but in talking the matter over the committee insisted that it did not want to appropriate so much as that, and they finally reduced it to the size here indicated in this letter and reduced the appropriation to $250,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not obtain the information as to the purpose for which this new building was to be used.

Mr. PADGETT. We went into that very fully. In speaking of it they say:

> That is to receive and inspect the ordnance before it is sent to the proving ground, to star-gauge and otherwise inspect it after it is returned and prepare it for shipment, and I think at least a half of that building should be provided for a peace establishment. I think the whole of it was absolutely necessary if war conditions had continued.

The first size of it was 400 by 300 feet, and then they reduced it, as I have stated, and cut the appropriation in half.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no proof shop there at present?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the necessity for a dispensary for which you appropriate $75,000 in this bill?

Mr. PADGETT. The dispensary is a building to be used in the nature of a first aid in case of accidents and injuries that happen where there are 6,000 or 7,000 men working with heavy and dangerous machinery, and this is to provide some beds and things necessary to first aid the men who get hurt, to take care of them properly, and provide for them until they can be taken to a hospital or to their homes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reverting to the former subject, where is the work that is proposed to be undertaken in the proof shop now being performed?

Mr. PADGETT. It is being done in a building there that is being enlarged into a machine shop, as I understand, and a great deal of it is stored out in the open. If you were down in that yard you would see a great many of their large guns stored out in the open for long periods of time there, until they can be taken care of in the congested rooms that they have.

Mr. STAFFORD. They do not suffer by being stored in the open there?

Mr. PADGETT. They claim that they do. They paint them and oil them over, but they claim it is an expensive matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, on that item in the bill—"proof shop, $250,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order upon the item of "proof shop, $250,000."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not know as to the merits of the point of order, as I am not a parliamentarian. The facts are that the Government purchased this land and has undertaken the construction and the enlargement of the means and the instrumentalities and the buildings needed to carry on the work of the manufacture, and repair, and production, and care, and so forth, of our guns. And this is one of the essential parts of that general scheme that has been provided.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this in process of construction?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; this is a new building.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if it is a new building, of course it is subject to the point of order. If it is in process of construction, the Chair understands it would be in order. If it is new legislation, it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. There has been no specific appropriation heretofore for a proof shop. This is the initial appropriation for that; but a proof shop is one of a series of buildings that are necessary to carry out and perfect the plant that was contemplated.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if it were in process of construction, the Chair, of course, would overrule the point of order; but it is a new project, even though it may be a part of the same general scheme. It individually is a new project, and the Chair thinks it would be obnoxious to the rule and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order as to the other items in the paragraph.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this war has worked some wonderful changes. For one thing, it has transformed our Secretary of the Navy from a bleating lamb to a roaring lion. A while ago we were told that woman suffrage was absolutely necessary to the winning of the war. I do not know in what way, unless it was proposed to draft women into the military service of the country. Now it is battleships. I do not know what it will be next, but I think the time has come when we should stop and take stock. We have got to commence to consider the people who are going to foot the bills.

Now, some of the Members on the floor of this House have said that this big naval program is merely a bluff, that its purpose is to whip the allies into line and make them come across on certain propositions now in discussion across the water. I am not going to take any chance on this being a bluff. If we appropriate money, it will be made available, and I know and you all know that every dollar that this Congress or any preceding Congress has ever authorized has been spent, and this will be spent.

Who are we arming ourselves against? Any of the allies? If Germany has not been sufficiently whipped, if she is still a menace, let us finish the job, but let us not go to work and arm against our allies unless we are given information that we now do not have. I think it is high time to think of the people who are going to foot the bills, and this legislation should not be enacted at this time.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. A moment ago you stated you did not know why women were given the ballot to win the war unless they were to be drafted into the military service. The gentleman does not want to leave the impression that the women did not play their part in this war?

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is conveying an inference that I did not mean at all. However, I am sure the gentleman does not mean to say that suffrage was a vital issue to the winning of the war?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. It was not my intention to say that. The gentleman made the statement that he did not know how women could help win the war unless they were drafted into the military service.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, no; the women of this country rendered a great and noble service, but that is beside the question now under consideration. I am opposed to this legislation, and I hope that this side of the aisle and also that side will rally in opposition to this bill. This is no time for huge expenditures. We have got to get down and pare our expenditures to the marrow or this country will go bankrupt. Let us give more consideration to the taxpayer and less to mirages.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman referred to bluffing a moment ago. Does not the gentleman take it for granted that the allies know what we are saying and doing over here? Did you ever see a bluff effectual when the other fellow knew that you were bluffing?

Mr. KNUTSON. It is only a paper program, and they will realize it.

Mr. BUTLER. As a Member of this House, I want to help. The gentleman has a remedy. He should not speak in generalities but get down to figures, and tell us how we can help on this bill. I have indulged in generalities a great deal of my life, and I want to be a specialist.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman can help by voting "nay" on this proposition.

Mr. BUTLER. What proposition?

Mr. KNUTSON. On every proposition aside from the 1916 naval program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ascertain if we can not dispense with this discussion of the building program until we reach it later on in the bill. I suggest that it be not discussed now, but that we wait until we reach it, and then discuss it, thus avoiding going over it twice.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say to the gentleman, if he will allow me, if I need make any apology for my five minutes——

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, not at all——

Mr. CANNON. I do not know that I shall be present when the building program is reached.

Mr. PADGETT. I just wanted to provide for the future.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. When does the gentleman expect to reach that?

Mr. PADGETT. I want to conclude, if possible, before 7 o'clock to-night.

Mr. GARNER. Why not discuss it when we get to it?

Mr. FREAR. I want to see if we can get a statement clearly before the House of the answers to the questions asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] and others. I believe I have the facts here that will do it in a few minutes. It is right here before me, and then I think from it we will have a clear understanding of what the bill involves.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Tennessee a request to make?

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have been a Member of this House for more than 20 years, and I do not recollect of any case which has come to my knowledge during my membership of a secret proposition having been sent by anyone who held the distinguished office of President of the United States to any committee of this House, and in this instance, as has been stated, the committee were sworn to maintain secrecy, when they presented the Naval bill to the House. It seems to me it is a proceeding that we ought to consider very earnestly before we finally dispose of a bill of the importance of the Naval appropriation bill, providing for such a vast expenditure of money, for a long period of time beyond the life of the Sixty-fifth Congress. By our acts, if we authorize these expenditures, we place a heavy burden upon the taxpayers for many years to come. In my opinion, as we have the 1916 program for increasing the Navy uncompleted, and we are told that said program can not be completed until 1921, the question of the Navy's future can safely be left to the succeeding Congresses. Our successors will not lack the patriotism to properly provide for the Navy whenever necessity shall call for the increases suggested in this bill. President Wilson stated in substance to the Congress when he last addressed them:

> I am going across the ocean because I believe it to be my duty. I shall, however, keep in touch with you. Whatever I know you will know.

I do not know but what the people generally may have some information through the newspapers, but certainly the Congress has not received direct information since the President sailed across the ocean, except that communicated to the House of Representatives by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that committee inform us that they were sworn to secrecy before the Secretary of the Navy would even impart the indefinite information which was confided to them.

I received to-day a newspaper published at Augusta, Ga., with a specially marked article. The newspaper containing the article is the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle, and it was published on the 3d day of February. The Augusta Chronicle was established in 1785, and it is the South's oldest newspaper. I want to have this article read, and I ask that it may be read in my time, and that my time may be so extended that the whole article may be read. This article shows very plainly that "murder will out." The Committee on Naval Affairs will respect their oath of secrecy, but you can not keep everything quiet. In due time the facts will be exposed to the light of day. The article I have asked to have read will prove that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the article which he sends to the Clerk's desk may be read and that his time shall be sufficiently extended to permit the reading of the entire article. Is there objection?

Mr. PADGETT. I must object to taking the time to read it. I shall not object to inserting it in the RECORD.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I insist on its being read. I have not made a request of this nature to the House for some time, and I think I am entitled to that consideration. If the gentleman chooses to object, he can do so.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not care to object.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I ask to have it read. I think it is not an unreasonable request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the article referred to may be read in the gentleman's time, and that his time be extended sufficiently to permit the reading of the entire article? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE CASE OF GEN. WOOD.

The old saying, "murder will out," is being exemplified in the case of Gen. Leonard Wood, that big American and splendid soldier, who has been booted around by the War Department as if his country owed him nothing but a grudge.

It may be, of course, that certain "roller-chair warriors" and departmental heads in Washington owe Gen. Wood a grudge for having made bold to expose their incompetency and, almost single handed and alone, forced them to adopt certain preparedness measures; but the country at large has no cause to share this feeling of petty spite, and the country does not share it.

On the contrary, every American citizen, be he Democrat or Republican, who is at all familiar with the facts in the case, must resent the War Department's disgraceful treatment of Gen. Wood, which is, perhaps, without parallel in the history of the Army.

The Chronicle first called attention to the War Department's attitude toward Gen. Wood in May, 1917, soon after this country entered the war, and it then became absolutely necessary for the Government to enter aggressively upon the preparedness program that Gen. Wood had been urging upon it for years.

But, instead of putting at the helm this able soldier, then the ranking general of the Army and the one who, more than any other, or all of them combined, had long before foreseen and planned the necessary program for raising and training an adequate Army, what did the War Department do?

Why, it coolly—and, we have always believed, maliciously—decided to remove him from the most important post in the Army, outside of Washington, that of commander of the Department of the East, at Governors Island, and generously give him his choice of such minor posts as those at Manila, Honolulu, or Charleston, S. C., the latter carrying with it command of the newly created Department of the Southeast.

Fully comprehending the motive behind this War Department order, Gen. Wood, being the most active and constructive man in the Army at that time, had a natural desire to continue active at such a period in his Nation's history, so he declined to be shunted off to such far-away stations as Honolulu or Manila and accepted Charleston instead.

But even there he didn't propose to be sidetracked; for, indeed, it is impossible to sidetrack a man of Gen. Wood's caliber, as some of the men in the War Department might have known had they been even half his size in mentality and character. So instead of permitting the War Department to "bury" him at Charleston—as was, undoubtedly, the intention—what did this big American soldier do?

He started right in to make up and organize the South—at least, those States that were included in the Department of the Southeast. And in little or no time he got things to going; in fact, he succeeded in stirring up the South as no other man in the Army could have done. Instead of being "sidetracked" he soon made it clear that the War Department had in reality but furnished him with a new opportunity to display his wonderful genius for organization.

So much was this the case, that some people and some newspapers, unwilling to recognize the "motive" behind the War Department's action, tried to make it appear that the Charleston post was, really, intended as a "promotion"; that the War Department simply recognized in Gen. Wood the man for this particularly difficult work and used him accordingly—in reality a high tribute to him.

But this theory was soon dispelled by still another order from the War Department; this time removing him to Camp Funston, where he was put in charge of a training camp—just as he was succeeding in welding the South into a great military organization.

The Chronicle made bold at the time to call attention to the first of these War Department reprisals against Gen. Wood, but it was some time before the country at large began to take cognizance of the indecent treatment accorded him. Now, however, the whole thing is coming to light; indeed, it will not be surprising if, before very long, there is a congressional investigation of the whole affair—as, indeed, there should be.

An Associated Press dispatch, published in yesterday's Chronicle, ought, in itself, to furnish sufficient grounds for such an investigation; for certain officers of the United States Army, some 40 in number, have signed a sort of round-robin, in which they bring the charge that Gen. Wood, while on a brief visit to France—the only opportunity he was ever given to see the battle front—was treated almost as a "German spy;" and, further, that his treatment throughout has been the spiteful work of a certain clique. But let's read, again, what these officers say:

"When Gen. Wood visited the front he was treated more like a German spy than an officer of the United States. We have the word of several colonels that know him well for this. He was ordered back from his visit here without being allowed to visit the Italian front, or returning through England, as he was invited to do by Lloyd-George.

"Gen. Wood was the idol of the Army, officers and men alike, and was one of the most efficient officers, yet he was kept in a corner all the time. Who did it?"

Now, if the above charges are not true these officers are subject to court-martial, and they ought to be court-martialed; in fact, it is quite possible that they are subject to court-martial, anyway, for daring to tell the truth. For if Gen. Wood, after his great service to his country for more than 20 years, could be all but "banished" merely because he told the truth, because he told the country that certain people in Washington were asleep at the switch, because he told a Senate committee that the War Department "ought to be sandbagged" and this country aroused to the necessity for preparedness, certainly these 40 officers of lower rank ought to be court-martialed for calling the acts of this same War Department in question. As we hope they will be, for then the whole truth will come out as to Gen. Wood, which, however, isn't a matter altogether personal to Gen. Wood himself, for it involves the honor and integrity of the Army and of the Government, and that's where the public comes in.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, this naval bill carries $746,457,740 and is the largest naval bill ever presented to any country in the world in time of peace. It is five times as large as our average naval bill prior to the war just won. Under present conditions throughout the world every country, whether a victor or among the vanquished, is tax burdened, in many cases to the point of bankruptcy, while all are war weary and financially exhausted. All are seeking some plan of general disarmament, which was promised at the end of this war through a world-wide league pledged to guarantee a lasting peace. That was talked from every platform during the war. All the world was united to defeat Prussian militarism and make certain that peace. The war is won, the Prussian-Austrian-Turkish alliance is destroyed, the German fleet surrendered, her transportation system and ships delivered to the victors, and her army defeated and demobilizing. The only cloud on the horizon is that which comes through the press via "British wireless" just in time to help pass a waiting billion-dollar military bill—a fear of German military reorganization. A three-quarters of a billion naval bill is now asked because of some possible future rivalry with Great Britain, and over a billion dollars is asked for an army to provide against an uprising of the vanquished Huns and to help police the world.

Mr. Chairman, few people will be deceived by the strings which are always pulled by the same naval and military agencies whenever legislation is before Congress. This enormous naval bill before us, in my judgment, is indefensible in view of world-wide conditions; yet we are embarked on a 1916 naval building program that possibly may be justified until peace terms are signed. Possibly we can offer some excuse to the country for its support thereafter, although under present conditions of public finances a $746,457,000 naval bill will be hard to explain to the already overburdened taxpayers. This bill is five times as large as our annual naval bills four short years ago, and we are told by the committee that our Navy now building is as large as the combined navies of the three greatest countries in the world aside from Great Britain. Yet, with the second navy in the world and a stupendous 1916 building program that will take five more years to complete, an amendment or further 1918 new naval building program, to reach over $400,000,000 more, is also carried in this bill, so that in times of peace we have run war mad, with no prospect of sanity in sight. The naval and military bills before us, aggregating in appropriations and authorizations about $2,275,000,000, carry double the amount, in time of peace, of all our Government appropriations combined four short years ago. Can any statement be more significant of present reckless expenditures?

Mr. Chairman, I wish to have the committee correct me if I am not stating the facts accurately in regard to the amounts carried in the naval building programs contained in this bill, because there has been considerable confusion in the minds of Members. This is an unprecedentedly large bill in times of peace, carrying five times the average annual appropriations, and the amounts have been discussed here within the last few minutes by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who sought the facts from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], who is a member of the committee. As I understand it the 1916 Navy building program amounts approximately to $815,000,000. Last year there was appropriated and applied on this 1916 naval building program $100,000,000, leaving a balance of $715,000,000 more to be appropriated by Congress to complete the 1916 authorizations.

Mr. PADGETT. There was an appropriation in 1916, and also an appropriation in 1917 on the 1916 program.

Mr. FREAR. How much did it amount to for both years?

Mr. PADGETT. I will have to look that up.

Mr. FREAR. Will the chairman of the Naval Committee correct me if wrong, because we want to get the amounts right in order to understand this bill.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman is dealing with expenditures——

Mr. FREAR. On this 1916 naval building program.

Mr. PADGETT. Appropriations were made in 1916, 1917, and also 1918 on that program.

Mr. BUTLER. They have not all been spent.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think I can give the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] some information, if he will yield.

Admiral Taylor was before the Naval Committee, but unfortunately his statement was not taken down. He stated that it would take $815,000,000 to complete the 1916 program; that to the best of his information there had been appropriated $220,000,000. The only reason why he could not give accurately the amount that had been appropriated was that a part was appropriated to the Ordnance Department, and this bill carries $170,000,000.

Mr. FREAR. This bill specifically carries $179,000,000 for 1916 authorizations.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. One hundred and seventy-nine million dollars. So you can take those figures.

Mr. FREAR. Then with that correction the 1916 naval building program as adopted reaches $815,000,000, and according to the statement just made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], based on the opinion of Admiral Taylor, $220,000,000 in round numbers has already been applied upon that program, leaving a balance of approximately $600,000,000 yet to be appropriated. The naval bill before us carries $746,000,000 for all naval purposes. Of that amount $179,000,000 is to be applied upon the 1916 naval building program, leaving a balance to be appropriated hereafter for ships carried in the 1916 authorizations of about $420,000,000 through subsequent bills. That is entirely separate and in addition to the amount of approximately $415,000,000 contained in the latter part of this bill, covering 20 more battleships and cruisers in a proposed new 1918 building program. Is that approximately right?

Mr. PADGETT. I think that is approximately correct. It is about $400,000,000 instead of $420,000,000. The gentleman has the figures there, but Admiral Taylor stated the amount at about $400,000,000. That is substantially correct.

Mr. FREAR. It is over $400,000,000. It is nearly $420,000,000, as I have it here figured. My desire is to get the facts before the House which disclose that, in addition to $179,000,000 contained in this bill, we have over $400,000,000 more to appropriate to complete the 1916 shipbuilding program, which will take five years more to build. Further than that, this bill before us contains a new authorization for $415,000,000 for a new 1918 shipbuilding program. Briefly stated, this naval bill seeks to appropriate $746,000,000 and to authorize over $415,000,000 additional, or over $1,160,000,000 in all, in times of peace. Again I repeat, I can not understand how the bill can be defended by anyone or how we can vote for it in its present form. Let me present another strange, incomprehensible statement offered by the leading Republican member of the committee who, on February 4, during the general discussion, said:

> I think I owe something to myself and to my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR]. He asks me to state what influenced my mind at the last minute when this naval bill was under consideration in the committee room. * * * The statement that moved me I will never disclose to anyone. * * * Until the last minute I had resolved I would not vote for this building program.

Again quoting from the RECORD of February 4:

> Mr. FREAR. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] states to us he will vote for this bill, although against his judgment, and that it will not affect any European situation. Will he advise the House whether he wishes us to stand by his judgment, which is against the bill, or with his vote, which is to be for it?
> Mr. BUTLER. I can not advise the House. I do not ask the House to vote for this paragraph (the $400,000,000 authorization). I very much regret that I am unable to tell the committee of the reason that moves me to vote for it.

That is the only reason. A mysterious influence exercised from some source is here offered to sway us to vote for this enormous new $400,000,000 naval construction in addition to $746,000,000 also contained in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have voted for every larger naval program recommended by the Naval Committee, usually reaching two battleships annually, since I have been in Congress, and also during the war; but now that the war is over, when from the destruction of lives and property that has bankrupted the world we now emerge with a Navy as large and powerful as the navies of France, Japan, and Italy combined, second only to that of Great Britain, I refuse to add this enormous tax burden of over $1,160,000,000 carried in this bill, which authorizes 20 more great warships, to be added to the heavy burdens we have already laid upon the people of this country.

Criticisms may come from navy leagues, "security leagues," both of which have been repeatedly publicly discredited, and from naval construction interests, steel interests, publicity bureaus, and others who thrive on such appropriations. We are told it will take five years more and about $600,000,000 to carry out the great naval construction program begun in 1916, which will make us equal to any three naval powers combined, apart from Great Britain. To that stupendous building program which is carried in this bill we are asked to add 20 more great battleships and cruisers at a cost of $415,000,000 in addition to $746,000,000 already carried in the bill, and for what?

Every intelligent man knows that within a dozen years, based on past experience, the battleships and cruisers of the past and of to-day will be obsolete, ready for the junk pile, but the billions of dollars expended on these numerous "building programs" that give profits to the few are wrung from a tax-burdened people who are beginning to inquire what has been done with their money.

I have opposed several comparatively small bills, involving in all less than one-third of this $1,160,000,000 bill, and I can not consistently vote against comparatively small waste and then gulp down this indefensible measure. If our enormous naval appropriations are intended only to "bluff" some other country, as stated on this floor in debate, then it is well to remember that world conflicts are sometimes reached through "bluffing." England and Germany finished their bluffing race in naval construction when the German Navy was wiped out of existence, and England has now quit building in order to catch her financial breath. In times of peace such bluffing is dangerous and criminal waste and senseless when all other nations desire to quit the bluffing game.

Mr. Chairman, for several months the Secretary of the Navy has been quoted in the press as saying that this country must have the largest Navy in the world. No reason was given for his remarkable demand, which involves the expenditure of several billion dollars and a colossal naval program in order to exceed the British Navy. The Naval Committee brings in this naval bill with the Secretary's recommendation, which, we are told, carries the indorsement of the President, who for some reason has been persuaded to follow the Secretary's lead. Let me recall an incident. A river and harbor lobby has been holding its sessions almost within the shadows of the dome of the Capitol while this naval bill has been under consideration. Contractors, dredgers, and waterway enthusiasts always back up this organization that annually demands of Congress millions of dollars for useless projects, coupled with some that are meritorious, contained in the annual pork-barrel bill. After spending approximately a half billion dollars on our rivers and canals, which are practically deserted waterways, this same lobby at its meeting this week has urged an immediate expenditure of $400,000,000 to further develop our inland waterways, according to sentiments expressed at these meetings, and the Secretary of the Navy, who addressed the lobby, was among the most vociferous enthusiasts, according to the press. Every student of the subject knows that our inland waterways are practically deserted excepting the Great Lakes, and have been practically deserted for nearly a half century, during which time we have been dumping a half billion dollars into these same hopeless waterways; yet the Secretary of the Navy, who asks $1,160,000,000 in this bill for a colossal naval program, is the same Secretary who appeared before the river and harbor lobby, that is offering with equal reckless enthusiasm to spend $400,000,000 on a hopeless inland waterway program that Congress will be asked to approve. I can not accept the judgment of our Naval Secretary in either case without some evidence of necessity for so doing, when the only effect is simply to benefit a few by piling up unjust tax burdens upon those whose Representatives we are.

Let me repeat that in time of war or threatened emergency I will support every demand for naval or military purposes, but in our hour of victory, in time of world exhaustion and of a demand for universal peace, the country is entitled to know why this extraordinary bill is offered. Germany's fleet has been destroyed. No danger is apprehended from that country or any other country in the world so far as we can learn. The United States has 52 battleships built or building in the program already adopted. Six battle cruisers, 8 armored cruisers, 23 other cruisers of the first, second, or third class, and over 1,500 other craft, little and big, are included in our Navy, which outranks any combined three navies in the world outside of Great Britain. In addition to that great Navy, this bill authorizes 20 more ships at a cost of over $400,000,000. Why?

Apart from the billions of dollars invested in this great Navy of ours, how are we to man these vessels with crews reaching into hundreds of thousands of men, and how are we to maintain a vast standing Army of over a half a million men which is provided in the military bill that is waiting us on the Clerk's desk?

Will the naval experts and the General Staff of the Army demand conscription to raise approximately 1,000,000 men to maintain the Army and Navy in times of peace during the years to come? We have said to the world we are a peaceful Nation and will set the pace for disarmament.

What did we mean when we made that statement?

The world viewed with grave apprehension the feverish efforts of Germany and Great Britain to outbuild each other with their navies less than five years ago. A certain result of that rivalry was war. With the help of America, Germany and her allies were vanquished, but have we learned no lesson from that strife of the danger of "bluffing" some other nation by threatening her with a bill like the one before the House?

Naval "experts" asked for $2,644,307,406 for this bill. The Secretary of the Navy cut it down to $975,903,621 with a $415,000,000 further authorization. The committee brings in a bill for $746,457,440 with the same authorization added.

Naval experts, it is safe to say, do not lie awake nights trying to figure how they will pay their taxes, but we are compelled to ask where is the money coming from to meet this enormous naval bill and the equally enormous military bill and other prodigious expenditures that are presented to the House day after day?

With over $20,000,000,000 national indebtedness in 1919 and an annual interest and maintenance bill of several billions of dollars for many years to come, we are saddling billions of dollars more on the shoulders of a tax-ridden people annually—to what end?

I voted for every measure asked by the administration for the prosecution of the war. We all voted blindly, and could do nothing else when in war. Responsibility then rested with the administration for all expenditures. It now rests with us.

Hundreds of millions, wasted millions for aircraft that never were built; for cannon that never reached France; for useless ships built to win the war; for a $50,000,000 waste, to use no harsher term, at Muscle Shoals, all appropriated by Congress to win the war. We did what every other country was doing, gave whatever the administration then demanded to protect our people from the enemy and to win the war.

We are no longer on a war basis, although naval and military experts seek to keep us there. Other countries have become exhausted. This Government has loaned them eight and a half billions of dollars, and the more we loan, the more we give, the more we spend, and the easier it comes to fritter away public money.

What justification can be offered for this vast naval program which the chairman of the committee and leading Republican Members refuse or fail to explain?

We seem to be caught in a whirling maelstrom of extravagance, wherein every department of Government hysterically struggles to assert its own importance through demands for unprecedented appropriations, with a result that the Sinbad burden which has been laid upon our people will descend to our children and to our children's children for generations to come.

If we continue the hopeless waste for extravagant schemes, including canals, canalizations of rivers, highways, public buildings, irrigation, water powers, flood protection, all added to the ordinary expenses of Government, reaching increased billions annually, we will soon be compelled to adopt the proposal of Menken, the National Security League organizer, and compel every man, however small his wage, to pay an income tax to help support the Government. Men protest on the floor of either branch of Congress against this wild financial debauch that is becoming more frantic during the closing days of the Sixty-fifth Congress, but the minority party can not escape its own responsibility by laying the blame upon the President or his subordinates or those sitting across the aisle in either House, because now that the war is over individual responsibility can no longer be shifted to other shoulders.

While this naval bill has been under consideration it was temporarily sidetracked for the $6,000,000,000 revenue tax bill, which goes to the people as a reminder of what Congress is doing here. During debate on the conference report of the revenue bill, Mr. FORDNEY, Republican leader on the Ways and Means Committee, gave warning to Congress and the country. He said:

> The extraordinary appropriations of money that the Congress of the United States will be called upon to collect from the people in taxes in the next 12 months amount to $6,795,000,000. This does not include ordinary expenses of government. * * * Let me call your attention to the fact that all the money there is in the United States is, in round numbers, about $6,000,000,000, and we are going to be called upon for $10,000,000,000, in round numbers, in the next 12 months. * * * I caution you who represent the people, we are going wild in Government expenditures.

That warning comes from one of the oldest and ablest men in this Congress; and, with his warning sounding in our ears, we are asked by administration officials in times of peace to pass a naval and a military bill that carry over two and one-quarter billion dollars for the coming fiscal year, or, as stated before, practically double the entire annual expenses of the Government four short years ago. After you have collected the $6,000,000,000 in revenue taxes from the people and have sold them four or five billion dollars more of bonds in the April drive, how are you going to raise the balance necessary to meet the ten to twelve billion dollars of estimated expenditures reported to us by Mr. KITCHIN, the Democratic leader?

If we are willing to abdicate or abandon legislative powers and judgment at the instance of naval "experts," navy leagues, army staffs, great commercial interests, and other influences, secret and open, drunk with power, we must still accept the accompanying responsibility for such action, for that is ours, not theirs, to defend.

Another thought in conclusion. What is going to be the result of this impotent policy on the part of Congress, which reduces our legislative activities to the functions of mere rubber stamps? Mr. KITCHIN has just stated to the House while discussing the revenue bill that after all excess war profits are taken from war profiteers under the different revenue bill schedules, as revealed by official reports, that a snug balance of approximately $12,000,000,000 will remain in the purses of these same war profiteers, due to the fortunes of war.

Our soldiers in France and their wives and parents back home have sent thousands of letters to Members of Congress in the aggregate showing that the pittance of $30 per month given by Congress to those who risked their lives for us, and which money they allotted to dependents, has been held up by red-tape military methods. Presumably hundreds of thousands of cases have occurred where hardship and sometimes great suffering have resulted through inexcusable delay in paying the men who fight their dollar a day. While this has been the reward of sacrifice, the profiteers back home have been laying aside $12,000,000,000 in war-time excess profits.

While our boys have been serving at the front and millions of others have been sacrificing at home to win the war the profiteers at home have been waxing strong and more arrogant than ever before. I sat by the side of two Congressmen in the House yesterday, both of whom by a coincidence have lost sons in France, while my own, with the occupation army, spent his holidays in a hospital in Germany. Members of the House who themselves served in the American Army in France or Italy, with distinction, let me add, have protested by their voices and votes against this prodigal, unparalleled naval bill in times of peace.

Every constituent at home who has contributed some member of his family toward winning the war is entitled to ask how sleek war profiteers have made $12,000,000,000 over and above the taxes we have levied, while sacrifice has been the keynote in nineteen cases out of every twenty among our people. Every constituent has a right to ask what Congress and the administration have done during the war and since the war is over to relieve these intolerable conditions.

We are having public attention invited by the press of the country and by speakers upon the danger of Bolshevism. We have had pictured to us graphically the overthrown governments of our ally, Russia, and of our enemies, Germany and Austria, and dangers that beset other countries of Europe are known to us, dangers that are feared on this side of the sea, due to discontent caused by injustice.

Not 5 per cent of our people, it is safe to say, are tinctured with Bolshevism, militarism, or unlawful greedism, however widespread may be discontent with conditions; but it should be borne in mind that of that 5 per cent who occasion discontent the larger part is not composed of hoboes or red-flag anarchists opposed to all forms of government, with whom our peple have no sympathy. A large part of that 5 per cent of undesirables will be found in those whose enormous wealth, rolled up from the necessities of the people in war or peace, has been a constant source of irritation and whose unrestrained greed menaces our institutions. To those undesirables the war has contributed another class, who would Prussianize this country through an autocratic control, which has been a moving cause for overturning governments abroad.

All these disturbing elements in our midst combined do not represent 5 per cent of the people who are law-abiding, patriotic, and loyal to their Government, but constant object lessons of greed, selfishness, and autocratic power are responsible for a discontent more deep-seated than any mere question of wealth and poverty. To hide our heads in the sand is an ostrich attitude that fails to serve any good purpose. Tax laws that enabled war profiteers to hoard $12,000,000,000 of war profits are laws for which Congress is responsible, and all laws that permit unjust exactions or autocratic power in time of peace are laws for which we are accountable, and all extravagances or waste in public appropriations or expenditures are certain to bring discontent to those who pay the bills. Congress can not right all wrongs by law and our people know that and are too well satisfied with our form of Government to become affected by European social conditions, unless we create the same conditions here. Public extravagance at this time, brought about by bureaucratic influences, tending to commit this Government to a militaristic program, will provoke unrest and eventual distress. That is the course proposed by bills placed before us in these closing days of the session, and we will do well to set an example of economy for the people whose welfare we are permitted to influence through wise or unwise legislation. According to warnings I have quoted from leading Members of the House, whose warnings we will do well to heed, we are not doing that now.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We have about three weeks of this session remaining. From time to time I have observed that there seems to be a disposition upon the part of certain Members of this House to come in on the floor and attempt to interrupt the proceedings by injecting into the proceedings of the House matters that have nothing to do with the bills under consideration. The point seems to have been reached where Members who are in charge of the bills on both sides of the House can not proceed in an orderly way on account of the fact that some Members are continually butting in with matters not before the House and which in the majority of instances do not much concern the Members of the House or the public, and demanding that time be granted them by the House to have these matters heard and to have editorials and matters of that kind read to the membership of this House. Those who are in charge of bills are placed in a little awkward position, because if they do not accede to the wishes of such Members they make the point of no quorum. It simply resolves itself into this: Certain Members of the House filibuster if they can not have their way about what is going on in the House. I want to say to gentlemen in charge of bills in the House that the next three weeks ought to be a very busy time, and, as one Member of the House, I do not propose to sit here and see gentlemen in charge of the bills grant permission to have things read and speeches made on matters that are not before the House for consideration. If they are not in a position to object, I am. I have nothing more important during the next three weeks than to sit here and do that, and I shall do it. Gentlemen, it is a shame that such should be necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman will undertake to keep a quorum in the House, will he?

Mr. LARSEN. No; I will undertake to keep these disturbers from interrupting the orderly proceedings of the House. I will try to do that much. I want to put the House on notice once and for all that during the next three weeks when there is business before the House that needs attention it must be attended to, or else I shall object to irrelevant matters. Now, that is a fair business proposition, as I conceive it.

Mr. PADGETT. While we are considering the naval bill, let me run the thing a little smoothly, please. I think we will make time by doing so.

Mr. LARSEN. That is all right; but gentlemen in charge of bills have been permitting men to discuss matters that have nothing to do with the bills and nothing to do with any issue before the public. I have a right to see that those granting the time of the House shall do it for a legitimate purpose. I have the highest regard for the gentleman in charge of the bill, and nothing I say is in reference to him specially. I am speaking in a general way. It is ridiculous that the business in this House can not be attended to in a businesslike way without somebody interrupting and bringing some matter to the attention of the House that the House is not interested in.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSEN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman think that if he adopts the policy he states he is liable to get the House in an attitude of mind where he is going to cause more obstruction to business than would otherwise happen?

Mr. LARSEN. I think the gentleman misunderstood the force of my statement. I said when there was a matter before the House demanding immediate attention. I realize that there will probably be times when the House will not be specially engaged in matters of importance and will not be pressed for time, and if so there will be plenty of opportunity for Members to be heard without interruption of business.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I want to make some inquiries about the item just read, and I will do so in a moment. I am very much entertained by the distinguished gentleman who just gave notice to the House that he would keep the House in order if somebody else did not do it. I have heard that kind of talk many times, and I never knew the man who made it to have nerve enough to carry it out.

Mr. LARSEN. I will promise the gentleman that this time he will see that the gentleman from Georgia has all the nerve necessary.

Mr. MANN. I do not yield to the gentleman. He is asking that the House be in order and he is not in order himself. Suppose he keeps in order for a few minutes himself and see whether he can keep the House in order.

Mr. LARSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Not yet. Now, Mr. Chairman, the man who pilots a bill through this House has to use some common sense. I have heard gentlemen on the floor of the House repeatedly tell how they would object to everything asked for, and yet I have known those gentlemen to sit here for a day, sometimes two days, sometimes three days, and object to everything, and then quietly disappear for the balance of the session. [Laughter.]

Now, I hope the gentleman from—I do not know what State he comes from——

A MEMBER. Georgia.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will keep his nerve, but he will not. I hope he will require the Democrats to keep a quorum in the House, but he will not. [Laughter.] I hope he will object to everything that is asked for the next three weeks that is not in regular order, but he will not. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Georgia said there would be time during the next three weeks when anything could be brought before the House; that there would be nothing special, but there will not be; there will not be a minute during the next three weeks when there is not some special subject before the House for consideration. Gentlemen on both sides of the House will continue to do in the future as they have always done in the past—interject something that is extraneous under the implied or actual threat of delaying the House if their request is not granted. And the gentleman from Georgia, who is so brave that he is going to expedite business, will, in the end, if he keeps his nerve, only result in delaying the transaction of business in the House. I hope he will get the experience.

Mr. LARSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LARSEN. Does not the gentleman think that he has been here so long and been imposed on so long by Members who wish to interfere with the business of the House, and has yielded so much that he has got in the habit and does not know how to quit it? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; I object oftener than anybody else in the House.

Mr. LARSEN. Then why should the gentleman object to my objecting? Does the gentleman expect that he is going to monopolize objections in the House? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I have the nerve to keep up the objections which I make. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will have the nerve now to keep this up for three weeks, but I am sure he will not.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Does not the gentleman think——

Mr. MANN. This is all extraneous; why does not the gentleman from Georgia object?

Mr. LARSEN. Because the gentleman is talking now on a sensible matter. While I admit the gentleman has wasted nearly five minutes, I am going to see that the gentleman from Illinois and other gentlemen in the House do not persist in taking up needlessly the time of the House for the next three weeks.

Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman object now?

Mr. LARSEN. That is all right; we will see.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee about this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LARSEN. If the gentleman proposes to discuss the bill, I will not object.

Mr. MANN. I make no promises.

Mr. LARSEN. Then I object. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee about the appropriation of $500,000 for the water-front improvement at the Norfolk Navy Yard? My recollection is that ever since I have been in Congress we have been making appropriations for these water-front improvements. Is there any end in sight?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I can not say that there will be a time when we will not be making some appropriation for that.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Illinois is out of order in that he is not discussing his motion to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out of the bill the language—

Water-front improvement, $500,000.

This is like taking candy from children. [Laughter.]

Mr. LARSEN. I presume the gentleman refers to the $500,000?

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt the orderly proceedings of the House by constantly "butting in."

Mr. LARSEN. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the bill.

Mr. MANN. I am discussing what is before the House.

Mr. LARSEN. I make the point of order that he is not.

Mr. MANN. Or what is seeking to bring itself before the House. I would like to ask the gentleman a question about this proposition.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, some years ago at Norfolk yards we bought what is known as the Smoley tract, on which they have erected this new, large dry dock we were speaking of this morning, which has just been completed. This is for the improvement of the water front on that new part known as the Smoley tract, where is located the dock and also the large buildings that we appropriated for in the last and the next to the last appropriation bill. The conditions there on the water front are very much crowded. At one time, when the committee visited there, we saw the ships berthed in some places three alongside, and this is to give additional berthing space for the ships, and that is one of the most important points of our whole Navy on account of the Chesapeake Bay and the Roads there.

Mr. MANN. Is this for dredging in front of the dry dock?

Mr. PADGETT. Some of it is in front of the dry dock, and then other of it is for the extension of a key wall alongside, and the dredging to get the depth, so that the boats can come alongside and berth.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy yard, Charleston, S. C.: Dredging, to continue, $30,000; air compressors and auxiliaries, $118,000; oxyacetylene plant, $25,000; fire protection, $50,000; in all, $223,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. What is the necessity of spending such a large amount as $118,000 for air compressors and auxiliaries?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the committee went into that very fully. The compressor, as I remember, that they had there broke down. They had been running it for quite a while.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the capacity of this compressor?

Mr. PADGETT. I think $68,000 was the price paid for the first air compressor. In addition to that, there was purchased intercoolers, condensers, and so forth, at a cost of in the neighborhood of $50,000, making the total of about $110,000. Admiral Parks said it would cost about $118,000 for the compressor and the necessary things to go with it, other than the boilers. The compressor broke down.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ascertain the capacity of it, because it must have tremendous capacity if you are going to spend $118,000 for it.

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then you are spending an extravagant figure.

Mr. PADGETT. No; it is not a large one. Those things are very expensive.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have some little knowledge about air compressors myself.

Mr. PADGETT. Let me read from the hearings:

Admiral PARKS. I find that I have just gotten in the bids on which to make contract for that electric generating machinery that was provided for in the last act, and I think that will be sufficient in the way of electric generating capacity. But the principal trouble at the Charleston yard has been on account of lack of air compressors. We got a compressor running in September, and it ran for about three days and went down. It required a lot of attention before it could be started again, and then somewhere about the 1st of October it got into operation again. Without that compressor they could not get air to the shipways for the riveting work on the destroyers—I think they are destroyers that they are building at Charleston, and I believe they have ways there for three.

The CHAIRMAN. They were building some of these chasers down there.

Mr. BROWNING. I was going to ask if they were building destroyers.

The CHAIRMAN. I remember that they were building chasers and a gunboat.

Admiral PARKS. I think there are three destroyer ways, but I do not remember positively about it. It is certainly desirable to have a duplicate air compressor. An air compressor is a machine that gives a lot of trouble if it breaks down, and it is liable to break down and requires a long time for repairs to be made. I think another air compressor would be an advantage.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not question that it is very desirable to have a duplicate air compressor should the one that is running get out of commission, because so much depends upon it and the work would absolutely stop.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was endeavoring to ascertain the capacity of the air compressor for which we are appropriating this large sum of $118,000. It must be one of tremendous capacity if this amount is to be expended for it.

Mr. PADGETT. It is not extra large; but they have a good deal of activity there, and besides, what would cost $118,000 now would cost before the war perhaps about $60,000 or $75,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order, although I did not get the information that I desire.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval station, Key West, Fla.: Station improvements, $25,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 2, after the figures "$25,000" insert:
"Water system, including purchase of land, and the necessary rights of way, $2,000,000."

Mr. PADGETT. On that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read the reason for this amendment from the hearings, on page 965:

The establishment of such a base makes it necessary to have an adequate supply of fresh water. The naval experts figure the naval requirements alone at 552,500 gallons per day. The present supply consists of condensed rain water, costing $7 per thousand gallons, the deficiency being supplied by tank cars hauling water from the Everglades, a distance of 128 miles, and costing $3 per thousand gallons. The present consumption of the city, the Army, and the Navy averages 173,000 gallons per day.

The prospective rate of consumption makes the cost of the present method of supply prohibitive, to say nothing of its uncertainty.

The last State census of Key West is given as 18,495 and it is not reasonable to expect a municipality of such small proportions to undertake so big a project as that determined upon as the most feasible method for procuring an adequate supply for the city, the Army, the Navy, and such quantity as may be required by the Florida East Coast Railroad.

The plan proposed is to build pipe lines from some adequate source of supply, the cost of which, including pumping system and all other requisites to the reservoir, has been estimated at $2,000,000. This work the Navy proposes to do, since it is and will continue to be the biggest user. The city of Key West has agreed to provide the reservoir and distributing system, estimated to cost $400,000, and to operate the system upon completion. The Navy's investment in the project will be refunded in due course through a special rate on the water which it consumes.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the estimate is that the city of Key West will take about $100,000 worth of water, the East Coast Railroad Co. is estimated to take $125,000 worth, and the Navy about that much, and with others to use water it all figures up that the price paid by the users of this water will amount to about $445,000 a year. Now, it is well known that there is no fresh water in Key West other than rain water. Water is carried there, in addition to rain water, upon barges and upon trains. It is utterly impossible to secure a supply of fresh water at Key West. They have bored there time after time in an attempt to do it, but they have never been able yet to secure fresh water. Now, this has been made a submarine base and a naval station, and a great many ships touch at Key West during the course of the year, and those ships have to be replenished with fresh water. It is utterly impossible to get it in any other way. It does seem to me, as the Navy Department has recommended it, as committees have been appointed to investigate—some committee that the Secretary referred to here, after an exhaustive investigation, recommended it—it does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that it ought to be included in this bill. Key West, I will state, is not in my district, but Mr. SEARS, who represents that district, unfortunately is at home on account of the serious illness of his wife, and he requested me to offer this amendment, which I do in the utmost of good faith; and I sincerely trust that the committee will see proper to adopt it, because it is certainly very badly needed there; and I ask unanimous consent to extent my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee make the point of order?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will in a moment. I want to state this project in the language submitted was submitted in the estimate of the Secretary of the Navy. The committee gave it a very full and thorough investigation, and there is a great deal about this in the hearings. It involves a project that costs the Government $2,000,000 for a water system, and the project is to run a pipe line across land and across the arms of the sea 128 miles up into the mainland of Florida and bring the water down through pipes 128 miles to supply the city. It is also true that there is no fresh-water supply there, but after giving the matter very careful consideration the committee was not prepared at this time to recommend it. It ought to be looked into further. A project to appropriate $2,000,000, to be expended for the establishment of pipe lines 128 miles long to bring water to a city, and then to cooperate with the city and the railroad, is a scheme that ought to be worked out more thoroughly than has been done, and the committee did not see fit to recommend it, and cut it out of the estimate, and I feel constrained to make the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not true that the Secretary of the Navy urged the adoption of this matter before the committee?

Mr. PADGETT. He did very earnestly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And is not it also true that some committee was appointed, not the Helm Board, but the Bureau of Operations, I believe it is, through a committee, investigated and recommended it?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know whether there was a board or not. The chief of operations, as I understand, wanted it as an adjunct to the operations which are going on there now.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to state to the gentleman that the Secretary says, on page 963—

> It is recommended urgently by the Bureau of Operations and officers who had charge of operating the fleets during the war.

Mr. PADGETT. It has been recommended, as I stated, and I stated also there is no fresh water there except rain water. I have been there twice and looked into it, and it is a very important matter, but it seems to me a proposition involving an expenditure of $2,000,000 to run a fresh-water line 128 miles, a part of it over land and the other through the arms of the sea——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Of course the gentleman knows a great many cities bring their fresh-water supply that distance and perhaps greater. It is not unusual to carry water that far.

Mr. PADGETT. That may not be, but it is unusual for the Navy to attempt to carry it that far for the benefit of a city.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Let me ask one more question. If it is true that the Navy have innumerable vessels that touch here, and this is the nearest point where they can be supplied with fresh water, and if it is true that the individual users, such as the city of Key West and the East Coast Railroad, and others, will in a few years repay the money, does not the gentleman think it is a project that ought to appeal to the judgment of the Committee on Naval Affairs and to this Committee of the Whole?

Mr. PADGETT. It may do that after it is further investigated, but I do not think that it is yet sufficiently developed to authorize it, and then the committee adopted this policy with reference to the entire public works under the Bureau of Yards and Docks. We cut out all new enterprises, all new enlargements and extensions, and have only reported those matters which we felt were absolutely necessary at the present time, and this came under the class of the policy we adopted in reference to all the other yards.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman give any information as to how a naval base came to be established at a point where fresh water was 128 miles away?

Mr. PADGETT. That base was established many years ago, and in many respects it is one of the most important bases that we have for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. They have always needed fresh water there. I suppose this need has not arisen on account of any recent legislative action?

Mr. PADGETT. Ever since there was a city they have had to use either rain water or water stored in cisterns or bring it in barges, and since the East Coast Railroad was built they bring it down in tank cars.

Of course that is an inconvenience and it is also expensive. But to take up a project of the character of this, until it could be further developed and looked into, the committee did not feel justified in granting it. But Key West is a very important point, and all of the administrations have insisted upon it as very important. Mr. Meyer, when Secretary of the Navy, urged very extensive improvements there, which the committee declined to recommend at that time—not this one, but others—and every naval officer, I think, and all the different administrations have emphasized very strongly the importance of Key West for development.

Mr. WALSH. It would seem, in view of recent exceptional actions, there ought not to be any serious objection to providing for the Navy to be able to get water at Key West.

Mr. PADGETT. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Naval station, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii: Electric connections to dry dock, $21,000; substation near dry dock, $68,000; salt-water fire protection, $35,000; fresh-water connections to dry dock, $11,500; air connections to dry dock, $8,000; toilet facilities for ships in dock, $25,000; in all, $168,500.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the meaning of the item "air connections to dry dock?"

Mr. PADGETT. It is to operate the pumpings there and the drilling, and so forth, by compressed air.

Mr. WALSH. By pneumatic pressure?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman whether or not that dry dock is completed?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. It is thought to be completed during the present spring or summer.

Mr. MANN. It has not failed, has it?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. It is proceeding now, they say, very satisfactorily.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know how much we have expended on the dry dock there up to date, altogether?

Mr. PADGETT. I think the limit of cost was about $4,000,000.

Mr. MANN. The limit of cost was exceeded a good many years ago.

Mr. PADGETT. I am talking about what the limits have gone up to. It started down below $3,000,000, I think, and it has been increased from time to time. They had great trouble there, you will remember.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I saw the place. I remember the contest here over it.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand it is nearing completion now, and perhaps is 85 or 90 per cent completed, and is regarded now in a safe and satisfactory condition.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Depots for coal: For depots for coal and other fuel, Yorktown, Va., wharf, $50,000; oil proofing reservoirs, $150,000; in all $200,000. Contingent, $35,000; care and custody of naval petroleum reserves, $10,000; in all, $245,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What are "oil proofing reservoirs?"

Mr. PADGETT. You will remember that Congress appropriated for and authorized the purchase and construction of a large oil storage basin or place at Yorktown, Va., putting the storage under ground instead of above ground in tanks as heretofore.

Mr. MANN. How does that come under an item headed "Depots for coal"?

Mr. PADGETT. Depots for coal and other fuel.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. The heading is "Depots for coal."

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. When we used to burn coal exclusively in the Navy——

Mr. MANN. Is that an erroneous heading?

Mr. PADGETT. It is used for coal and also for oil, and both have been appropriated for under that heading. Now, about the proofing——

Mr. MANN. I hope the Committee on Naval Affairs will some time learn to keep up with the progress of the times and change a heading when there is reason for it.

Mr. PADGETT. The Treasury Department object to the changing of the name.

Mr. MANN. Does the Treasury Department object to our legislating?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; but they did send down here a recommendation, which Congress in the last session agreed to, changing the names of certain appropriations, in order to put them back to what they had been before. Now, we sometimes appropriate for a coal station, and next year we will appropriate for a fuel station.

Mr. MANN. Why do you not say "depots for fuel," then?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, that would be a good designation.

Mr. MANN. This is misleading. A heading is there for the purpose of giving information, but it lies, because it does not give the right information.

Mr. PADGETT. It has been there all these years.

Mr. MANN. Well, it used to be "depots for coal." Now it is mainly depots for oil.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. This particular appropriation is. Several years ago it was all coal, and then it was coal and oil.

Mr. MANN. Having been for coal 20 years ago, the department and the Treasury Department, or somebody, thinks it ought to say "coal" now. I suppose they will continue to say "coal" after coal is not used.

Mr. PADGETT. In those times I do not know what they will say, because they will be so far off before we quit using coal.

Mr. MANN. I do not know about that.

Mr. PADGETT. But they are using them for both now.

Mr. MANN. I know they are, and the heading ought to so state.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment. What is this "Contingent, $35,000"?

Mr. PADGETT. That is for the purpose of providing a fund for taking care of, in the nature of repairs, various coaling stations and the fuel-oil stations, and so forth, that we have scattered all over the country, where we can not designate them and they can not be estimated for. It is a fund for the repair and upkeep and maintenance of the coaling and fuel stations all over the country.

Mr. WALSH. And if they do not have this continued appropriation of $35,000 they could not repair those?

Mr. PADGETT. They would not have a specific fund.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, they would not have a specific fund, but they have got other funds, have they not?

Mr. PADGETT. They have not any other that they have estimated for. It has been carried that way heretofore.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the gentleman what is this "care and custody of naval petroleum reserves"?

Mr. PADGETT. Under the administration of President Taft large areas of land were withdrawn and known as "petroleum reserves" for the benefit of the Navy, and this is a fund to enable the Secretary to guard and protect and keep off intruders and persons from going in there and sinking wells and various things of that kind. It is to care for and protect these many thousands of acres.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, it is reservations?

Mr. PADGETT. It is reservations.

Mr. WALSH. It is not a branch of the service like naval reserves?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no. It is a land reservation.

Mr. WALSH. I have never heard of a land reservation called a "reserve." I thought the designation was "reservation." Do they have to spend $10,000 a year to keep marauders off the property?

Mr. PADGETT. That is the amount we have provided for several years. I do not know whether it is all expended or not. But if it is not expended it goes back into the Treasury. It is not a continuing appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. I understand these are reservations from which they are getting no supply?

Mr. PADGETT. Not at present. There are many thousands of acres in these reservations.

Mr. WALSH. Is Yorktown, Va., the only depot for coal that has an oil-proof reservoir?

Mr. PADGETT. Let me explain that. That applies to many of these reservoirs. There are many of them. They are scattered over many acres of land. They are for the storage of oil for the fleet. When they were constructed at the beginning of the war we were expecting to have to use Mexican oil, which is a heavy oil.

Now, we can get American oil, and that is a finer, thinner oil. The sides of these storage tanks underground leak out this thinner, lighter oil; it permeates and goes through the sides of the walls. This is to go over the walls with a coating thicker and heavier and denser, so as to prevent the leaking of the oil from these underground storage tanks. Those tanks are made of concrete and stone and things of that kind.

Mr. WALSH. So that the only part of this item which will be available for expenditure at Yorktown, Va., is $50,000 for the wharf?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This other is for various points throughout the country?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. They are designated. The estimate was sent down to the committee in a lump sum. That was the way it was done for many years, until a few years ago, when the committee began to separate it. It was sent down in a lump sum this time, and the committee has separated it into the different points.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my reservation of a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws the reservation of the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va.: Toward water-front improvements and permanent improvements to station, including piers, bulkheads, filling, grading, etc., $1,000,000.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FOSS. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee where this operating base is situated Is it the old Jamestown Exposition?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; it is the old Jamestown Exposition, including Piney Point, that runs out to deep water there.

Mr. FOSS. How much money has been expended and appropriated on this?

Mr. PADGETT. I could not tell you. The great bulk of it has been expended under lump-sum appropriations that were made by the Committee on Appropriations during the war, but it is a tremendous big sum.

Mr. FOSS. We originally bought the land?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; that cost, as I remember, about $1,400,000.

Mr. FOSS. Did that include the buildings that were on it at the time?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. We put those buildings in repair, and that has cost a large sum—much more than was originally estimated.

Mr. FOSS. The purpose, then, as I understand, was that it should be used as a naval training station?

Mr. PADGETT. It has been used as a naval training station and operating base and a place for the storage of supplies, so that ships coming up that narrow, congested river can go there and get their supplies and stores. They have many activities there.

Mr. FOSS. They have made it more than simply a naval training station?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes; it is more than simply a naval training station.

Mr. FOSS. Although the original idea was simply to make it a naval training station?

Mr. PADGETT. I think it was called from the beginning an "operating base," but the activities there have been very greatly enlarged. When the war came on it was enlarged. Nearly all kinds of activities are carried on there, because, as the gentleman knows, it is the principal operating base of Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. FOSS. How many men have they been training at the training school?

Mr. PADGETT. Quite a large number. I think about 12,000 or 14,000 were trained there at one time.

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman can not tell, then, offhand how much has been expended there at the present time?

Mr. PADGETT. I think I could give you some of it. The appropriations made to date for the general development of the operating base, Hampton Roads, are as follows:

Act of June 15, 1917, establishment and development of the station, including $1,200,000 for the purchase of the land. $2,800,000. That would leave $1,600,000 for improvement and development.

Act of March 28, 1918, additional compensation for property taken over, $55,072.25. That is where it went over the $1,200,000 that was appropriated.

The act of July 1, 1918, toward water-front improvement, permanent improvement of the station, including piers, bulkheads, filling, grading, and so forth, $3,000,000.

The deficiency act of November 4, 1918, carried $1,174,556.68. That would make something like $7,000,000.

Mr. FOSS. My impression was that the water was rather shallow there.

Mr. PADGETT. Part of it is. They had to build some piers out there, but they are building some bulkheads and key walls out in the water and dredging behind them, and by that method they will add something like 500 acres of land to the original purchase.

Mr. FOSS. How many acres were there in the original purchase?

Mr. PADGETT. My recollection is that it was somewhere in the neighborhood of 600 acres.

Mr. FOSS. Six hundred?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I notice for the hearings just read that it is planned to spend a total of $17,000,000 on this project down at the old Jamestown Exposition grounds.

Mr. PADGETT. That is what they told the committee it would cost, but we have appropriated only $1,000,000. As to whether that total amount will be appropriated in the future will depend upon Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is involved in such an extensive program that will occasion an outlay of $17,000,000?

Mr. PADGETT. A good deal of it is for dredging and filling, which I referred to, and also the building of piers out to deep water; and then the construction of their storage facilities and the grounds for the training, and all those things, which make an increased expense.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this base to be used for purposes similar to that at Great Lakes Training Station?

Mr. PADGETT. No; Great Lakes is strictly a training station. That is inland, and they train men there on the Lakes. This one at Hampton Roads is the great supply base and the operating base for the fleet. That is the finest large harbor that we have on the Atlantic, and the principal naval base is there; and they will keep there the great supplies of stores and materials and all of those things that are required for the outfitting of the ships, and things of that kind.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I remember when the Jamestown Exposition was held. It was not a financial success; and after it was over it was desired to sell the exposition site to the Government of the United States. Various attempts were made. I am under the impression that Congress several times declined to make an appropriation or an authorization for that purpose, and I have a dim impression that at one time we provided against money being used for that purpose; but I now congratulate the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, who has always advocated the purchase of this site by the Government of the United States. There is nothing like persistence. The people who had this land found it of no use on earth to themselves, I guess, and no other customer for it, I presume, though probably that would not be admitted, and they finally worked it off on the Government. Almost anybody who is persistent enough and keeps at it, trying first one body of Congress and if not successful trying the other, and if not successful there going to the Executive—almost anybody who keeps at it, trying to unload something on the Government, finally succeeds. If you want the Government to adopt a reform or dismiss an official or dispense with an office, that seems to be hopeless. If you want to get the Government to buy something, just keep at it and keep at it, and after a while the Government will buy it at a fancy price.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Hospital, Puget Sound, Wash.: Quarters for nurses (female), $40,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I should like to discuss for a moment the strikes in the Puget Sound country. Beginning as strikes in the shipyards, these have spread to many other industries.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think there is any strike in the navy yard.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; and I hope there will not be; but I understand that the metal workers on ships of the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation threaten not only strikes in the navy yard, but strikes generally in the metal industries of the entire Pacific coast, and perhaps throughout the United States. The Puget Sound shipyard strikes have been followed by sympathetic strikes, even down to the barbers, a general strike having been called, even though same was not authorized by the general organization of the unions.

The strikes were preceded by a series of Sunday street meetings and near riots. At these meetings the red flag was displayed and vicious talks of revolution and destruction were made. By whom? In many cases, Mr. Chairman, by men who owe no allegiance to the United States; by men who, in my opinion, should not be permitted to remain in the United States one single minute. After one of the recent Sunday riots in Seattle the authorities arrested 13 ringleaders and took their names. There was an array of Slavinskys and names of that sort.

Out of the 13 riot leaders, only 2 were Americans, of whom 1 said he wished he was not an American. The other 11 were aliens, and half of the remaining 11 were Russians. Think of it! Preaching revolution on the north Pacific, handing out literature labeled "Political democracy is an empty dream," and the like. From Russia they came, and to Russia they should be made to go. In Russia right now they can find more liberty than they know what to do with. We have laws on our statute books that provide for their deportation, and all aliens like them. If our Government officials will proceed under the Federal laws which we have enacted here in Congress, and deport those aliens who come here undertaking to tell how to run our Government and our affairs, we will have less trouble from these strikes. What kind of a socialistic government do these alien agitators desire to give us—the Russian kind, the German kind, or no government at all but anarchy and destruction, loot and plunder, murder and savagery? Why have not the deportations started? People can think of that as they are suffering from strikes which paralyze every activity in two great cities of the Pacific Northwest.

I have often wondered why it is that so many people in the United States are willing that these foreigners shall continue to come. How long can we permit them to come to preach from soap-box pulpits, telling us how to run our Government on an international plan? Why are they allowed to remain? If any of us should go to Russia, Japan, or any other country, and undertake to tell the people of those countries how to run their Governments and operate their affairs, we would meet with short shrift. It is time for the United States to get busy and do a little something on its own account for its own people. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Total public works, $11,414,350, and the amounts herein appropriated therefor, except for repairs and preservation at navy yards and stations, shall be available until expended.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is the necessity of making these vast appropriations, totaling $11,000,000, available until expended?

Mr. PADGETT. Congress has always made appropriations for public works, for Bureau of Yards and Docks, and other appropriations for this work, available until expended, because if you start a building you can not complete it in a year, and it might run from one year to another; they have always been made available until expended. That has been the general policy.

Mr. WALSH. As the result of that policy we have been called upon frequently to increase the limit of cost on these projects. If we give some indication that we are not going to be persuaded so easily to increase the limit of cost of these various projects, we might find some of them built within the limit, as with the case of the naval dock at Norfolk, the completion of which, I understand, is to be celebrated soon. Of course, in reference to the appropriations for the military branch, there is a constitutional inhibition against their being made for more than two years in advance. I do not know whether that would be construed to apply to the naval appropriations or not.

Mr. PADGETT. I did not quite catch the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. WALSH. I say there is a constitutional inhibition with reference to the appropriation for the military branch of the Government.

Mr. PADGETT. That does not apply to the Navy—only to the Army.

Mr. WALSH. I take it that it does not. But I think we ought not to put in a provision to make these appropriations available until expended. It seems to me that by doing that, by continuing it over a long period, Congress would have very little control and jurisdiction over it and would likewise be in a position where it would not have very much information about it. The only difference, as I understand it, is that if this provision is not put in, when the next bill comes up they will have to come back and ask for a reappropriation, or a further appropriation, to complete the project.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but when they start out to make the plans and specifications the year may expire and then they would be tied up. The appropriation bills are indefinite as to the time when they are to become a law. It would no doubt result seriously to the economic and proper execution of the erection of public buildings.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I take it that a large share of these public works are constructed under contract, and it is not feasible to make the contract for public construction on a one-year appropriation. That is the reason under existing law for the covering-in act. I do not know whether the covering-in act would cover in all these appropriations or not, but the bill assumes that it would or else it would not make them available until expended. These things that are supposed in the main to be done by contract may require practically a year in which to formulate the contract and much more time to complete it. The appropriations are not covered back at the end of the time specified by the covering-in act.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that if we make an appropriation for a building that may cost a million dollars that can not be completed within the year, that unless we made the appropriation available until expended the authorities could not enter into a contract?

Mr. MANN. They could not enter into a contract unless we gave the authorization to enter into the contract. That we frequently do.

Mr. WALSH. The appropriations do that.

Mr. MANN. The appropriations authorize the making of a contract; that is true. They could make the contract within the year, but it is a very common thing to provide an appropriation with an authorization to make the contract for a much larger amount. But the amounts in this bill, probably in the main, would not warrant that, and it is desirable, I think, to permit the appropriation when made to be available for the completion of the project, so that they can make the contracts and proceed on the theory that they have the money. They could not make a contract beyond the authorization under existing law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a statement under the reservation of a point of order. I understand that if we authorize the construction and appropriate the money for any project, such as are included in this item, that the naval authorities have the right to contract for the construction within the year, and the money then remains available for two years additional. If it is contracted for within the time of the authorization of the appropriation act——

Mr. MANN. It remains available for the payment of obligations incurred within the year.

Mr. STAFFORD. And remains available for two years thereafter.

Mr. MANN. If the obligations were incurred during the year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think it might be apropos to this discussion to read into the RECORD the covering-in act:

SEC. 5. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1874, and of each year thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause all unexpended balances of appropriations which shall have remained on the books of the Treasury for two fiscal years to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury: Provided, That this provision shall not apply to permanent specific appropriations, appropriations for rivers and harbors, lighthouses, fortifications, public buildings, or the pay of the Navy and Marine Corps; but the appropriations named in this proviso shall continue available until otherwise ordered by Congress, and this provision shall not apply to any unexpended balance of the appropriation made by the act approved December 21, 1871, for expenses that may be incurred under articles 1 to 9 of the treaty with Great Britain, concluded May 8, 1871, which balance the act approved March 3, 1873, authorized to be expended to enable the President to fulfill the stipulations contained in the twentieth, twenty-second, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, and twenty-fifth articles of said treaty: And provided further, That this section shall not operate to prevent the fulfillment of contracts existing at the date of the passage of this act; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, at the beginning of each session, report to Congress, with his annual estimates, any balances of appropriations for specific objects affected by this section that may need to be reappropriated.

Under the wording of that section this appropriation would be available for two years.

Mr. MANN. Available for two years for the payment of obligations.

Mr. STAFFORD. And if for specific objects it is continued available for all time, because it is one of the exceptions of the covering-in act.

Mr. MANN. As I said a while ago, I was not sure whether the covering-in act would apply to these cases or not. The matter is carried in the bill. If the covering-in act applies, I think the provision ought to stay in, as it is on all fours with the exceptions in the covering-in act.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will recall that about six years ago a resolution was brought in from the Naval Affairs Committee authorizing all of the unexpended appropriations heretofore voted for the navy yard at New Orleans, running into hundreds of thousands of dollars, and running back for many years, to be utilized for certain new construction. It is not good policy to allow these unexpended appropriations to remain authorized for all time and not to be turned back into the Treasury. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to make the point of order. I think that the act that has been read by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is plain as to what the covering-in requirement is. This is a provision to take this out of the general law relating to appropriations. I do not think, with two years within which they can make payment of the projects provided for in this bill, provided they are authorized, we ought to permit these appropriations to run along interminably. There ought to be some way of checking up from time to time, and the Committee on Naval Affairs ought to be in a position to ascertain. The gentleman was asked only a short time ago what was the cost of the dry dock at Pearl Harbor. He said it started in at about $3,000,000 and they raised it a million dollars and it climbed up somewhat.

Mr. PADGETT. The limit of cost in the dry dock at Pearl Harbor was accounted for by the hydrostatic pressure of water coming up through the porous coral underneath, which lifted the whole works up into the air. When they pumped the water out of the basin of the dock it was the hydrostatic pressure which caused the trouble. That was the delay and the cause of the increase in the limit of cost.

Mr. WALSH. It was the hydrostatic pressure of the water at Pearl Harbor and the hydrostatic pressure of the mud at Philadelphia. Of course, there is always some reason for raising the limit, and sometimes the reason is more disappointing in some cases than in others. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. On what part?

Mr. WALSH. It is the whole thing.

Mr. PADGETT. It is on that part after the total?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts does not make the point of order against the words "total public works, $11,414,350"?

Mr. WALSH. I think that might as well go out, as they do not add anything to the statute; but I do not care about them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order to that part of the paragraph after the figures "$11,414,350."

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery: For tolls and ferriages; care, transportation, and burial of the dead, including officers and enlisted men who die within the United States, and supernumerary patients who die in naval hospitals; purchase of cemetery lots; purchase of books and stationery, binding of medical records, unbound books, and pamphlets; hygienic and sanitary investigation and illustration; sanitary and hygienic instruction; purchase and repairs of nonpassenger-carrying wagons, automobile ambulances, and harness; purchase of and feed for horses and cows; maintenance, repair, and operation of two passenger-carrying motor vehicles for naval dispensary, Washington, D. C., and of one motor-propelled vehicle for official use only for the medical officer on out-patient medical service at the Naval Academy, and of a motor omnibus for the transportation of convalescent patients and attendants at the Naval Hospital at Las Animas, Colo., to be used only for official purposes; trees, plants, care of grounds, garden tools, and seeds; incidental articles for the Naval Medical School and naval dispensary, Washington, naval medical-supply depots, sick quarters at Naval Academy and marine barracks; washing for medical department at Naval Medical School and naval dispensary, Washington, naval medical-supply depots, sick quarters at Naval Academy and marine barracks, dispensaries at navy yards and naval stations, and ships; and for minor repairs on buildings and grounds of the United States Naval Medical School and naval medical-supply depots; rent of rooms for naval dispensary, Washington, D. C., not to exceed $1,200; for the care, maintenance, and treatment of the insane of the Navy and Marine Corps on the Pacific coast, including supernumeraries held for transfer to the Government Hospital for the Insane; for dental outfits and dental material, and all other necessary contingent expenses; in all, $1,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. Will the chairman of the committee indicate to the House what is meant by the designation "supernumerary patients"?

Mr. PADGETT. Say that a man is sent as a patient to the hospital, and while he is in the hospital his term of enlistment expires. He is really no longer in the service, but they do not turn him out. They take care of him and treat him until he gets well or until he dies. He is regarded as a supernumerary in the hospital.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is quite a term to apply to a discharged sailor.

Mr. PADGETT. He is not discharged. They do not discharge him. They keep him there. His term of enlistment expires; they do not discharge him. They treat him all of the time until he is well or dies.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is also proposed in this paragraph to appropriate money for authorizing the purchase of cemetery lots.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; to buy a lot to bury a man in if he has nothing and there is no place to bury him.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is not an authorization to purchase large grounds for the burial of sailors who have lost their lives in connection with the European war?

Mr. PADGETT. Nothing of that kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in the following paragraph authorization is provided for the transportation of the remains of the deceased sailors.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order that I may refer briefly to the case of Capt. Henry Harvey, who recently came to Philadelphia upon the steamship Haverford, the first troopship to run to the port of Philadelphia. Concerning Capt. Harvey, my friend Mr. P. F. Young, manager of the International Mercantile Marine Lines, has written me in substance that Capt. Harvey was the officer in charge of the White Star liner Persic, which sailed from Boston for London about August 25, 1918, carrying about 2,100 American soldiers, for landing at London or some other port to be designated by the authorities there upon arrival; that when about 40 miles northwest of the Scilly Islands the Persic was torpedoed. This was about 2.50 p. m. on September 7, 1918. Signals were at once passed with the British destroyers and other ships in the neighborhood, and the transfer of American troops to British destroyers or other craft was immediately started, with the result that all of the 2,100 American troops were safely transferred to British and other vessels at 4.45 p. m., a matter of less than two hours. Also, practically all of the equipment belonging to the troops was safely transferred and the troops were sent to a British camp at Salisbury Plains. So far as the Persic itself is concerned, Capt. Harvey handled the vessel in such a way that he finally brought her safely into Marys Roads, Scilly Islands, and the ship is still in existence and it is hoped will be in commission again at no distant date. My correspondent, Mr. Young, who keeps well posted in matters of this kind, advises me that Capt. Harvey for this persistently heroic service has been recognized in several ways by the British authorities; that they have conferred certain honors upon him; and Mr. Young rather laments the fact that no such honors have been bestowed upon the captain by any of the United States authorities. It is suggested that something might be done to give encouragement to officers of proven heroism, as in this case.

I do not care to introduce a special bill on this subject because of the numerous instances of heroism displayed by American officers and men during this war, but the captain deserves honorable mention.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman will bear in mind that just a few weeks ago the Senate passed a bill which had been passed by the House in a former session, and which has been approved recently by the President, authorizing the award of medals—congressional medals or medals of distinguished services, badges, and so forth—and I understand that is under consideration now for the purpose of giving the benefits of it to those who deserve it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am thankful to the gentleman for having made that statement.

Mr. PADGETT. This act just became a law recently, having been passed by the Senate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman again for that statement.

Mr. BUTLER. The House passed that bill six or eight months ago.

Mr. PADGETT. It was during the last session, and it went over to the present session of the Congress in the Senate, and the Senate passed it recently, and I noticed in the papers the other day that it had been approved by the President and was being taken into consideration with a view of its execution.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I say I would not care to introduce a bill in this particular case because of the many other cases of heroism displayed by officers and men of the Navy and of the Army, and I am gratified to have made the statement that provision has been made to give special recognition to men of proven heroism in the war on land and sea.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bringing home remains of officers, etc., Navy Department: To enable the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to cause to be transferred to their homes the remains of officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, of members of the Nurse Corps, of civilian officers and crews of naval auxiliaries, and of officers and enlisted men of the Naval Militia and National Naval Volunteers and the Naval Reserve Force when on active service with the Navy, who die or are killed in action ashore or afloat, and also to enable the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to cause to be transported to their homes the remains of civilian employees who die outside of the continental limits of the United States, $700,000: Provided, That the sum herein appropriated shall be available for payment for transportation of the remains of officers and men who have died while on duty at any time since April 21, 1898, and shall be available until June 30, 1921.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item for the transportation of the remains of deceased sailors, marines, and civilians brings up the subject as to what the policy of the Navy is going to be in the transportation of the remains of those who died abroad during the European war.

Mr. PADGETT. The committee went into that both at this session and at the last. It is the fixed purpose of the Navy to return the bodies of everyone who died abroad and if practical keep up with that. The Navy has a much smaller proposition than the Army in reference to that, because their men largely are on ships, and when a man dies on ship he is brought back immediately. If they died over in France and they are buried there, they have to remain there until negotiations can be made with the French Government for the removal of the remains. The gentleman knows France has a law prohibiting the disinterment of bodies within a certain time after burial.

Mr. STAFFORD. The reason why I brought this up is because of the changed position of the War Department. At the very outbreak of hostilities we were informed that at the close of the war, when it was opportune in relation to transportation facilities, that the remains of all our deceased soldiers would be brought back at Government expense. That was the information I obtained from the Cemeterial Division, Quartermaster Corps. It was also supplemented by information from The Adjutant General's Office. Now, within a week or 10 days information comes to us through the Committee on Appropriations that it is not going to be the policy of the War Department to bring back the remains of deceased soldiers.

Mr. IGOE. When was that change made, may I ask the gentleman?

Mr. STAFFORD. It surprised us. That was called to our attention in the Committee on Appropriations. After we had been given assurances by any number of departmental officials that it was the set policy to bring them back, now we learn the policy of the War Department is to be changed. I know the change of the position of the department surprised any number of members of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PADGETT. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment? I will state I had been informed at the office of The Adjutant General by The Adjutant General himself that it was the purpose to return the remains of all soldiers who died abroad.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to confirm that by saying The Adjutant General himself in the legislative subcommittee testified to that, but recently it seems there has been a new policy adopted by the War Department reversing its former position.

Mr. PADGETT. He went further and stated that a family would not be permitted to bring them back on their own account, because the Government would bring them back for them, and that before they were brought back the families would be communicated with to ascertain definitely their wishes as to whether they should be buried in a national cemetery or delivered to the family at their home, and I had not heard anything to the contrary.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was stated originally that the remains of all the deceased soldiers would be brought back unless the immediate family should request that they should not be brought back.

Mr. PADGETT. That statement was made to me also.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope, if it is true, Congress will take such action as is necessary to insure the bringing back of the bodies of these soldiers whose folks desire that to be done. We have all had a good many inquiries from relatives of soldiers who died in France inquiring as to whether or not their remains would be brought back to the United States, and requesting that that be done. Now, I think after we have assured these folks on the statement of the War Department that that would be the case that not to do that would be an outrage upon those people in this country whose sons have died for their country.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to tell me whether the War Department is now bringing back the remains?

Mr. FOSTER. No; I understand they are not. And they have said in the communications I have had from them that they can not bring them back now on account of shipping conditions, but later on they propose to bring back the body of every boy who died in Europe if his friends desire. If not there would be appropriate action taken for the establishment of a national cemetery in France. Now, I think it would be a very, very bad thing if the Government and the War Department should decide they were not going to do this.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Adjutant General a few days ago informed me it was intended to assume that everybody wanted their relatives brought back unless there was advice to the contrary.

Mr. STAFFORD. How recent was that?

Mr. BARKLEY. Within the last week.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am surprised at the variance in the information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like just two minutes more. I think if the gentleman has information that it is going to be the policy of the department to do that, Congress ought to take prompt action.

Mr. MANN. To do what?

Mr. FOSTER. To assure the people of this country that the bodies of the boys are going to be brought back at such time as it can be done. Of course, we realize it can not be done now.

Mr. STAFFORD. At the last meeting of the Committee on Appropriations the information was conveyed to us by the chairman that he had received information from the War Department a few days before that the policy of the War Department was not to bring back the interred remains of the deceased soldiers. It struck us all with surprise, because we had been under the impression that the set policy of the department was to bring them back as soon as transportation facilities were afforded.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would be a mistake for the Government not to do it. Relatives in this country of boys who have died in France feel that they want those remains brought back here so that they may be buried in the family lot in a cemetery near their home. Now, not to do that would be, I think, very bad for the country.

Mr. MANN. In some cases they want the remains brought back, and in some cases they would like to have the remains stay where they now rest, and I think in many cases they would like to have the Government own and take care of a cemetery over there where the remains could be placed and taken care of.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, with my colleague, that some of them want that, but if their preference is to bring them back the Government ought to bring them back.

Mr. MANN. I agree with that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for an extra minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EMERSON. I understand that these soldiers were buried on the field as they fell behind the lines, and not in caskets or coffins, and with no protection but the uniform and blanket. Is that so?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not informed as to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say the information is that it was absolutely impossible in the midst of battle to provide coffins, and they were buried in quickly provided graves, but the graves were marked as far as it was practicable.

Mr. FOSTER. I was talking with a soldier from France a few days ago who helped to bury some of the soldiers killed in battle. He said there was difficulty in identifying them, because they had to bury these boys at night, on account of the battle going on, and they took from their bodies the identification tags. They said when they came back to the lines and took those tags out of their pockets they found some of them blank. They do not know whom they buried in the graves, and until the bodies are finally taken up they will not know who were buried there.

Mr. EMERSON. The sooner they are brought back the better we can identify them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word on this subject, if I may.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] has expired. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Justice McCoy, of this city, many years a Member of this House, had a boy who was killed in France. He wrote a letter to one of the papers here in the city recently, the Star, I think—and I have a copy of his letter—in which he stated—and I will not be absolutely accurate as to the details, but the substance of it was—that he asked some friend to visit the place where his son was buried. That was done, and they found the grave was marked, but the marking was almost indistinguishable and would soon be entirely gone. He asked permission of the War Department to put some kind of a mark there which would stay, but was refused that permission.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. The statement was made in this connection that some of these graves were marked with paper tags.

Mr. BUTLER. I saw them.

Mr. MANN. And that was the only marking there was. The War Department put nothing else on and would allow no one to put anything else there.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why?

Mr. MANN. That is one of the mysteries of life to me. I do not know why.

Mr. HASTINGS. There was no reason given?

Mr. BUTLER. No reason given.

Mr. MANN. To bring home a coffin without a name being given they will not know where it came from. It is perfectly possible that they may in the future bring home a coffin under a name, but they will not know where it came from or who lies within it.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, there is in the Quartermaster Corps of the Army, under the direction of the War Department, a section called the "Grave Registration Service." I believe that is the technical name for it. At any rate it is a branch of the service whose duty it is to gather the bodies of the dead on the field of battle and elsewhere, to inter them as best they can be interred under the circumstances and to mark the graves so that they may be easily found and identified thereafter. It is done under a provision of law and the regulations of the War Department. Whether those regulations are carried out or not I can not say. The last time this matter was up before the Committee on Military Affairs it was taken for granted, when spoken of, that the originally announced policy of the War Department would be carried out. It has been stated and reiterated that the bodies of the dead will be returned to this country as soon as the war is over and transportation facilities are in such shape that they can be brought. It has been emphasized that this will be done certainly in every case where there is a request that it shall be done, and that the body will be delivered at the home of the parents or relatives of the deceased.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Adjutant General, in this same conversation to which I referred a moment ago, advised me that the department was preparing to send out a letter to every parent or relative who had lost a boy in France, asking what their wishes were in reference to this matter, and that those plans would be carried out as soon as the shipping facilities were ample.

Mr. TILSON. That is in entire accord with the understanding of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the gentleman will yield to me just one moment, the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I think, is calculated to carry distress to the relatives of soldiers who died in France. I wanted to say this, that I think I saw the graves of thousands of them and they were all marked, and the markings were permanent. They would last for years, I think. I hope the gentleman's informant was mistaken—that they were marked with paper.

Mr. TILSON. It is the intention of the law, I am sure, that they should be durably marked.

Mr. MANN. I quoted a letter from Mr. Justice McCoy, who for many years was a prominent Member of this House.

Mr. CARAWAY. I understood the gentleman to say that the graves were marked with paper.

Mr. MANN. He said somebody else made that statement.

Mr. CARAWAY. I hope that the person who informed Justice McCoy was mistaken. I saw none of that kind.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Many of the Members, of course, have visited the battle fields of France, and I think those who have visited those fields will bear out the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas and contradict the statement of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TILSON. A system of identification tags was devised whereby each soldier can be identified, and, as I recall, one of those tags is supposed to be buried with each body. Of course that can not always be done, but where the intention of the law and regulations is carried out the bodies of the dead are buried as best they can be under the circumstances and marked as best they can be marked. Of course there will be instances where those things are not done. There are men who are careless about the proper performance of their duties, even the performance of so sacred a duty as the burial of the soldier dead.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of the Navy: Pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty, and officers on waiting orders, $34,198,686; officers on the retired list, $3,620,188; commutation of quarters for officers, including boatswains, gunners, carpenters, sailmakers, machinists, pharmacists, pay clerks, and mates, naval constructors, and assistant naval constructors, $2,019,312, and also members of Nurse Corps (female), $44,200; for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, or commutation of quarters not to exceed the amount which an officer would receive were he not serving with troops and hire of quarters for officers and enlisted men on sea duty at such times as they may be deprived of their quarters on board ship due to repairs or other conditions which may render them uninhabitable, $25,000; pay of enlisted men on the retired list, $501,300; extra pay to men reenlisting under honorable discharge, $3,250,000; interest on deposit by men, $30,000; pay of petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineers' force and men detailed for duty with the Fish Commission, 181,485 men, plus 11,000 men in trade schools; and pay of enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, $105,639,570; pay of enlisted men undergoing sentence of court-martial, $1,866,600, and as many machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint; and 20,000 apprentice seamen under training at training stations and on board training ships, at the pay prescribed by law, $9,388,800; pay of the Nurse Corps, $1,392,600; rent of quarters for members of the Nurse Corps, $55,800; retainer pay and active-service pay of members of the Naval Reserve Force, $31,763,256; in all, $193,795,312; and the money herein specifically appropriated for "Pay of the Navy" shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law as "Pay of the Navy," and for that purpose shall constitute one fund: Provided, That hereafter the Pay Corps shall be called the Supply Corps.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to offer some amendments reducing the amount on account of the offer made there.

Mr. MANN. Why do you propose to change the name of Pay Corps to "Supply Corps"? A little while ago you would not change the name of "coal yard" to "fuel yard," because you said it would not do to change a name, although most of the fuel was petroleum and not coal.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman's statement is stronger than mine. I said it had been done that way. The matter had not been called to our attention.

Mr. MANN. It was called to your attention then, and you still declined to change it. You said the Secretary of the Treasury objected to a change.

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Treasury has recommended this because it suits better than "Pay Corps," because they do much more than merely pay. They furnish supplies and they buy and distribute supplies as well as pay. They furnish equipment.

Mr. MANN. Their main business is to pay out money, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but they make purchases, too.

Mr. MANN. Their main business is paying out money. They must pay for all they buy. Besides buying things and paying for them, they pay salaries—compensation. Everybody knows what "Pay Corps" means, but nobody would know what "supply corps" means. I dislike to stand in the way of anything of that sort, but it seems to me to be a ridiculous proposition. We have had a Pay Corps for years. We have paymasters. They will want to call themselves "supply masters," I suppose, just because somebody had a nightmare one night and thought it would be a good thing to change the name. That is all there is to it.

Mr. PADGETT. It was submitted by the Secretary and recommended very earnestly by the Paymaster General. It is not a material matter, however, and if it should go out it would leave the other.

Mr. MANN. If there is any reason for it, I am willing to admit the reason, but I have not heard of any yet.

Mr. PADGETT. Here is what the Secretary says:

In connection with the hearing of the appropriation bill, it is suggested that the following language be substituted for "Pay Corps": "Hereafter the Pay Corps shall be called the 'Supply Corps.'"

This is in pursuance of General Order 163, dated October 15, 1915, which provides that "The Supply Department shall hereafter embrace all work now included, respectively, in the General Storekeeper's Department on shore and the combined Storekeepers', Commissary, and Pay Department afloat, the officer in charge thereof to be known as a supply officer." Pay is only a minor, though important, part of the supply officer's daily duty, and the designation "supply corps" indicates more clearly the character of the duties performed by the officers of that corps.

Sincerely, JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. GARNER. According to this letter, we have had it since 1915 anyway, whether the law authorizes it or not.

Mr. MANN. Very likely the law authorized the consolidation, I do not know.

Mr. PADGETT. It authorized the consolidation, but the name has been "Pay Corps" until now. It was in pursuance of that recommendation that the committee included this paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I think I am foolish for doing it, but I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. PADGETT. On page 31, line 8, I move to strike out "$193,795,312" and insert "$178,280,872."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PADGETT offers the following amendment: Page 31, line 8, strike out "$193,795,312" and insert in lieu thereof "$178,280,872."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the reason that I offer this amendment, and that I will offer others, is on account of the point of order being sustained against the item providing for the making permanent of the increased pay, which this appropriation embraced. This carries with it a reduction of $15,514,440. It is based on the assumption that by the 1st of July, the end of the present fiscal year, peace will have been proclaimed, and under existing law the increased pay runs for six months after the proclamation of peace. Then after that six months it will be upon the basis of the provision of this bill, and that provision having gone out on a point of order, I thought I should move to reduce this amount accordingly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman proposes to reduce the last item in the bill, which is merely an addition.

Mr. PADGETT. I know, but I am coming to the others.

Mr. MANN. I should suggest that the gentleman offer them all together.

Mr. PADGETT. In line 5, page 31, I move to strike out "$9,388,800" and insert in lieu thereof "$7,328,800."

In line 24, page 30, I move to strike out "$105,639,570" and to insert "$92,285,130." That makes the separate items agree with the total.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 24, strike out "$105,639,570" and insert "$92,285,130."
Page 31, line 5, strike out "$9,388,800" and insert "$7,328,800."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, including the one first reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. In conformity with the language providing for the 225,000 men, or where it did not designate them, there is a designation here which was overlooked, and in line 21, page 30, I want to move to strike out the words "one hundred and eighty-one thousand four hundred and eighty-five" and substitute the word "enlisted," so that it will read "enlisted men" instead of "one hundred and eighty-one thousand four hundred and eighty-five men."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 21, strike out "one hundred and eighty-one thousand four hundred and eighty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "enlisted."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, in line 22, on page 30, I move to strike out the words "plus eleven thousand," so that it will read "men in trade schools." The whole of it is determined by the former provision of 225,000 men.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 22, strike out the words "plus eleven thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, on page 31, I move to strike out, in line 3, the words "twenty thousand," so that it will read "and apprentice seamen."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, line 3, strike out the words "twenty thousand."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman explain his purpose in trying to make the bill less specific, so that the House will not hereafter know the number of men for whom we are appropriating?

Mr. PADGETT. We do know. This provides for a temporary force of 225,000 men, including all the ratings, apprentice seamen and all, but it did not distribute them in the former paragraph with reference to providing for the temporary increase. Now, this increase here was on the original basis of 225,000, and by striking this out it leaves it temporarily governed by the 225,000, and then at the end of the fiscal year, unless there is additional legislation, it reverts to the 131,485, plus 6,000 apprentice seamen, plus the Hospital Corps, which is defined under the general law; and this is simply to make it conform to the 225,000, which by express words embraces all of the enlisted men of all ratings.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the elimination of the "plus 11,000" Congress will never hereafter know how many men are being provided for in the trade schools.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; because it is limited. For this present year it will not, but unless Congress legislates some more it goes back to the permanent establishment of 131,000, plus 6,000 apprentice seamen, plus the Hospital Corps, and Congress would have to authorize them if there were any more.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under that basis how many men will there be in the trade schools if we strike out the "plus 11,000" enlisted men?

Mr. PADGETT. There is no provision for that. That is under the permanent law, and they just designate the number of men that they need to go in there. This was with reference to the temporary strength, and provided an additional allotment out of the temporary strength.

Mr. STAFFORD. For years you have carried, have you not, a limitation on the men in the trade schools plus 11,000?

Mr. PADGETT. No; the 11,000 is only in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provisions, Navy: For provisions and commuted rations for the seamen and marines, which commuted rations may be paid to caterers of messes, in case of death or desertion, upon orders of the commanding officers, commuted rations for officers on sea duty (other than commissioned officers of the line, Medical and Pay Corps, chaplains, chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, chief machinists, chief pay clerks, and chief sailmakers) and midshipmen at 68 cents per diem, and commuted rations stopped on account of sick in hospital and credited at the rate of 50 cents per ration to the naval hospital fund; subsistence of officers and men unavoidably detained or absent from vessels to which attached under orders (during which subsistence rations to be stopped on board ship and no credit for commutation therefor to be given); subsistence of men on detached duty; subsistence of officers and men of the Coast Guard and Lighthouse Services while cooperating with the Navy in so far as the regular appropriations for these services are insufficient therefor; subsistence of officers and men of the naval auxiliary service; subsistence of members of the Naval Reserve Force during period of active service; and for subsistence of female nurses and Navy and Marine Corps general courts-martial prisoners undergoing imprisonment with sentences of dishonorable discharge from the service at the expiration of such confinement: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to commute rations for such general courts-martial prisoners in such amounts as seem to him proper, which may vary in accordance with the location of the naval prison, but which shall in no case exceed 30 cents per diem for each ration so commuted; and for the purchase of United States Army emergency rations as required; in all, $53,746,185, to be available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Will the gentleman inform the House as to the change from existing law, so far as the additional subsistence is allowed?

Mr. PADGETT. As I recall it at the present time, it is 68 cents for midshipmen in the academy.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the present rate is 50 cents?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I think it is 40 cents. The Hospital Corps is 50 cents under existing law, but my recollection of the midshipmen is that it is 40 cents.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain the reason for the increase of allowance for subsistence in the case of midshipmen?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; out of their allowance of $600 a year they are required to pay a considerable contribution toward the maintenance of themselves in the academy. The 40 cents does not do it and the 68 cents will not do it. This was to give them the benefit of this rate at 68 cents to pay for the three meals a day, instead of 40 cents.

Mr. STAFFORD. How long has the rate of 40 cents prevailed?

Mr. PADGETT. I think since about two years ago; about the beginning of the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any information as to the actual cost of the rations per day throughout the year?

Mr. PADGETT. We are told that it is costing now close to a dollar for the three meals.

Mr. STAFFORD. I remember some report on the question showing the cost per ration, but I did not think it had gone up to so high a figure, except for the officers.

Mr. PADGETT. The superintendent advised us that it cost about a dollar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee with reference to the subsistence for officers and men of the Lighthouse Service and the Coast Guard. The subsistence provided in this paragraph is only sufficient for this service, is that it?

Mr. PADGETT. That language was inserted on account of legislation putting the Coast Guard under the Navy during the war. It appeared in the bill for the first time last year, and I think the Lighthouse Service also. That language was inserted the first time last year because operating with the Navy it had to care for them.

Mr. WALSH. There are also officers and men in the Fisheries Bureau operating under the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think they operate with the Navy. The legislation, as I remember, took in the Lighthouse and the Coast Guard, but I do not think it took in the Fisheries. There are certain men in the Navy detailed to work with the Fish Commission, and the Navy operate some vessels of the Fish Commission.

Mr. WALSH. The Albatross and the Fish Hawk.

Mr. PADGETT. There are naval men detailed to the Fisheries Commission, but the Fisheries Commission does not by operation of the law come under the naval authority like the Coast Guard and the Lighthouse Service.

Mr. WALSH. The Navy has operated some vessels of the Bureau of Fisheries, and they have been turned over to them since we went into the war, and I think one or more vessels with the Coast and Geodetic Survey. Do the officers and men get an allowance for subsistence under this paragraph?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; they get the same as the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. What is the necessity, then, for this language, "officers and men of the Coast Guard and Lighthouse Service"?

Mr. PADGETT. So as to give authority to regard them as a part of the Navy. They belong in the Treasury Department in time of peace, and as soon as peace is declared they go back to the Treasury Department.

Mr. WALSH. The officers and men of the Bureau of Fisheries, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, belong to the Department of Commerce, but there is no authorization in this paragraph to give them any subsistence.

Mr. PADGETT. They do not operate with the Navy. Some of the men of the Navy are operating to help run the ships of the Fisheries Commission. For years they have carried a provision for men detailed with the Fisheries Commission.

Mr. WALSH. Is it possible that they have taken over the steamers but not the personnel?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know that the Navy has taken over any vessels of the Fish Commission. They operate them for the Fish Commission. They are not operating them for the Navy. They are putting men there to work for the Fish Commission.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has in mind the steamers Fish Hawk and Albatross, which are naval vessels; one is, and I think both; they have been detailed to the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And they have naval crews for them; but the sundry civil appropriation bill carries an item for one or two of them, but during the war, I think, there have been other vessels of the Fishery Service and, if I am not mistaken, one or more of the Coast and Geodetic vessels that have been transferred to the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. I have no information as to that. I could not give the gentleman any light or information on that, because I do not know.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman does not know, if the personnel are transferred, whether they are getting any subsistence or not?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know of any of them being transferred. I do not know that any of the fish men had been taken over by the Navy. I knew that the Navy was detailing men from the Navy to cooperate with and help the Fish Commission, but I did not know that the Navy had taken over any of the Fish Commission's boats.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the Clerk proceeds to read I move to strike out the last word. This item provides for the commutation of rations of prisoners of courts-martial, and the preceding one provided for the payment of enlisted men undergoing sentence of courts-martial, to the amount of $1,866,000. That seems a very large amount and would indicate that a very large number of men are provided for under court-martial sentence. Does the gentleman know how many there are?

Mr. PADGETT. No. There has been a very perceptible increase in the number. There has perhaps been also some increase in the percentage. I understand that since the signing of the armistice the percentage of the number of men deserting has been very much increased. Men have been deserting considerably since the signing of the armistice.

Mr. MANN. I was told recently that at one place down here there were quite a number of men of the Navy surrounded by a high fence, under guard, not permitted to go away, because at some place when an officer came in he thought the sailors or the men there were not sufficiently active in rising to salute him. Hence they had the whole bunch in confinement.

Mr. PADGETT. I have never heard of that.

Mr. MANN. They have nothing to do. They ought to have been discharged. There they were keeping them guarded behind a 10-foot fence, the statement was made.

Mr. PADGETT. I have never heard of that, and I can neither admit nor deny it. I doubt very much the accuracy of the information.

Mr. MANN. In that case I think I shall bring the information to the House some day and let the House see whether the Navy Department knows about it.

Mr. CLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I will state that right in front of my house, on the Shore Road in Brooklyn, there is a 10-foot fence, and they are in there very much as the gentleman says.

Mr. PADGETT. What are they in there for?

Mr. CLEARY. Simply resting there, waiting to be discharged.

Mr. MANN. Those I speak of are not at that place.

Mr. CLEARY. They are overseas men.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman from Illinois was speaking of prisoners.

Mr. CLEARY. Oh, the ones that I speak of are not prisoners.

Mr. MANN. If they are surrounded by a 10-foot fence and are guarded, what, in God's name, do you call them if they are not prisoners?

Mr. PADGETT. He did not say they were prisoners. They keep guards around all camps and stations, but they are at liberty to come and go.

Mr. MANN. Oh, but that is just it—they are not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: For fuel; the removal and transportation of ashes and garbage from ships of war; books, blanks, and stationery, including stationery for commanding and navigating officers of ships, chaplains on shore and afloat, and for the use of courts-martial on board ships; purchase, repair, and exchange of typewriters for ships; packing boxes and materials; interior fittings for general storehouses, pay offices, and accounting offices in navy yards; expenses of disbursing officers; coffee mills and repair thereto; expenses of naval clothing factory and machinery for the same; laboratory equipment; purchase of articles of equipage at home and abroad under the cognizance of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels therewith, and the manufacture of such articles in the several navy yards; musical instruments and music; mess outfits; soap on board naval vessels; athletic outfits; tolls, ferriages, yeomen's stores, safes, and other incidental expenses; labor in general storehouses, paymasters' offices, and accounting offices in navy yards and naval stations, including naval stations maintained in island possessions under the control of the United States, and expenses in handling stores purchased and manufactured under "General account of advances"; and reimbursement to appropriations of the Department of Agriculture of cost of inspection of meats and meat food products for the Navy Department: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for chemists and for clerical, inspection, storemen, store laborer, and messenger service in the supply and accounting departments of the navy yards and naval stations and disbursing offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, shall not exceed $3,000,000; in all $16,825,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This paragraph carries an appropriation of approximately $17,000,000 for maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts. It covers purchases of various kinds at home and abroad. To what extent does the Navy Department deal in foreign markets for such supplies as it needs?

Mr. PADGETT. I could not tell under existing conditions. I know that they have pursued the policy of purchasing at home all that they could get, but whether or not during the war they had to purchase anything abroad I do not know.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has no figures.

Mr. PADGETT. No; I have not. Their policy has been to purchase at home, and they did buy large supplies.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have had some complaints about an apparent preference in the purchase of cigars and tobacco in foreign countries. Does the gentleman know anything about that?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not. I imagine that where they purchased cigars that would be done by the men themselves and in what is called their canteen. They run that themselves and run it on a mutual plan, with a small profit, and whatever profit accrues goes to their recreational fund. That is not out of this fund.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In previous Congresses, before the war, the wisdom of making purchases in foreign countries was discussed upon the floor, and I think after the gentleman became chairman of the committee that he succeeded in defeating one or two amendments limiting the purchases to goods produced in the United States. If my memory is not at fault, that is a fact. However, we are now still at war, legislatively speaking, and it might not be well to offer an amendment limiting the purchases, even though the amount should be as much as sixteen or seventeen million dollars.

I would like for a few moments to discuss a question that may possibly be involved in that much-discussed telegram of the President urging the passage of this bill. The matter of embargoes may be a part of it. I do not know. I do know that numerous complaints are coming to Members of Congress—at least, I can testify on my own account—from American merchants, who contend that the situation abroad is gradually operating against them. Much has been said recently about the embargoes against imports levied by the British Government.

Since these embargoes went on and even before complaints have been coming forward as to the apparent encroachment of foreign-trade bodies and foreign traders upon the so-called foreign markets in which the American merchants and producers have been accustomed to participate.

Mr. PADGETT. Speaking of embargoes, it seems to get down to the philosophy of whose ox is gored. I have been receiving a lot of letters insisting that the embargoes on the importation of certain articles should be continued, and protesting against the discontinuing of embargoes on the importation of articles here. It is a question of how his interest comes in.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is one very peculiar circumstance, I think, that arose somewhere in the vicinity of the gentleman's own State, where an embargo was levied against the use of certain materials—cereals and the like—entering into the manufacture and production of so-called soft drinks, or beverages without a kick.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not remember about that. I get protests—and very vigorous protests—against the removal of the embargo on the importation of peanuts.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I think that embargo still stands, but at the time the American embargo was levied against the use——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. At the time the American embargo was levied against its own producers of materials entering into the manufacture of beverages there was no American embargo against the exportation of those cereals for the manufacture of beverages that did have a kick, with the result that while we were held of our own volition by a sort of semi-bone-dry arrangement in the United States we were permitting our foreign competitors to manufacture all the beer and liquor they cared to make, much of which they were selling to our American soldiers at a good profit. I understand the embargo now against the use of cereals for the manufacture of soft drinks in the United States has been raised, but I am of the opinion——

Mr. PADGETT. And there was a very effective embargo placed on the exportation of intoxicating liquors also.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; that is becoming very generally effective. It promises to be more dry, and a crop of candidates of various kinds is resulting therefrom. [Laughter.] But I am serious with the committee in suggesting that the reason for the President's mysterious message to the chairman of this committee urging the passage of this expensive bill may be found in this very matter of embargoes that one nation seems to be levying upon the products of another, and it may be that the President is wise enough and patriotic enough to feel that if he had at his back the greatest navy in the world he might become one of the greatest protectionists in the world so far as American products are concerned. That may be in his mind; I do not know.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman uses the word "mysterious." There is nothing mysterious about it. I have told the House several times the sum and substance of the cablegram, which was that the President had not changed his mind on the building program and very earnestly and insistently recommended that the three-year building program should be carried out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have every confidence in the gentleman's integrity in translating the presidential message, and I believe the gentleman would be doing his countrymen and his colleagues of this House a great service if he would present a photograph of the message, so that its literary qualities might be appreciated by his fellow men. But the gentleman up to date has refused to do that, though we have his word that he has given the substance if not the letter, the spirit if not the text, of the President's very important but somewhat mysterious note. Some American merchants are complaining at the present time that their trade abroad is being sidetracked, that they are not able to get shipping space, that every time they ask for it they run up against the Trade Board restrictions in the United States, which lead in the end to the British Embassy, which seems to have the power to put the veto upon applications for a license. What is the use of American merchants undertaking to obtain the trade of the world, what is the use of their endeavoring to compete with other nations, if they can not get their goods beyond the port, if at the American port they are obliged to get foreign sanction for the shipment of their goods? Here is a letter from one of my constituents; I will not read the name at this time, because the man's business is affected. He has applied in the ordinary way to all the United States agencies in Washington to obtain a permit for the shipment of cotton waste to be sold in Denmark. We have no quarrel with Denmark. It is an open-and-shut transaction between the purchaser there and the seller here, and the American merchant here wishes to complete his contract. He wishes to deliver the goods. He applied here in Washing to the War Trade Board, to those in control, and he is referred to the British Embassy, and he gets no space and his goods remain on the dock.

Talk about freedom of the seas! That begins to make you think that possibly our distinguished President over on the other side, who seeks to have a large Navy, may really be having something in his mind with regard to our rights upon the high seas. I do not know. The telegram is still unread, it is still nebulous to a certain degree, but nevertheless these conditions confront American merchants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me read a letter from the Metal Export Co. of America, 59 Pearl Street, New York City, dated February 3, 1919. Listen to this letter. It is written in the same vein as that of numerous other letters which I have received upon this subject. Is this what is going through the President's mind? Is he beginning to think that perhaps our trade lanes are being cut off? Are we facing some controversy with foreign nations which makes it necessary for the President to urge us to prepare to maintain our rights upon the high seas? Let us read this letter and think for ourselves. It says:

HONORABLE SIR: 1. What we have to say we wish to make short, emphatic, and to the point.

2. We have five orders, totaling in value to about $150,000.

3. Destination, Scandinavia. All parties concerned have been O. K.'d by the War Trade Board.

4. Credits have been opened, and funds are at our disposal against shipping documents.

5. Credits will soon expire, and if goods are not shipped funds will automatically be returned to Europe.

6. We have the goods on hand at high prices, and if we can not ship we will suffer a loss to the foreign firm's corresponding gain.

7. We are unable to obtain export licenses, because our customers have been unable or unwilling to obtain their import numbers on account of purely local and political reasons in their own country.

8. A foreign power is waiting with avidity to take these orders once the credits expire.

9. As a loyal American citizen to a loyal American Congressman, shall a foreign power have the orders which we have won by personal solicitation or shall we keep them? If we are to keep them we must have a license from the War Trade Board. Who will help America besides us?

The writer is unreservedly at your service. The business had its origin in 1854.

Very truly, yours, METAL EXPORT CO. OF AMERICA.

Here is an old established concern trying to do an export business, shut off because of foreign conditions. I have on my desk, amongst others, a letter from one of the largest automobile manufacturers in the United States, presenting to me a report from his sales agent over yonder in England. That agent states that he has gone through England and France, and he finds that it is now practically useless to try to sell an American machine in either of those countries. The gap following the war seems to have been closed, and they appear to be looking to their own restoration first. They propose to encourage home industry; they propose, in England and France, to do their own manufacturing; they propose to start their own mills; and if we are held up in our shipping and American products can find no bottoms because we are restricted by our foreign competitors in the matter of licenses, they will have the advantage in the markets of South America and of China and elsewhere. We should not be compelled to fall back and come in at the tail end of the race.

I do not know what the President of the United States has in mind when he sends his message for us to pass this enormous $700,000,000 naval bill; but if he does have it in mind to become a protectionist or to put America first, or at most to give us an equal chance, I commend him for it. But up to date the telegram has not been read; we have not even seen a photograph of it. We have only the word of the chairman of the committee that he has given the bowels and substance of it to Congress. I would like, because I admire the President's style and diction, to see the telegram.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The chairman said just a moment ago he would show it to you. Step right over and get it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman think the telegram is in the President's handwriting?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Michigan challenges me to take 10 steps forward and obtain through the gentleman from Tennessee a sight of this document. Later on I may do so.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fuel and transportation: Coal and other fuel for steamers' and ships' use, including expenses of transporation, storage, and handling the same; maintenance and general operation of machinery of naval fuel depots and fuel plants; water for all purposes on board naval vessels; and ice for the cooling of water, including the expense of transportation and storage of both, $15,000,000: Provided, That $1,000,000 of the appropriation "Fuel and transportaion, 1919," or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby continued and made available for use, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, in mining coal or contracting for the same in Alaska, the transportation of the same, and the construction of coal bunkers and the necessary docks for use in supplying ships therewith; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to select from the public coal lands in Alaska such areas as may be necessary for use by him for the purposes stated herein: Provided further, That, when, in the opinion of the President, the prices asked for the charter of vessels for the transportation of fuel are excessive, he is authorized to purchase vessels suitable for the purpose, and, if money is not otherwise available, to pay for them from the appropriation "Fuel and transportation."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Let the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] go ahead.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has reserved his point of order, and I ask the privilege of discussing it in my own way for two or three minutes. A while ago while discussing the matter of embargoes and the famous telegram sent by the President to the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of this committee, I paid a high compliment, as I understood it, to the integrity of the gentleman from Tennessee in giving to the House the substance but not the letter of the telegram. I was challenged in a pleasant way by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] to go forward to the gentleman from Tennessee in order that I might know what was in the precious document. I suggested it might be dangerous to do so, but yielding to my regard for the gentleman from Tennessee and to my own curiosity I took the 10 steps necessary, approached the gentleman from Tennessee with becoming dignity, was greeted with one of those genial smiles for which he is famous, and asked to see the telegram. In the pleasantest tones imaginable, those that have captured audiences here and elsewhere for many years, I received from his lips the response, "I will show it to you—some time." When! When, Mr. Chairman, may I again approach the gentleman from Tennessee with the hope and expectancy that that which I longed for may be granted?

I know that the gentleman from Tennessee and many of his colleagues upon the Committee on Naval Affairs, including the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], who may have seen this telegram, were recently attracted to the European battle fields. I am persuaded that they have shaken hands with the King of Italy; that they have visited the President of France at his palace; that they have toured the country, receiving the plaudits of a people everywhere grateful for what the United States was doing to win the war. I am told the chairman and members of the committee had the honor of entering Buckingham Palace; yea, of dining with the King. It is even said—and this is highly important—that they conferred with Lloyd George, the premier of England. They fraternized with foreign statesmen, with those who have much to do at this time with the destinies of the world; and now that our President has taken their place in the councils of the great on the other side and has seen fit, from his point of view, from his point of vantage, to send us this message, through the chairman, to get these $700,000,000 out of the American people for a future Navy, I do not wonder that the gentleman from Tennessee, gathering unto himself wisdom and profiting by his foreign diplomatic experiences, has learned the art and the wiles of those who know how to give a soothing message while they conceal the meaning of their words. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee why it is necessary, now that the war emergency is about over, that the President be given this authority to purchase vessels for the transportation of fuel, particularly when the Navy has large tracts of land in the petroleum reserves and, as I understood the gentleman, is soon to shift over its ships to an oil-burning basis?

Mr. PADGETT. As to that second proviso, I do not think there is any real necessity for it. I am perfectly willing to strike that out.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the second proviso at the top of page 35.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman from Tennessee inform the House whether the Navy has secured any coal up to the present time from the Matanuska Alaskan region?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. That provision was inserted in the bill last year. No part of it has been used on account of the war activities engaging all the attention of the department here.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the Navy adopting fuel oil for the operation of its ships, particularly on the Pacific coast, does the gentleman believe that the Matanuska coal region will be utilized to any extent by the Navy for the operation of its ships?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes. We have a large number of coal-burning ships. The later and heavier types are burning oil, but we have a large number of ships that are still burning coal.

Mr. STAFFORD. The railroad, I believe, has reached the Matanuska coal fields?

Mr. PADGETT. It is close to them, but they have not gotten quite to them.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand only the construction of some branch lines are yet necessary. I believe the main line has passed the Matanuska region.

Mr. PADGETT. They must go on a couple of miles farther to reach the coal region itself.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is for fuel and transportation. The gentleman from Tennessee stated, I think, yesterday that it was necessary to keep a large number of the enlisted men in the Navy in order that they might be active in bringing home soldiers from France. I read in a newspaper the other day, I think, that a large number of naval vessels had been ordered to Cuba for maneuvering purposes.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Those are ships of the dreadnaught type, 14, I believe, in number, with destroyers and submarines and things; but the cruisers and the old battleships are used for bringing back the men from France.

Mr. MANN. It is not practicable to use these large vessels for the transportation of troops from France?

Mr. PADGETT. I think they could be so used, but they are keeping up the activities of the Navy with them, and they are using what are known as vessels of the predreadnaught type, the smaller type of battleship, 15,000 and 16,000 ton ships.

Mr. MANN. Those large vessels have a considerable capacity for carrying marines on them, as I understand. Why is it not practicable to use them in bringing home the soldiers?

Mr. PADGETT. They might be used in that way, but they have got these others that they are using for that purpose in connection with troop transports.

Mr. MANN. Then, reduced to fact, these men are being retained in the Navy not so much for the purpose of being able to man the ships and bring home the soldier boys as to man the ships and send them to Cuba for maneuver purposes?

Mr. PADGETT. No; those that are for the naval ships and for the naval service strictly are kept in the Navy for the naval service, but a number of ships are being operated for the transportation of the troops, and they are kept for that purpose. But we can not abandon the ships of the Navy and can not deman them.

Mr. MANN. I do not speak as an expert, but I think it would be very feasible for these ships, instead of being sent to Cuba fully manned, to be used in bringing home the boys from France. Certainly they can carry as many as the other ships smaller in size.

Mr. PADGETT. They are using a good number of the naval ships, but they are not using all of them. They are using the cruisers, as I said, the old types of battleships, for that, but the strictly new ships are being kept for naval use and for naval training and for naval purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR.

Construction and repair of vessels: For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; steam steerers, pneumatic steerers, steam capstans, steam windlasses, and all other auxiliaries; labor in navy yards and on foreign stations; purchase of machinery and tools for use in shops; carrying on work of experimental model tank and wind tunnel; designing naval vessels; construction and repair of yard craft, lighters, and barges; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat; general care, increase, and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair; repair and maintenance of vessels of the Coast Guard and Lighthouse Services; submarine chasers, patrol boats; incidental expenses for vessels and navy yards, inspectors' offices, such as photographing, books, professional magazines, plans, stationery, and instruments for drafting room, and for pay of classified force under the bureau; for hemp, wire, iron, and other materials for the manufacture of cordage, anchors, cables, galleys, and chains; specifications for purchase thereof shall be so prepared as shall give fair and free competition; canvas for the manufacture of sails, awnings, hammocks, and other work; interior appliances and tools for manufacturing purposes in navy yards and naval stations; and for the purchase of all other articles of equipage at home and abroad; and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels therewith and manufacture of such articles in the several navy yards; naval signals and apparatus, other than electric, namely, signals, lights, lanterns, running lights, lanterns, and lamps and their appendages for general use on board ship for illuminating purposes; and oil and candles used in connection therewith; bunting and other materials for making and repairing flags of all kinds; for all permanent galley fittings and equipage; rugs, carpets, curtains, and hangings on board naval vessels, $37,500,000: Provided, That the limitations imposed by existing law relative to repairs to vessels of the Navy shall not apply to the expenditure of funds made available in this act: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, drafting, inspection, watchmen (ship keepers), and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and offices of superintending naval constructors for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, shall not exceed $2,500,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Is this item of $37,500,000 for the repair and completion of all vessels of the Navy which are being constructed under programs heretofore provided for?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; this is the general operating maintenance fund of the Bureau of Construction and Repair for ships that have been completed and put in commission. This is not the fund that is used for the original construction of ships. That is carried under "Increase of the Navy." This is for the upkeep and the maintenance of all the repair work on all of the ships that were in commission under the jurisdiction of the Navy, amounting to many hundreds of ships.

Mr. WALSH. What does this language mean?—

Completion of vessels on the stocks.

That does not mean that vessels have been put in commission before they were completed?

Mr. PADGETT. A vessel may be put in commission, and there may be some small items that come up afterwards in the way of additions or something to complete the entire ship.

Mr. WALSH. She would not be on the stocks, would she?

Mr. PADGETT. There may be something that the original contract does not provide for. For instance, the contract is made for the construction of a ship. That contract may not embrace everything that is necessary for it. For instance, they may leave out the electrical apparatus.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, a vessel would not have to be hauled out onto the stocks again in order to put in the electrical apparatus.

Mr. PADGETT. I know; but while it is on the stocks they may go ahead and do the work.

Mr. WALSH. She would not be commissioned before she was completed, would she?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, yes; before she was fully completed. We have had ships put in commission before they were completed in every respect.

Mr. WALSH. But they would certainly not put a vessel in commission while she was on the stocks?

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. WALSH. This says:

For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary.

Then it says:

That the limitation imposed by existing law relative to repairs to vessels of the Navy shall not apply to the expenditure of funds made available in this act.

That is the proviso that I think is subject to a point of order. But I was trying to ascertain if this does not include all the money available for repairing vessels in commission, $37,500,000, of which $2,500,000 shall be paid for clerical work——

Mr. PADGETT. Drafting.

Mr. WALSH. Drafting, inspection, and so forth. If it does not, what is the item that takes care of the repair of naval vessels?

Mr. PADGETT. The repair of naval vessels is all taken care of, as I understand, under this item here. The original construction of vessels is under the appropriations for the increase of the Navy. The repair and upkeep and maintenance are taken care of, so far as the hull is concerned, under this appropriation. So far as the machinery and the motive power are concerned, those are taken care of under steam engineering; but the construction of the hull and the original construction of the machinery are under the appropriations for increase of the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman state that when they start to build a vessel in one of the navy yards, when they have an appropriation of the required number of millions of dollars for that vessel, part of the equipment is taken out of the appropriation for steam engineering and another part of the construction is taken out of this item for the completion of vessels on the stocks?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I understand that none of this goes on the vessel in its original construction. That is taken care of under the appropriations for steam engineering and construction and repair under increase of the Navy, and also ordnance; but, where vessels are out in the service, this is for their general upkeep and maintenance, for the work in the yards and stations, and in the repairing of ships, and all of that work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I reserve another point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I can not get the distinction. I know it is because of my own deficiency in not being able to comprehend the statements which the gentleman makes, but I can not understand why you provide under an item under construction and repair for the completion of a vessel on the stocks.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know why they use that expression, "on the stocks"; but this is for the vessels that are in the fleet and in the service. It is their general maintenance fund—their general upkeep and repair.

Mr. WALSH. Is a vessel taken out for repairs ever kept on the stocks for over two years?

Mr. PADGETT. Not that I know of.

Mr. WALSH. Then why do they need this proviso here relative to the existing law and the expenditure of funds made available under this act?

Mr. PADGETT. Right at the end of the year a vessel may go on the stocks for repairs—say, in June—and the repairs will run up until October or November of the next fiscal year. It may take seven or eight months. Take the case of the North Dakota, for instance. Her turbine engines had all to be taken out and new ones put in. It involved an expenditure of something like $600,000 or $800,000 to rebuild them. It took months. Now, that is all done out of this fund, and if you were to limit it to one year it would be very embarrassing.

Mr. WALSH. Where it is made for a specific purpose such as that, the existing law limits it to two years, as I understand.

Mr. PADGETT. They can obligate it during the first year, and if it is obligated it may be expended during the second year; but it can not be obligated except in the first year. So here comes along a repair. Here is a fund for it, and the ship goes into dock, and the year expires. The ship is in the dock. You can not use that money, because it is after the 30th day of June. You could not obligate it; but if you had obligated it on the 29th of June you could go ahead and pay it out during the succeeding fiscal year.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I withdraw the point of order, though I know I am making a mistake in doing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING.

Engineering: For repairs, preservation, and renewal of machinery, auxiliary machinery, and boilers of naval vessels, yard craft, and ships' boats, distilling and refrigerating apparatus; repairs, preservation, and renewals of electric interior and exterior signal communications and all electrical appliances of whatsoever nature on board naval vessels, except range finders, battle order, and range transmitters and indicators, and motors and their controlling apparatus used to operate machinery belonging to other bureaus; searchlights and fire-control equipments for antiaircraft defense at shore stations; maintenance and operation of coast signal service, including expenses of office of Director of Naval Communications and the purchase of land as necessary for sites for radio shore stations; equipage, supplies, and materials under the cognizance of the bureau required for the maintenance and operation of naval vessels, yard craft, and ships' boats; purchase, installation, repair, and preservation of machinery, tools, and appliances in navy yards and stations, pay of classified force under the bureau; incidental expenses for Navy vessels, navy yards, and stations, inspectors' offices, the engineering experiment station, such as photographing, technical books and periodicals, stationery, and instruments; instruments and apparatus, supplies, and technical books and periodicals necessary to carry on experimental and research work in radiotelegraphy at the naval radio laboratory: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and offices of United States inspectors of machinery and engineering material for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, shall not exceed $2,000,000: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for the purchase of land for sites for radio shore stations shall not exceed $10,000; in all, engineering, $35,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what is the purpose of limiting the appropriation for the purchase of land sites for radio shore stations, $10,000?

Mr. PADGETT. We have carried that limitation for many years, so that out of this appropriation, if they want to buy land for the establishment of shore stations, they shall not expend more than $10,000.

Mr. WALSH. Is this the item under which the radio stations have been purchased by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. The shore stations, but not the high-power stations.

Mr. WALSH. Under what item were the high-powered stations purchased?

Mr. PADGETT. Under the general power given the President and the lump-sum appropriation in connection with the Shipping Board and Railroad Administration.

Mr. WALSH. The Navy Department got in there somewhere.

Mr. PADGETT. I say under the power given to the President, as I understand.

Mr. WALSH. The $100,000,000 emergency fund?

Mr. PADGETT. Either that or a lump sum given him in the deficiency bill.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to know if there is any language in this paragraph, or any proviso of limitation, which would permit the Secretary of the Navy to pay for radio stations—the plants which have been acquired for either shore stations or high-power stations which have heretofore been carried——

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that I have an amendment which I intend to propose, and I also have the information from the Secretary of the Navy which the gentleman is seeking from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PADGETT. Let the gentleman from New Jersey give his information.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I will offer this amendment, to be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEHLBACH: Page 38, line 20, after "$10,000," insert the following:

"Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the acquisition of radio stations, in whole or in part, for the transmission or reception of commercial messages."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, in the latter part of the year 1916 the Navy Department caused to be introduced a bill in this House (H. R. 19350) to authorize the Navy Department to purchase or otherwise acquire the ownership of radio stations in the United States and to be given the sole right to maintain and operate them.

There were hearings held on the bill from January 11 to January 26, 1917. At the conclusion of the hearings the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, which had the bill referred to it, refused to support the measure. That was the end of it as far as vesting authority in the Navy Department by Congress was concerned.

In the latter part of 1918 the Navy Department again caused to be introduced a similar measure to have the monopoly of the radio business in the country and acquire title to all radio stations in the United States. Hearings were held on the bill, and the committee, or some members of it, learned to their amazement that notwithstanding the refusal to sanction this ownership and operation of commercial wireless telegraphy the Secretary of the Navy had expended $1,600,000 in the purchase of nine stations on the Pacific coast belonging to the Federal system, and ship-to-shore stations of the Marconi Co. on the Atlantic, paying for the Marconi stations $1,450,000, or in all $50,000 in excess of $3,000,000.

Now, I refer to the hearings where Secretary Daniels on the stand, as to the authority under which these purchases were made and where the money came from, testified as follows:

Mr. EDMONDS. What I am trying to get at is this: You had no lack of power during the war to take over these stations and to utilize them in any way you saw fit? Is not that true?

As a matter of fact, the stations were entirely in the control of and operated by the Navy Department. The only thing purchased was the permanent title to the property for the Navy Department.

Secretary DANIELS. We had the power; yes.
Mr. EDMONDS. And then you exercised that power, you exercised it gradually, and then you exercised it finally by taking over every station and handling the entire wireless business of the country?
Secretary DANIELS. That is right.
Mr. EDMONDS. And at the present time you still have that power and can exercise it?
Secretary DANIELS. We have.
Mr. EDMONDS. And yet, at the same time, after this committee refused to bring out a bill to purchase wireless apparatus, you utilize the Government money to purchase this wireless apparatus and took over the commercial systems without the consent of Congress.
Secretary DANIELS. Not at all. We did not act in defiance of Congress because Congress had not done this. We did it because it was a good business proposition and because we had the funds appropriated by the Naval Committee to make the naval communication service more effective.
Mr. HUMPHREYS. You mean appropriated by Congress.
Secretary DANIELS. Appropriated by Congress.
Mr. HUMPHREYS. You said by the Naval Committee.
Secretary DANIELS. I mean through the naval bill.
Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; but Congress did not have any intention to put you into commercial ownership of radio communication at that time. You did not explain it to the Naval Committee that way.
Secretary DANIELS. We explained to the Naval Committee that this money we desired was for use in perfecting the radio service.
Mr. HADLEY. I would like to ask the Secretary at this point what is the specific item in the naval appropriation bill which carried the funds for that payment?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws the point of order and the gentleman from New Jersey asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment that was read presented now in regular order?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be reported for consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEHLBACH: Amend page 36, line 20, after "$10,000," by inserting: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the acquisition of radio stations in whole or in part used for the transmission or reception of commercial messages."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I again refer to the hearings on the bill H. R. 13159. Mr. HADLEY asked:

I would like to ask the Secretary at this point what is the specific item in the naval appropriation bill which carries the funds for that payment?—

Namely, the $3,000,000 for the commercial radio stations—

Secretary DANIELS. I have forgotten the title of it. It is in the appropriation under the Bureau of Steam Engineering, which has direction and control of all radio matters. Under that appropriation we buy a tower, and under that appropriation we put in radio stations wherever the Chief of Operations of the Navy and the General Board feel that we ought to have them.
Mr. HADLEY. Was the estimate itemized when it was before the Naval Committee?
Secretary DANIELS. I think it was not. I do not think it has ever been itemized in the radio matters at all; it has always been a general lump-sum appropriation.
Mr. WHITE. How much was the lump-sum appropriation?
Secretary DANIELS. Under the Bureau of Steam Engineering?
Mr. WHITE. Yes.
Secretary DANIELS. It was many millions of dollars. I can get the exact figures for you, if you desire.

It is $35,000,000 in this bill. The situation is this: The Navy Department comes to Congress, and Congress, through its mouthpiece, in this instance the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, refused the department authority to obtain title to the plants necessary to carry on as a monopoly the business of wireless telegraphy for commercial purposes. After that refusal they obtained an appropriation, under the general lump-sum appropriation for Steam Engineering, for the extension of radio service under the Bureau of Operations, which any reasonable man would believe meant in connection with naval operations. They took out of that money $3,000,000 and appropriated it to go into the commercial business of telegraphy by wireless without the authority of Congress, using money that was not intended by Congress for that purpose. For that reason I offer this amendment and trust that it will be accepted.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. I understand that the Government has taken over some of these radio stations. Would the gentleman's amendment prevent that?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It would prevent taking over the other stations which the Navy Department is very anxious to get and which they intend coercing the present owners into selling if they can. They can take them absolutely by condemnation if we give them the legislation which has not been reported by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Even without that legislation, if the past is a precedent, if they can coerce the owners into voluntary or quasi-voluntary sale, they will buy them whether Congress authorizes it or not.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey a question. Does he think that will prevent the use of this money for paying for the radio stations they have already purchased?

Mr. LEHLBACH. If title has not passed, I think it will.

Mr. MANN. I do not care whether title has passed or not. I would like to see a prohibition against the payment of any sum unless Congress specifically authorizes it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. There were two purchases; one from the Federal system on the Pacific coast, nine stations. I believe they have been paid for. The contract for the purchase from the Marconi Co. was entered into a few weeks before the date when Secretary Daniels gave the testimony which I quoted.

Mr. MANN. The contract has been entered into?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; some time in the month of December or the latter part of November. Whether it has been consummated or not, I am not informed.

Mr. MANN. I had prepared an amendment somewhat similar, to prohibit under this appropriation the purchase of or payment for.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That would be acceptable to me.

Mr. MANN. This prohibits the acquisition?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes. Of course, the Navy Department in construing the bill will construe it in conformity with its purposes, if possible; but ordinarily, I should think, prohibiting the acquisition of stations would prevent the payment for stations under an agreement to purchase which had previously been entered into but not yet consummated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On Monday last I offered a resolution to investigate certain conditions which were alleged to be prevalent in the Army, both at home and abroad. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules, where it is at present.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LARSEN. I object to the remarks of the gentleman because they are not directed to the bill under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing himself to the amendment or the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection to that.

Mr. LARSEN. Does the gentleman mean to postpone it altogether?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Let us get along as we are doing. We can handle it a heap better the other way. We have had large experience with these matters, and no time will be gained by interposing objections in the way suggested by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I have seen this time wasted and flitted away for the past several weeks, and, realizing that an extra session of Congress is likely to be called on account of these conditions, I feel it my duty as a Member of the House not to permit any Member, when an important matter is before the House, and we are proceeding with it, to come in here and interrupt the proceedings by injecting into the discussion extraneous matters. I have very high regard for the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman let me say to him that the experience of many years here shows that is not a time-saver?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not think it either is or will be in this case.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, if we are going to have——

Mr. LARSEN. If that is the way gentlemen on the other side retaliate, of course I am not responsible for that condition; all I can do is to look after one condition, and I do not propose, as far as I am concerned, by gentlemen insisting on a quorum, to be driven from a position I feel is correct. That is all there is to it.

Mr. PADGETT. I think the gentleman will find by experience here that does not save time. Let me ask the gentleman to withdraw it. I think we will make more time in that way than otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. LARSEN. I will withdraw it for the benefit of the gentleman from New York, but I hope other gentlemen will not undertake it, because I shall object. I want to be as agreeable as I can, but, gentlemen, we have an important duty to perform in this House, and I think we ought to do it and get through with this business.

The CHAIRMAN. Both points of order are withdrawn.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman from Georgia would not have made the point of order if he knew to what subject I was going to refer. The New York Evening Telegram of yesterday published six columns of a story showing that 3,000 boys had been reported as having been killed in action, when, as a matter of fact, they had died in what the New York Telegram designates as the "vilest hole of France," on account of the conditions prevalent at this camp near Brest. The charge is not made by the Telegram alone. It is made by a high Army official who has returned to this country, and he has written this article which appears in this newspaper. It is of great interest to us from New York because it states, among other things, that "the men of the Twenty-seventh Division and a lot of other troops were put out in pup tents in the filthy, muddy fields, with the result that thousands of boys died from disease. No attempt was made to improve the condition of this terrible camp."

Further on the newspaper article continues:

No one can deny these facts no more than they can deny that up to August 1, 1918, 200 American boys had died there from pneumonia and disease, while from August 1 to November 30, 3,000 were buried under the filthy soil of Brest. Toward the end they were carried out by the truck loads and buried. These 3,000 young men had left their homes in the United States three weeks before declared to be physically perfect. The War Department has the names of these men who died in this way, yet in many instances they have been listed as having died in action.

The reason I am calling particular attention to this fact is that apparently the casualty list—according to the charge made by this high Army officer—has been falsified and the parents and relatives of these 3,000 boys have been told that they died in action, when as a matter of fact they died at the camp in Brest from the filthy conditions existing at that place. They were sleeping on the ground in water when they passed away from pneumonia, according to this officer. Now, if that charge is true, and this high Army officer makes this charge and further says the War Department records show that the charge is true, then it is about time that the Congress of the United States woke up to its duty, stopped talking, and got all the facts. In order to ascertain if that officer is here in Washington at the present time I telegraphed to the Telegram this morning and received the following answer:

NEW YORK, February 7, 1919.

Representative ISAAC SIEGEL,
Washington, D. C.:

Evening Telegram pledged not to give identity of officer mentioned in Brest camp story. Can say that he now is in Washington and assures us that reports covering all matter given by him are on file with War Department, or should be there.

NEW YORK EVENING TELEGRAM.

As I have already said, this story covers six columns. The Telegram is going to run six or seven additional columns to-night and again to-morrow. It has an editorial here saying the conditions are most startling. It tells how bad the buildings were, how bad the hospitals were, and the men would not go to the hospitals. It tells of an epidemic of typhoid fever there. It tells you how the men who left America physically well passed away within three weeks on the other side on account of these conditions without having an opportunity to fight when they went over there prepared to give up their lives for their country. They went there to offer their lives on the battle fields, but not to die, as this articles puts it, "like rats in a hole, in a camp near Brest."

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Did not the gentleman from New York recently make a trip to Europe?

Mr. SIEGEL. I did during July and August.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Did the gentleman find those conditions obtaining at that time?

Mr. SIEGEL. At that time there were certain complaints which——

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am not talking about complaints; I am talking about what the gentleman from New York found when he was over there.

Mr. SIEGEL. I did not go to Brest.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Well, anywhere else did the gentleman find such conditions?

Mr. SIEGEL. Other places I found certain conditions that reflected both credit and some discredit.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But did the gentleman from New York visit any of the hospitals?

Mr. SIEGEL. I did.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Did he find these conditions in those hospitals?

Mr. SIEGEL. Not at these hospitals; but the charge is made that these men had to sleep in the water.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am not asking about what they charged, but I am talking about what the gentleman from New York saw when he was in France. Did he see any of these conditions?

Mr. SIEGEL. I was not at Brest.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Were you anywhere else?

Mr. SIEGEL. At certain other places conditions were not perfect.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Did the gentleman from New York, when he returned to this country, call attention of the War Department to any objectionable conditions that he did find in France?

Mr. SIEGEL. I called attention to them over there, and when I called attention to them they rectified them.

Mr. HICKS. I wish to say to the gentleman that there were two soldiers at my house last night, both having come back from the other side, and both having been in the camp at Brest, and they both reported the conditions the same as they have been reported to be at Brest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I object.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting this article, so that the House may see what this Army officer says are the conditions over there. He is supposed to be a general——

Mr. FOSTER. If it is an anonymous communication——

Mr. SIEGEL. He is not anonymous at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Tell us who he is.

Mr. SIEGEL. The New York Telegram says in this telegram that he is willing to testify before the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. Give us his name.

Mr. SIEGEL. Let us produce him.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is he?

Mr. SIEGEL. He is in Washington now.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, of course the paper which contains the article has a great deal wider circulation than the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and it will fill up the RECORD with its six columns of matter. I do not know that that would be expedient. The gentleman has directed attention to it, but if he thinks that the information——

Mr. SIEGEL. The article gives names of men and officers. I want to get at the truth, and we are sure to get it some day, if not now. I can not discuss the whole matter inside of 10 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

This paragraph carries $35,000,000. Nevertheless, the matter which has been recently discussed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] is really far more important than this $35,000,000. Millions count for little when we are considering the unnecessary sacrifice of the lives of our soldiers. Seeing, however, that there is objection to further discussion with reference to whether our soldiers shall be protected and their lives saved, I want to make some remarks on this particular paragraph.

I am pleased to observe that the Naval Committee was able to segregate $10,000 out of this $35,000,000. I have no doubt if they had been able to extract from the naval officials what they were going to do with this $35,000,000 they would have divided this appropriation up. And yet I am somewhat at a loss to understand why out of $35,000,000 neither the Naval Committee nor the officials of the Navy Department who were before them were able to get nothing itemized but a paltry $10,000. We have suffered for a long time as a consequence of lump-sum appropriations. I never knew yet where we appropriated one-half the amount carried by this paragraph where there was not a large part of the appropriation expended for purposes that Congress would never have thought of sanctioning for a moment.

In the previous paragraph there is $37,500,000 appropriated, of which the Naval Committee were able to segregate $2,500,000. Now, that paragraph that carries the $37,500,000 provides in express terms for the use of the money in the same way that this $35,000,000 is to be used.

Of course, I understand one is one department and one is another, and the business of one department or one division or bureau is different from that of the other. But nevertheless the money could be used for the same purposes and thereby the expenses of one bureau overlap those of the other. Whenever we have lump-sum appropriations of the amount of $35,000,000 or $37,000,000, there will always be waste. Money will be spent unnecessarily. I hope that the day will come when all of this will be stopped and we will get down to some basis whereby we can tell what this money is going for. Now, no one can tell by reason of the statements in this paragraph how this money is going to be paid out. No one can tell within a million or two million dollars how much will be applied to certain purposes. Of course, the greater portion of the money provided in this paragraph will probably be applied toward new boilers and new machinery. But they can spend it in almost any way they want to, the same as under the previous paragraph they could spend a million dollars for furniture if they desire to do so. We ought to reach a period when, if the officials that come before the Naval Committee, the representatives of the Navy, are not able to tell what they want of this money, the appropriation ought to be refused. This is the course we should pursue in the future.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. On the 28th of January I inserted in the RECORD, on page 2248, a copy of an order which purported to have been issued by Maj. Gen. Buck, as the commanding general at Camp MacArthur, which in substance forbids commissioned officers to remain present at any social affair of any nature at which there are enlisted men or discharged soldiers wearing the uniform of enlisted men. The order is as follows:

OFFICERS ADVISED SOCIALLY—CAN'T MINGLE WITH ENLISTED MEN—BY COMMAND OF GEN. BUCK ORDER POSTED REGARDING ENTERTAINMENTS.

The following order has been posted at Camp MacArthur:

Headquarters, Camp MacArthur, Waco, Tex., January 6, 1919, General Orders, No. 1.

1. The attention of officers of this command is called to the impropriety of attending social affairs at which enlisted men, or persons in the uniform of enlisted men, are present.

Hereafter any officer of this command who finds enlisted men present with proper authority, i. e., duly invited or permitted to pay their way in, at any social affair at which the officer is a guest, such officer will at once depart from such social affair, and if he finds persons in the uniform of enlisted men permitted to be present he will take the same action.

When an officer finds enlisted men present at any social affair without proper authority, he will take such steps as the occasion may warrant to cause them to leave, and will report any violation of regulations which may occur.

By command of Maj. Gen. Buck.

W. H. WOOLWORTH,
Major, Infantry, United States Army, Acting Executive Officer.

Official:

E. E. LAMBERT,
Major, Adjutant General's Department, Adjutant.

I took occasion to comment on that order, and am just in receipt of a letter from the Secretary of War, Mr. Baker, dated the 6th instant, in which he makes reference to the order of Maj. Gen. Buck, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 6, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. HUDDLESTON: My attention has been called to some remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 28, based on an order issued by the commanding general at Camp MacArthur, Tex.

In order that you may be fully advised of the position of the Army with reference to orders of this kind, it is well that you should know that on January 18 the Chief of Staff directed the revocation of this order when it first came to his attention. On January 19 a telegram from the commanding general, Camp MacArthur, acknowledging receipt of instructions of January 18, stated that the order in question had been issued through error on January 6, and had been immediately revoked when it had come to his attention on January 8. I am,

Very sincerely,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Hon. GEORGE HUDDLESTON,
House of Representatives.

This letter is signed by the Secretary of War.

Now, I do not want to do Gen. Buck any injustice, and therefore I want this letter to go in the RECORD, with the order that was issued.

Now, I want to analyze the letter of Mr. Secretary Baker and his statement just for a moment. The report is that this order was issued through error and was countermanded by Gen. Buck two days later. The order itself recites that it was issued "by command of Maj. Gen. Buck." It is signed by Maj. Woolworth, the acting executive officer, and by Maj. Lambert, the adjutant of the division.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Just in a second.

Mr. MANN. Tell us just what the order is.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have read what it was. The order is the order of January 6, which forbids that commissioned officers shall remain at any social affair where an enlisted man is present, or any person in the uniform of an enlisted man is present. This letter states that Gen. Buck did not authorize this order. Yet the order on its face expressly and plainly says it was so authorized by Gen. Buck.

And now I want to ask the Secretary of War, What is he going to do about it? Here is an order issued by the camp adjutant and the chief executive officer of the division, which recites that it is issued by order of the commanding general. That recital is said by the Secretary of War to be untrue. Those officers are thereby stated by implication to have been guilty of falsification, and I want to ask what is going to be done about this?

A situation is presented that is still more serious than the one I pointed out, which I may say I did not consider of very great importance. But now we have a situation in which two important executive officers of the Army have issued an order, an unauthorized order, an improper order, an order which the authorities of the Army would have us believe is in violation of the general spirit of the Army and the attitude of the Army administration toward the enlisted man. These officers issued this order, this unauthorized order, and they recited in it—I do not like to call it a falsehood, but they state that it was done by the commanding general, when that was not a fact.

I want to know if somebody is not going to be court-martialed as the result? I make bold to say that I do not believe any such thing is going to be done. While I believe Mr. Secretary Baker has been thoroughly candid in his letter, I also believe that somebody has imposed on him, the Secretary; and this order has a history to it and circumstances surrounding it which are not explained in this letter.

I want to say one other thing: That order is of comparatively minor importance, but all of us who know the Army know how the enlisted man is treated by the officers. We know that there is an impassable social gulf between the enlisted man and the officer, and we know that this is recognized by every officer of the Army and every enlisted man. So why blink it and say that it is not there? Every soldier knows it, and everybody knows that, Mr. Baker apart, it is countenanced and recognized by the highest military authority. Everybody knows that this situation and spirit has the support of all the commissioned elements.

I want to say this, further: This matter of officers and men associating together on a basis of social equality is in itself more or less of a minor matter, but it is the symptom of a disease which is far more serious, and which reaches much deeper into our Army life than any mere question of social observances, or anything of that kind. It goes deeper than that. We find it in our Articles of War, which discriminate from beginning to end against the enlisted men and in favor of the men with commissions. We find it in the fact that punishments under these Articles of War are much more severe upon the enlisted man than upon the officers. If a man murders his neighbor, he is entitled to a trial by a jury of his peers—to a fair, open trial—but if he happens to be a private soldier and comes in two hours overdue on a leave of absence, or happens to say something a trifle impolite to a commissioned officer or fails to salute him as promptly as he would like to be saluted, he is brought to trial—before his equals? No. Before his superiors, a class not interested in his class, before a class that is interested in keeping his class in subjection.

And we find that inevitably there grow up these abuses which I have pointed out. This is evidenced in a thousand ways. An enlisted man who goes down the street knows that he must salute every commissioned officer he meets. It is not a sign of respect. If so, why should not the commissioned officer salute first, for both are but men, and the officer should respect the enlisted man just as much as the enlisted man should respect the officer? If it is merely a matter of respect, why should it be fixed by ironclad regulation that the man must first show his respect. It ought to be a matter of mutual respect. No; the salute, when not given in the line of duty, is a sign of servility, and is intended to impress on the man who is required to give it first that he is the social inferior of the other fellow and has to pay him a respect that the other man does not have to show. If the enlisted man should fail to salute him, the officer may place him under arrest and may reprimand him on the spot. If the man resents this in any way, he is lucky if he does not get sent to prison for a long sentence. Did you ever hear of a private stopping an officer and reprimanding him for failing to salute him in return? I never did; but I have frequently seen officers ignore the salute of the private. Officers pretend that they do not like the saluting system. Why do they not stop it, then? The General Staff could abolish it to-morrow if they only wanted to and would say so to the Secretary.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to commend the gentleman for getting this order of Gen. Buck out of the way, and I want to ask him if he should not go further and get the other regulation out of the way that makes a distinction between the private soldier and the officer in allowing the officer to give social attention to our nurses in uniform and forbidding the private soldier to do likewise? [Laughter.] Ought not the gentleman to go further in that respect?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like to reconstruct the spirit of our Army as a whole and make it democratic, as befits a great and a free people, and I think it is the duty of Congress to take up this subject. The first thing that should be done is to repeal and reconstruct the barbarous Articles of War under which our armies are now governed. These Articles of War not only make punishments possible which are cruel and inhumane, but they foster the vicious caste system, which is the bane of the Army. I would like our Army so constituted and dominated by a truly American spirit, which would make service in it in lowest rank compatible with the sensibilities of the finest and proudest American boy.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not wish to reply generally to the statements of the gentleman from Alabama. I know, as we all know, that there exists among many officers in the Army the spirit which he has suggested; but I am not willing to admit or to have the statement go unchallenged that this spirit is universal and that there are no exceptions, because I know that is not an accurate statement. I know by personal knowledge that during this war commissioned officers have called their enlisted men together, lecturing them upon various topics of military importance, discipline, and so forth, and have explained to the men that the requirement that they salute was not intended and should not be considered by them as any manifestation of social inferiority, or as any acknowledgment of humility; that it was not intended for that purpose, the officer adding, "I know that is not the fact. I know I am no better than you are socially, and I do not claim to be. I do not want you to think I am; but this is a military regulation, intended for an entirely different purpose."

Now, there is one exception, at any rate, to the gentleman's general statement. The newspapers a year or more ago carried this story of a certain camp: Two commissioned officers of the National Guard were picked up by a lady in an automobile, driving either toward the camp or from the camp. Then she overtook two enlisted men and told the chauffeur to stop and she would pick them up. These young officers told her if she did that they would have to get out of the automobile; that they could not ride with enlisted men. Of course, recognizing their rights in the premises, she stopped and permitted them to exercise those rights, and let the officers get out and took the privates in. [Applause.] That story was carried in the papers, and I think very likely it was true. Thereupon the commanding officer of another camp—Camp Pike, in Arkansas—assembled his commissioned officers, took that story for his text, and told them that such conduct on the part of officers was thoroughly unjustifiable and unjustified, that it was the manifestation of a spirit that should not exist in the American Army, and that he hoped no officer in his command would ever be guilty of such conduct. [Applause.] He said: "Frequently as I drive along from the camp or to the camp I come across enlisted men walking, stop my automobile, and take them in with me." That was a general officer, lecturing the commissioned officers of his division.

Subsequently I myself, time and again, saw commissioned officers riding in their automobiles stop on the road, pick up privates and ride with them, boys of their acquaintance, call them Jim and Tom, and the enlisted men called the commissioned officer by his first name. I saw that time and again myself. I saw the commissioned officers and the privates eat at the same table, not only in private residences but at hotels, on terms at that time of absolute social equality. So I think whatever may be the general spirit, whatever may be the spirit of the Regular Army officer, it should not be stated that that spirit is universal in the great Army which we have organized and with which we won the war.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is, the commanding general was going around——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Gentlemen of the House, in the Army as everywhere else you see some gentlemen and you see some snobs. The gentleman from Alabama is talking about the snobs and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] is talking about gentlemen. They are both right. It is true in one part of the Army the boys are trained toward snobbery, but there are gentlemen among them, and many of them. I have here something that I think will interest the House a little. The other day I discovered that the officers up in the Great Lakes Training Station were very much averse to allowing privates who wanted to be discharged to receive assistance from any neighbor who happened to be in Congress. Anybody else could furnish any evidence he has. I spoke of this in the House on the 29th, and I am glad to see that the gentleman from Alabama got a response. If gentlemen will go at these things in a quiet kind of way, like the gentleman from Alabama and I do, they will often get results. [Laughter.] I have an order which followed of a couple of days after in the House which the Bureau of Navigation sent me. It does not entirely cover the situation, but it helps. It is headed "Navigation," and is dated "31 January, 1919":

NAVIGATION,
31 January, 1919.

Commandants of all naval districts:

Reservists and men of Regular Navy who enlisted for duration of war who are undergoing training at training stations, training camps, and trade schools will be released on their own applications for such release. Commandants will issue necessary instructions. General instructions of Bureau of Navigation Circular Letters 225–18 and 3–19 remain in effect. Acknowledge. 10031.

BUNAV.

I suppose that is the Bureau of Navigation. As I understand this order, any boy enlisted for the war in the Navy who is in a training station, training camp, or trade school can be released on his own application. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] and I each had a telephone from the bureau, in which we were informed that it also included all boys in the regular Navy who enlisted; but I find that they left out a comma. If they would say "who enlisted for duration of war," and use a comma, and then go on, I think it would mean that. I suppose that there was a little confusion raised over the fact that the comma is not there. I want to say that I think that is a very great improvement in the situation. The boys in these places can now get out. I think that the rules we run up against were made by men dressed in a little brief authority, who did not understand the situation; but when men of more breadth of character got the facts the order came. I think it possible to argue with them and present things in a simple way and be fairly treated. If the taxpayers pay their salaries, Representatives of taxpayers ought to be able to get a hearing for constituents. It is time that the Congress of the United States should have some respect for itself.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to say to the gentleman that day before yesterday I received a letter from Admiral Blue, the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, giving at length the orders that were made, and I put them in the RECORD.

Mr. LITTLE. I had a little correspondence with Admiral Blue myself two or three weeks ago. I did not know just what his position was. I thought he was a doctor. I did not know him, but he wrote me pretty firmly, and I wrote him pretty firmly myself, and explained that he could not expect to enforce rules like that and have very much affection for the United States Navy among the people. I suggested to him to quit monkeying with the buzz saw if he wanted the Navy to have the support of the Nation, and I am glad to hear that he adopted my suggestion. Admiral Blue seems to be a nice man when he gets his second wind.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that the Washington street cars are a great leveler of rank?

Mr. LITTLE. I find it so; I find in them I am as good as anybody.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Is not there a string to all of these orders—they provide that if they can be spared by the commanding officer, and is not that the way they get out of a lot of things?

Mr. LITTLE. I am glad the gentleman mentioned that there is no string to the order that was issued for these stations. I wrote the commanding officer about a man, and inquired why he was not discharged, and he wrote to me a letter, which I got to-day, that the thing has been indorsed and sent up to a higher man, and suggested that I write the higher man, that it would do some good. That is fine. Congressmen like ROYAL JOHNSON, who entered the Army as a private, may soon attain such a social position they can attend a party and see lieutenants dancing. If that is the rule, I think when he gets my letter it may help him some. I do not believe there is any string intended, but little fellows who want to be clever and bull-headed probably make some trouble for themselves.

Mr. BURNETT. That is the trouble you will run up against.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. LARSEN. I object.

Mr. MANN. I am glad to know that the gentleman is still here. Twenty minutes of time have gone by in discussion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Engineering Experiment Station, United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.: For original investigation and extended experimentation of naval appliances, testing implements and apparatus; purchase and installation of such machines and auxiliaries considered applicable for test and use in the naval service, and for maintenance and equipment of buildings and grounds, $160,000.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What was the question that the gentleman from Illinois desired to ask me?

Mr. MANN. It does not relate to this bill.

Mr. LITTLE. That does not bother me as much as the gentleman might think.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman asked whether there were strings tied to these orders, and I wondered. I had a case the other day where I was informed by an officer in charge at the department that a certain officer would be discharged upon his application. The officer made the application to his commanding officer and was told to go to—that they would not let him out, and in effect the commanding officer said that the order of the officer in Washington did not cut any ice. The commanding officer said they needed him there, so they have had him transferred to some other place, and he is still in the service, notwithstanding the officer here in charge of the department ordered that he be released.

Mr. LITTLE. The only suggestion I can make is that that fellow is probably subject to a court-martial, and the gentleman ought to go at him.

Mr. MANN. I do not think he is.

Mr. LITTLE. If his superior ordered him to discharge the man he is.

Mr. MANN. I do not say that he ordered him, but he wrote me that he would be discharged. I did not notify the other officer of that fact, but the other day my friend came through Washington and said that his commanding officer had refused to discharge him, stating that he was needed in the service, and my friend finally stated further that his commanding officer then told him that he did not need him there, and he had been transferred to another place.

Mr. BURNETT. Was that in the Army or the Navy?

Mr. MANN. I will say now that that was in the Army.

Mr. LITTLE. I think probably that fellow disobeyed an order, and the gentleman should investigate it. I found a colored captain sent to our town by The Adjutant General to take a command. He found some other fellow there and a division of opinion arose about it. The colored officer was put under arrest and court-martialed, but when I called the attention of the department to what seemed to me to be the regulations—and we had quite a disturbance about it for two weeks—when I presented to the War Department such knowledge as I had of the regulations, and the evidence went before the court-martial, they acquitted the colored man and ordered, I hear, a reprimand of the man who had him subjected to court-martial. If you find these things out and present the facts and go and tell the man who told you what happened, and ask whether he issued an order or is simply wasting time writing letters giving advice, I think you will get somewhere. If the order in this case was issued, then that man ought to be court-martialed. This House ought to have enough respect for itself and for its constituents to see that laws are enforced and justice done.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissary department: For chief clerk and purchasing agent, chief cook and cooks, steward and assistant stewards, stenographers, typists, head waiters, and assistant head waiters, head pantrymen, bakers, butchers, and necessary pantrymen, butcher's helpers, baker's helpers, waiters, coffeemen, dish pantrymen, utility men, linemen, scullions, and other unskilled and unclassified occupations, wages to be determined by the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, and in no case to exceed $75 per month, $185,545.45.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I think there must be some mistake in the language that is incorporated in this paragraph of the bill. I hardly think it is the purpose of the committee to provide that no person shall receive more than $75 a month, as is provided in the last line of the paragraph. It limits everyone designated in the paragraph to that sum, while the chief clerk at the present time is receiving $1,800 a year.

Mr. PADGETT. It is not intended for that.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is obvious that it was not so intended. May I inquire what was the purpose of the committee in eliminating the salaries to be paid to the respective employees designated here?

Mr. PADGETT. I will be very glad to explain that to the House. We were confronted to this condition, and I cite the actual occurrences: In the preparation of the last naval appropriation bill, and before that we had statutory employees on a per annum basis, whose compensation was fixed at so much per annum. We had men on a per diem basis who did the same work alongside of these statutory men, and their compensation was fixed by the wage board. While the House committee was making up the bill in the last session that was ultimately signed on the 1st day of July, the wage board had increased the compensation of the per diem men to a higher compensation than the statutory men.

They came before the Congress and said that their salaries should be increased. The committee reported an increase, putting them upon an equality with the compensation of the per diem men working alongside whose compensation was fixed by the Wage Board. The House accepted it and passed it. The bill went to the Senate, but while the bill was pending in the Senate the Wage Board met again and increased the compensation of the per diem men and immediately the statutory men went before the Senate committee and said that they must have another increase, because the Wage Board had increased the compensation of the per diem men and they must be made on an equality, and the Senate Committee reported it, the Senate passed it, and the House agreed to it in conference here, and there were two raises made under the seesaw proposition. When the estimates came down in December—now that was the bill which was signed July 1—we found that the Wage Board had met again and increased the per diem men, and the recommendation came in for an increase of the statutory men. We concluded that under this condition the proper thing to do and the wise thing to do was to put them all upon the per diem and whenever the time of reduction comes they will all go. If you have a reduction take place under the per diem, you know the difficulty of getting a reduction on the statutory when they are once fixed by statute.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it planned to put the chief clerk and purchasing agent, who is now receiving $1,800 statutory salary, and the steward, who is receiving $1,800, on a per diem basis?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; all of those who are mentioned in here go into that lump sum of per diem, like it was many years ago. When I first went on the committee they were put on a per diem basis. The representatives of the men came before the committee and urged that they be put upon a statutory basis, insisting that it would be a few dollars cheaper than the per diem. Congress adopted that and put them on the statutory basis. Now comes this seesaw that has worked them up, and we have put them back like it was upon the per diem basis, and hope that it will be a condition where, whenever the reduction comes, it can be taken care of better dealing with the whole than you can where you have the statutory man with the statutory compensation to hold up the per diem men, as the per diem men under the wage board have been pushed up to the statutory men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask to be recognized for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman have any objection to having a limitation that no employee hereunder shall receive a salary in excess of $2,000?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think any of them receive that much.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the statutory roll the maximum of two of these places is $1,800, and yet with no limitation they might go up much higher than $2,000.

Mr. PADGETT. If it is limited to this paragraph, I have no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. What disposition does the gentleman wish to make about the obvious error carried in the paragraph where it says that no one is to receive more than $75 per month?

Mr. PADGETT. In no case to exceed $75 per month "in cases of unskilled and unclassified employees."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order and offer the following amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Before offering that let me offer mine.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment for the time being.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, on page 41, line 2, after the word "month" insert "in cases of unskilled and unclassified employees."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 41, line 2, after the word "month" insert "in cases of unskilled and unclassified employees."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 41, line 2, after the figures "$185,545.45," insert: "Provided, That no employee hereunder shall receive a salary in excess of $2,000."

Mr. PADGETT. Let me ask the gentleman to change the wording a little, to "That no person paid under the provisions of this paragraph."

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, well; I am perfectly willing to accept the suggestion. But "hereunder" would refer to those in the paragraph. It is the language customary in appropriation bills; but I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as changed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 41, line 2, after "$185,545.45," insert:

"Provided, That no employee paid under the provisions of this paragraph shall receive a salary in excess of $2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the employment of such additional temporary force of employees in the various departments of the Naval Academy as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy may be necessary to the transaction of official business on account of the existing emergency, $150,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the existing emergency?

Mr. PADGETT. The emergency is simply this: That we have recently increased the number of midshipmen to five for each district, and the classes are very much enlarged. Then we made an appropriation extending Bancroft Hall, at a cost of about $3,000,000. And the number of men there is increasing each year. They have not been able to get it down to a basis as to how many there should be, and this sum is to take care of that enlarged development and the number of men at the academy.

Mr. MANN. The words "existing emergency" have no reference to the war?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; it is on account of conditions at the academy.

Mr. MANN. That language has been carried in many cases as referring to the war, and probably was thought to relate to the war when it went into this paragraph a year ago. This has nothing to do with the professors, I take it, or anything of that kind—the teaching force?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. This is intended to take care of a large number of employees in the various departments there at work on account of the enlarged operations of the school.

Mr. MANN. How does it require an additional sum of $150,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Seventy-five thousand dollars of it is on account of the increase in the wages—on account of the cost of labor.

Mr. MANN. I take it that it is not.

Mr. PADGETT. That is what they stated to us.

Mr. MANN. This is for the employment of an additional force of employees necessary in the transaction of official business. What tremendous official business does the school have to transact?

Mr. PADGETT. On that very question and at that very place there the commander, in answer to a question that I asked him, said that they would have to shut up shop if they cut it out, as at least $75,000 of it would be required to meet the new wage schedule.

Mr. MANN. This has nothing to do with the wage scale. Of course, I do not know what they use the money for. That is one of the peculiarities of the Navy and the naval bill. No one ever knows what the money appropriated is used for.

Mr. PADGETT. It says for the employment of such additional temporary force of employees in the various departments of the Naval Academy. It takes up the various departments, and it refers to these additional employees. The wage scale is very much higher than it was.

Mr. MANN. This is for the employment of an additional temporary force of employees. It has nothing to do with the regular force of employees, and they are only employees which the Secretary of the Navy considers may be necessary to the transaction of official business. What does that mean?

Mr. PADGETT. It means employees connected with the academy and with the departments down there in any form of work. It says, and the language is plain, it seems to me——

Mr. MANN. Does it mean an additional plumber?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. It is a queer use of language.

Mr. PADGETT. They use the word "employees." They would be employees. And it would have to be, not for the private employment of some man connected there——

Mr. MANN. We do not make any appropriations for the private employment or some man privately employed there. What is the use of saying that?

Mr. PADGETT. That is the reason they use the word "official," so that it would be for the official business of the academy.

Mr. MANN. That is silly, because you might use that in every item in the bill, then, that it is necessary, in order to keep them from throwing money to the birds, to say it shall be used for official business. The term "official business" has a meaning. It is not related to the fixing of a water pipe. I do not think the gentleman knows how this money is to be spent, and hence I do not desire to press him. No one can tell from the language of the bill what it will be spent for, but it will not be spent according to the meaning which anybody would read into the language of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, Naval Academy, exclusive of public works, $1,566,385.05.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. What is the meaning of that phrase "exclusive of public works"?

Mr. PADGETT. Under Yards and Docks there are public works. Whatever they do, they can not get anything out of that. It has to be expressly provided for them under Yards and Docks; and if nothing is provided under public works of Yards and Docks no part of this money could be used for work of that kind.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws the pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of officers prescribed by law, on the retired list: For 2 major generals, 3 brigadier generals, 5 colonels, 3 lieutenant colonels, 40 majors, 4 captains, 1 first lieutenant, 2 second lieutenants, and for officers who may be placed thereon during the year, including such increased pay as is now or may hereafter be provided for retired officers regularly assigned to active duty, $277,756.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do this so as to obtain information as to whether the additional officers provided for in this paragraph are those who are retired by reason of law?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. That is not a fixed number. It varies. If a man goes on the retired list in pursuance of law he is taken care of under this appropriation. If he dies he is dropped out of a number, and if another man comes in he is added to it. It changes from time to time to meet the number actually on the list at the time the appropriation was made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any special significance in the large increase of the majors on the retired list from 11 last year to 40, as carried in this bill?

Mr. PADGETT. No. I do not know what produced the number.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of enlisted men, active and reserve list: Pay and allowances of noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates, as prescribed by law, and for the expenses of clerks of the United Sttaes Marine Corps traveling under orders, and including additional compensation for enlisted men of the Marine Corps regularly detailed as gun captains, gun pointers, mess sergeants, cooks, messmen, signalmen, or holding good-conduct medals, pins, or bars, including interest on deposits by enlisted men, post-exchange debts of deserters, under such rules as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, and the authorized travel allowance of discharged enlisted men and for prizes for excellence in gunnery exercise and target practice and for pay of enlisted men designated as Navy mail clerks and assistant Navy mail clerks, both afloat and ashore, $24,428,537.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire whether this appropriation should not be reduced, in view of the action taken by the committee last night in adhering to the present enlisted force as the permanent force of the Marine Corps?

Mr. PADGETT. We provided for the year for 50,000, and that remained in. It was only the increase of the permanent thing that was stricken out.

Mr. BUTLER. You will not save any money this year.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Marine Corps: For freight, expressage, tolls, cartage, advertising, washing of bed sacks, mattress covers, pillowcases, towels, and sheets, funeral expenses of officers and enlisted men, and retired officers on active duty during the war, and retired enlisted men of the Marine Corps, including the transportation of bodies and their arms and wearing apparel from the place of demise to the homes of the deceased in the United States; stationery and other paper, printing and binding; telegraphing, rent of telephones; purchase, repair, and exchange of typewriters; apprehension of stragglers and deserters; per diem of enlisted men employed on constant labor for periods of not less than 10 days; employment of civilian labor; purchase, repair, and installation and maintenance of gas, electric, sewer, and water pipes and fixtures; office and barracks furniture, vacuum cleaners, camp and garrison equipage and implements; mess utensils for enlisted men; packing boxes, wrapping paper, oilcloth, crash, rope, twine, quarantine fees, camphor and carbolized paper, carpenters' tools, tools for police purposes, safes, purchase, hire, repair, and maintenance of such harness, wagons, motor wagons, armored automobiles, carts, drays, motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes, and other vehicles as are required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for official military and garrison purposes; purchase of public horses and mules; services of veterinary surgeons, and medicines for public animals, and the authorized number of officers' horses; purchase of mounts and horse equipment for all officers below the grade of major required to be mounted; shoeing for public animals and the authorized number of officers' horses; purchase and repair of hose, fire extinguishers, hand grenades, carts, wheelbarrows, and lawn mowers; purchase, installation, and repair of cooking and heating stoves and furnaces; purchase of towels, soap, combs, and brushes for offices; postage stamps for foreign and registered postage; books, newspapers, and periodicals; improving parade grounds; repair of pumps and wharves, water; straw for bedding, mattresses; mattress covers, pillows, sheets; furniture for Government quarters and repair of same; packing and crating officers' allowance of baggage on change of station; deodorizing, lubricants, disinfectants; for the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries; and for all emergencies and extraordinary expenses arising at home and abroad, but impossible to anticipate or classify, $4,500,000: Provided, That hereafter the funds received in payment for laundry work performed by post laundries shall be used to defray the cost of operation of said laundries, and the receipts and expenditures shall be accounted for in accordance with the methods prescribed by law, and any sums remaining after such cost of maintenance and operation have been defrayed shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation from which the cost of operation of such plants is paid.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to direct the attention of the chairman to the fact that on line 16, page 50, the word "work" is not spelled correctly in the print that I have. What is the idea?

Mr. PADGETT. In my print it is correct, "Laundry work." They left off the letter "k" in the other print. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk be authorized to make the correction.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. What is the purpose of this proviso as to funds received in payment of laundry work performed by post laundries, that they shall be used to defray the cost of the operation of said laundry? Do I understand that the posts operate laundries and make a charge to the enlisted men for the laundry work done?

Mr. PADGETT. That is what it is for. A nominal charge is made. It is far cheaper than they can get it done outside for. It is a very nominal cost. Without the posts operating them they have to go out into the community and have it done there. The Government does not do their laundry for them. This is to allow them to do it at a nominal cost, and if there should be a profit it would be turned into the Treasury to the credit of the fund.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the Government do the laundry work for the men aboard battleships?

Mr. PADGETT. It does not.

Mr. WALSH. They have to pay that?

Mr. PADGETT. They pay a nominal charge. It is very little, but they pay it.

Mr. WALSH. I remember hearing some of the officers of the Marine Corps, when by reason of the kindness of the gentleman I was permitted to visit Quantico last summer, complaining very bitterly at the charge made at the laundry for the white duck uniform some of them had to wear. I do not know whether the marines themselves wore them or not.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know as to the officers, but we inquired of the men on the ships. They get their laundry at a very cheap rate on board ship, and we understand that at posts where they have laundries they charge a very nominal rate.

Mr. WALSH. It would appear from this proviso that these laundries are being operated upon a profit basis, because it takes care of the excess of receipts over expenditures.

Mr. PADGETT. Of course, it is impossible to operate a laundry at the exact cost. That is only to take care of whatever small profit there may be—just to designate where it shall go. It is not intended that the laundries shall make any profit.

Mr. WALSH. No; but if they make a profit for two or three months and turn it into the Treasury, ought they not to revise their schedule of charges, so that in future operations the men may get the benefit, rather than keep covering a profit into the Treasury?

Mr. PADGETT. That is what is intended to be done—not to operate at a profit, but where there is a profit to know how to dispose of it. It is not intended to operate it as a profit-making concern.

Mr. WALSH. So that the officer in control at some place where they have made a profit and turned it into the Treasury will not be held up as a shining example of efficiency, by reason of this proviso, because he has operated the laundry at a profit?

Mr. PADGETT. No; that is not intended.

Mr. WALSH. Thereby encouraging other officers to do the same thing.

Mr. PADGETT. No; the honor will be the other way—to make it as cheap to the men as they can, and at as small a cost, and at as near as possible to the actual cost of operation.

Mr. WALSH. How much was turned into the Treasury from the laundry operations last year?

Mr. PADGETT. There was not anything. There has been no authority for it heretofore. You will notice that the language above there includes "the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries." That is new language that is put in there.

Mr. WALSH. I did not know but this had been done heretofore.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that at some of the posts they have been operating on a very small scale on a kind of mutual basis.

Mr. WALSH. A cooperative basis?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; a cooperative basis, or something of that kind. This is to give it a standing and status, so that the men can get their laundry work done under the very best conditions at the cheapest rate.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I renew the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. HICKS. I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin renews the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. While we are on this subject of laundries, if I may be permitted—and I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for allowing me to proceed—it may be of interest to the members of the committee for me to state, briefly, the attitude of the Army in this matter, because there is considerable agitation at the present time for free laundry work in the Army. We have at some of our large cantonments, I think, 10 or possibly 12 laundry establishments owned and operated by the Government. In these plants the men can have their laundry work done and are permitted to send an unlimited number of pieces, for which service they are charged only $1 a month. Where these Army laundries are not maintained the Government makes private contracts, when it is able to do so, and then the men individually send their clothes to the laundries in accordance with the contract. In other places the Army has nothing to do with the laundry at all, and the men make their own arrangements outside of the camp. In many places this latter method has proved very unsatisfactory. The agitation going on for Government laundries is based on the fact that when men are compelled to do their own laundry work, or where they are compelled to pay for having it done at private laundries at a piece cost, the tendency is either for the men to send too few clothes to the laundry, thereby promoting a lack of cleanliness, or else, when they do their own laundry work, they do it in such a bad manner that their clothes are badly shrunk or are burned by being dried before an improvised fire; and the Army records show that we have lost thousands of dollars' worth of valuable underwear and clothing belonging to soldiers because of the insufficient laundry facilities, causing waste by shrinkage or burning. My own feeling in regard to this laundry question is that, as we supply the men with medical treatment, as we give them recreation, as we supply hospital treatment, as we try to encourage them in every way to develop their bodies and to keep their bodies clean, we should also see that their clothes are laundered without cost. It is all a part of hygienics, and I believe that clean clothing is just as essential to the welfare of the men as clean thoughts and clean living. I hope the time will come when the United States Navy will adopt the same policy toward the sailors as I think the United States Army is going to adopt toward the soldiers and supply to all men laundry service free of cost.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee at what period of time it is proposed to have the accounting to turn the surplus money back into the Treasury?

Mr. PADGETT. What surplus?

Mr. STAFFORD. You make a provision that any sums remaining after such cost of maintenance and operation have been defrayed shall be deposited in the Treasury. When will the surplus be turned back?

Mr. PADGETT. I imagine it will be current, at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no period stated here. Does not the gentleman think it would be advisable to insert after the word "remaining," in line 20, "at the end of the fiscal year"?

Mr. PADGETT. I have no objection; that is what it means. This is for the fiscal year and they must wind up the business at the end of the year. They could not carry it over into another year because the fund is only available for that year. I have no objection to the gentleman inserting the language, but that is what it means, anyway.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order and offer the following amendment, to insert after the word "remaining," in line 20, the words "at the end of the fiscal year."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 50, line 20, after the word "remaining" insert "at the end of the fiscal year."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Total Marine Corps, exclusive of public works, $78,561,358.28.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like the indulgence of the House just a moment. Earlier in the afternoon gentlemen on both sides of the House inquired about "the increase of the Navy," and at that time it appeared that we would not be able to reach it or take it up. I told them that we would not take up the increase of the Navy this afternoon, that it would go over. I understand from the Speaker that to-morrow he will recognize the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] to call up the conference report on the revenue bill. How long that will take I do not know. I want to ask the gentleman on the other side, Mr. BUTLER, if he would object or be willing for us to go ahead and read the balance of pages 51 and 52, which relate only to the increase of limit of cost of ships of the 1916 program, and then the committee rise when we reach the bottom of page 52? That would take us up to the new program. I am going to leave it to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. That is very generous of the gentleman. I do not like to assume the responsibility of prolonging the consideration of the bill unduly. Suppose we say this, if it is agreeable to the gentleman, that if they finish the consideration of the conference report before a certain hour to-morrow we will resume the consideration of this bill.

Mr. PADGETT. I am talking of what we will do now.

Mr. BUTLER. I mean to say that if we finish the discussion on the conference report of the revenue bill we will take up this. I do not know how much time will be consumed in the discussion of that conference report, but I think perhaps all the afternoon.

Mr. PADGETT. I think it will take all day to-morrow. That is my judgment about it, and this will very likely have to go over until Monday.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it the purpose of the chairman not to consider what is known as the presidential program or the new program until Monday; that is, that it will not be considered to-morrow or Saturday?

Mr. PADGETT. I could not say. Everybody will be here to-morrow on the other bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think the gentleman from Tennessee is absolutely right that the conference report on the revenue bill will take all day to-morrow.

Mr. PADGETT. I think it will, so that this will go over until Monday. I have no authority to say that if anything should happen that the conference report would be agreed to early we would not take this up, because we might have half of the afternoon or abundance of time to take it up. But I wanted to know if we could not dispose now of pages 51 and 52 and then rise. That will leave us up to the new program.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. On page 52 it speaks of the limit of cost of the vessels.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman's proposition was to discuss page 52. Is it not a fact that on line 9, for example, there is really nothing under way, for none of these ships are built, or any part of them, and with line 11 we find $160,000,000 worth of ships, on which we have not, as I figure it, laid a stick. Does the gentleman intend to take that up?

Mr. PADGETT. The contracts have been awarded for four of them, and the other two have been designated to be built at the Philadelphia yards, and they are proceeding to build them, but they realize that at the present cost of labor and material the limit of cost will not complete them.

Mr. LITTLE. The mere fact that they have made a contract probably does not fix it so that they can not set it aside.

Mr. PADGETT. All of them are on a cost-plus basis. They could not get any contract for a lump sum. Nobody in the country would undertake it.

Mr. LITTLE. There are eight ships here, and he only mentions four that there are contracts for. Would not any above that be additions, like those on the next page?

Mr. PADGETT. This is simply to fix the cost under which they may proceed with the construction. It does not involve any additional appropriation.

Mr. LITTLE. If we do not appropriate it, they could not proceed with a lot of new ships. If they build, the taxpayers must pay.

Mr. PADGETT. It does not involve the appropriation of any additional money. It is only authorization.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that he have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us see if we can not arrive at some agreement. I do not want to deny the request made by the gentleman from Tennessee, but after talking with some of my colleagues here I find they desire very much to consider the present program along with the new one, and I believe that if we consider the two of them together we will expedite the business and finish the two of them in good time. Of course, the gentleman has it within his power to move to-morrow afternoon to go into the committee and consider this bill if the opportunity affords itself, and I would not ask him to agree not to do it.

Mr. PADGETT. I could not say when we would take it up, but it looks as though we would not take it up before Monday. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15539, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman whether he expects to go on with this bill to-morrow?

Mr. PADGETT. No; the Speaker expects to recognize Mr. KITCHIN to call up the conference report on the revenue bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That was my understanding. If the revenue bill takes all day to-morrow this bill will go over until Monday?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. If for any reason the revenue bill should be concluded in time, we might move to-morrow afternoon to consider this bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I ask the gentleman if he makes this request at the suggestion of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. PADGETT. Not to-day. The gentleman has asked me each day to make this request.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] has been at home all day, I presume, preparing for the consideration of the revenue bill to-morrow.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It only occurs to me, unless the gentleman from North Carolina has some very good reason for beginning at 11 o'clock to-morrow, that it would not be advisable to do so, because there are a number of gentlemen who would like even to have that extra hour on Saturday morning to look over this bill.

Mr. PADGETT. I just assumed the gentleman wanted as much time as possible for his discussion, and if it would take all day it would give an additional hour for such discussion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] objects.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 8, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriations for national archives building, Washington, D. C. (H. Doc. No. 1772); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.
